that if poverty blunders, blunders have produced most of our poverty.

T. A. S. A.

GEORGIA'S CAPITOL AND SCHOOL OF TECHNOLOGY.

Poverty is not the worst evil to a State. The blunders by which poverty is made perpetual are more to be dreaded. To the poor community such blunders are always an imminent temptation. They have the advantage of habit, of education, of prejudice and passion, sometimes of jealousy and envy, always of that fear of change and dread of untried methods which weakness inspires. Georgia is poor, that is her misfortune. She is likely to remain so if present counsels prevail, that is her fault. She has all the material in her own bosom out of which to build her capitol; it will cost $150,000 more to build it of her own material than of imported material. It will cost $1,500,000 to build it of her own material, but when it is done the State will have the capitol and the $1,500,000; but if built of foreign material at a cost of $1,000,000, when finished the State will have the $1,000,000, and to save $500,000 the State has lost $1,000,000. Georgia is too poor to build her capitol out of foreign material. Yet she is likely to commit that blunder because she is poor. A little bit of rhetoric and worse logic and our poverty will be fastened upon us to the tune of a $1,000,000 in one item. "Oh, it will help a few people engaged in one or two industries to pay out an additional $150,000 to work up Georgia material." Yes; but would not the "few people" have to spend the $150,000 and the $1,000,000 besides right here in Georgia for corn, wheat, oats, wood, cotton and woolen goods, horse power, coal, iron, copper, muscle and brains, of which the State has an abundance not otherwise used? Oh, that the Georgia Legislature could see that only rich States can afford to build costly capitols of foreign materials!

Georgia is poor. She has brains, young, growing, of delicate texture and strong fibre—brains capable of mastering all known sciences, abstract and applied, of directing the affairs of a nation or superintending the most complex business—but her youth have no skill beyond the simplest forms of mechanism and the plainest kind of business transactions. Her youth, who have no money of their own and no business of their own, and never can have any, if trained for it could direct the flocks and spin the wheels, and whatever industry the money of the world could establish. Georgia is too poor not to found a school of technology in order to train young men who have no money of their own, to superintend the money of others. But that is another blunder she is likely to commit. Why? Because some poor child of Adam might, by the accidents of the situation, get a little more than a pro rata share of the money necessary to found and operate such a school. But possibly some man will say: (Some man who hears of this, not a regular subscriber.) "What has the editor of a religious paper to do with these things?" Much every way; chiefly because you say you are too poor to take a church paper—to give to the cause of missions, to educate your children, to buy good books, and you will remain so always and your children after you if such blunders are repeated.

A Letter from Washington.

Oh, I was so tired when we reached the top; for we had gone up and up and up interminable stairs that wound round and round, and on the landings that were such tempting resting places, great placards. "Do not stop on this landing!" pursued us in the face, compelling us to pursue our weary way. But we did reach the top, and stood at last not far below the tall statue of Liberty that crowns the dome of the capitol and in a few moments forgot fatigue. The beautiful city lay stretched out at our feet. Its broad avenues were crowded with vehicles and people, converted for the nonce into toys and dwarfs by our great elevation. Hundreds of church spires gleamed in the sunshine, cars glided hither and thither carrying their human burdens, flags bearing the national colors, waved on the glad breezes, from the government buildings; the Potomac rolled its sparkling waters in view as if embracing in ecstasy its bride, the honored of all nations; a little boat spread its white sail against the blue of the distant sky, and fleecy clouds drifted hither and there at the will of the winds. It was all very beautiful, and we gazed and gazed. Descending into the gallery below, we stopped to admire the grand frescoes of the concave roof, and then to question the little dealer in souvenirs, who has a stall there. He informed us that his stock of likenesses of Blaine and Logan were below par, in fact almost unsalable. He chips from the Washington Monument sell much better.

The grand monument is completed at last. On last Saturday the capstone was fitted in place, and over this city cannon thundered forth the news. The lofty shaft, five hundred and fifty-five feet high, built of white marble, and reminding one of some ancient obelisk, towers toward the sky in solitary grandeur, and may be seen for miles. It has been forty years in building, but completed at last, it stands a grand tribute to the mighty father of our country. The unveiling will take place on February 22, and it is expected that the city will be crowded with visitors.

In March Washington and New Orleans will divide the honors and both royally entertain thousands of guests. Then that poor rooster, which has been dumb for twenty-four years, will flap his great wings and raise his voice in a crow so loud and long that all the nations shall hear the glad notes that herald the dawn of a new age, I trust, a glorious day. But thoughts of a mightier man than Grover Cleveland engross the minds of thousands at this season. An old, old man, with long white beard, ruddy cheeks and sparkling eyes is coming! I see preparations for him everywhere. Show windows are draped with evergreens and gorgeous with an array of toys, Christmas cards, gold and gems.

In some beautiful paintings and statuary are exposed to view, and thousands of eyes gaze upon them to love true beauty and grace, and so carry into many lowly darkened homes pure lovely thoughts that can not but have an ennobling influence. So the grand displays serve a higher purpose than merely opening the purses of the rich. Kris Kringle's messengers are busy everywhere, and God grant that the beautiful spirit of the Christ-child may go with the gifts into thousands of homes that the happy inmates may not forget the shivering beggar outside the door.

I have been to the great centennial of Methodism. Realizing the uncertainty of human life, and feeling that, if nothing more serious occurred, I may be ill when the next centennial comes, I resolved to take advantage of the present occasion. It is forty miles from here to Baltimore, and we covered the distance in forty-five minutes.

It was worth much to me to see that great body of Christian men, grand men, and all Methodists. How glad I felt to know that I was a Methodist, and I told everybody I could that I am a Methodist preacher's daughter. It did my heart good to see, in this, to me, strange land, the familiar faces of Bishop Grubbery, Dr. C. K. Marshall and Dr. Galloway.

Of course Dr. Galloway has written the ADVOCATE all about the Conference, and you know "When eagle's fly," etc. But I must say that I shall never forget Dr. McFerrin's address to the Sabbath-school; never forget the glowing tribute the grand old man paid to his sainted mother; nor the pathos of that little psayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep," as it fell from his aged lips. How many of his hearers, whose mothers have joined him in heaven, recalled how we knelt; but a few years since it seems in our white robes at their knees, and lisped the little prayer that now, it seemed, must be an "Open, sesame!" to the gates of pearl.

The Traveler—Baltimore.

MR. EDITOR: The words "too late, lost," have a fearful significance and send a dirge-like feeling into the soul. On my arrival at Rochester, N. Y., I found I was "too late" by thirty minutes for the train for Baltimore—missed connection—and no other train for that city for twenty-four hours. I was not long getting to a hotel and registering my name. It was in the evening about half-past seven o'clock, just as the hotel was entered, a band of, perhaps, one hundred persons, male and female, passed near the curbing singing vociferously with a waving flag in front. I inquired, What is that? "The Bal-vation Army." Ah! I was informed their barracks was close by, a block or two distant. After going up three flights of stairs the crowd was reached. The usher showed me a seat near the rude platform on which were seated the Army. There was much whispering and smiling and even loud talking among them and the audience. Presently as with a dash a song was commenced in which all joined with vehemence and many with sways and movements of the body, that, with tamborines, violin and triangle made a loud and most discordant noise, very unmusical. The tamborines were struck with the hand, or elbow, or foot, so as to give effect, I suppose, as in a negro dance, and calculated to offend the ear of any culture. It reminded me so much of some scenes I have witnessed amongst the negroes in ante-bellum times—only more ridiculous. They bowed in prayer, several prayed consecutively, then remaining upon their knees they sang a funeral-like song. I did not get much of the drift of the sentiment. One was something about the "chariot rolling along, and rolling over the devil."

I sat there, not convulsed with laughter as you might suppose, but feeling some promptings to expound to these poor ignorant creatures some parable of our blessed Lord or Scripture theme. The collection was an amusing scene. Two ladies went around with their tamborines. The amount was announced as less than a dollar, mostly in coppers. The young man in his red flannel shirt, without coat, said: "That would never do, that would not buy any grease hardly." So he called for voluntary contributions and received in addition several twenty-five cent pieces. Then came the testimonies by a number, relating how they had been brought up from the pit and slums and what a present joy and blessed hope they had. Verses of song were interspersed. I learned something from the Salvation Army of zeal and earnestness. I retired, leaving the crowd to their rude worship and sought my room at the hotel and my bed of sleep which I greatly needed. After I laid myself down, a perfect stranger among strangers, I thought of fires in large cities and of the possibility of one here. I had previously looked down the halls and places for escape in case of emergency. The thought preyed upon my mind until I was seriously considering the propriety of getting up and going down and writing a number of postal cards to various ones, stating where I was, so as not to be lost sight of. But I commended myself to the gracious Keeper, felt sweetly confident and happy and fell to sleep.

A day must be put in at this place. I sallied out. Awhile on the fine streets, I found my way to Power's Art Gallery, where alone I wandered through its various apartments and wide halls, viewing a fine collection of the conception and work of some of the greatest artists in sculpture and on canvas. As I passed in silence from picture to picture, I thought, in some sense at least, I could take in scenes of real life in other countries and different ages—historical, rural, literary, domestic, etc. My admiration was drawn out more for the works of "Murillo" than any other. I needed very much the company and experience of a practiced eye and cultivated mind in these wanderings.

A gentleman, Mr. Chase, whom I had met the evening before on the car, contributed much to my enjoyment and pleasure. By invitation he took me in his buggy and drove me over a large part of the city, pointing out to me Warner Observatory and many other places of note. This is a fine city, of clean, well-paved streets, fine residences and magnificent business houses, with the Genesee river flowing through the midst of the city, affording one of the finest water powers in the world.

At half-past seven P. M., I left on the Northern Central for Baltimore, where I am now enjoying the grandest Methodist assemblage I ever saw. But I can not write of it, as the worthy editor is here taking notes, however enthused I am. I will say for hospitality and Christian courtesy Baltimore will rank with any city.

Thankful to the good Lord for his blessing and preservation while traveling 3,500 miles to this place, I will leave in a day or two for Savannah, Ga., thence to New Orleans, where I hope to meet many old friends.

DECEMBER 15, 1884.

From an Old Advocate Friend.

DEAR ADVOCATE: The hands of the old year are nearly run, and perhaps, you are making your last visit to some homes where you have so long been a "welcomed guest." If this should be the case, it will be worse for those homes than for you, because you will go to many new homes and the old will be forgotten in your weekly rounds; but those homes you have been wont to visit will sadly miss your bright face with all the sunshiny beams and cheering words of comfort. News from near and far and the sad, but soul-helpful, obituaries of the dear departed loved ones. A home without a newspaper is a home without intelligence. One of the earliest things that I remember is, sitting on my father's knee while he read the news to my mother, and often when anything he read caused him to show his emotion I felt the big drop fall on my upturned face. And I wondered what power it was in the paper that made my father cry. But in after years I did not wonder, for well I learned the lesson, and the newspaper to me has been one of the joys of my life, and your loving mission, dear ADVOCATE, was not among the least.

Soon will come the parting scene at this reckoning-up-time between many pastors and their flocks. Hands will clasp, eyes moisten, but even the "sweet old word, 'Good-bye,'" will be left unsaid because the lips refuse to utter what the heart feels most.

A good old colored aunt I once knew, who was so old she had forgotten almost everything she knew, except the "good shepherd," sang this refrain as long as she could sing at all:

"Shepherd! O Shepherd!
Where art thou?
I told you to feed my sheep,
Feed my sheep,
Shepherd! O Shepherd!
I told you to feed my sheep."

That was all she knew. Often it comes to me with weird-like power, and, I think, she has long ago found the "green pastures" and the "still waters."

Our good shepherd has fed the sheep, housed the lambs and sent far out of his way to seek the "loney and lute" that were going astray, and now he has picked up his crook and starts for other pastures. But how has the good shepherd himself fared while he watched the flocks by night and day. Has he been clothed, fed and housed? Or has the wolf been prowling around the bars with an eye on his one ewe lamb?

He has had much, I know, to discourage him. One of his appointments was broken up by the family moving away. A new church was to have been dedicated at Lower Pearl river, but he was taken out the week before, and so could not visit our neighborhood again, much to our sorrow. His church was large and the work labored, but the victor's crown will be the reward for the many battles fought.

If all the shepherds had rich pastures for their sheep they might never miss the ones that were astray. His good work will not pass away, but go on leaving trail.

God bless the good shepherd and his flock.

Yours truly,
ANDREW A. V.

Studying in Germany.

From observation I should say that the average age of Americans studying at the German universities is twenty-five. A graduate of one of our colleges or leading academies is ready to get and appreciate the best that the universities offer, as well as to observe and weigh the political and social elements in which he moves. His vacation travel is itself a delight and an education. The benefits of such study to men are so well understood that to point them out need not be tedious. But practical information as to the conditions of study, as to courses and degrees, is so vague and inexact in popular and magazine often erroneous, that some facts may be given here. The graduate of any American college may matriculate in full standing at a German university on the presentation of his diploma and a passport. These take the place of the certificate of maturity (Maturitätszeugnis) from the gymnasium or real-school, which the German candidate must submit. Men who have no college diploma may attend lectures and have access to all privileges, but they may not become candidates for a degree. There is an impression that American students must encounter special difficulties in seeking a degree, and that few succeed in gaining it. This is an error. Many students do not choose to take the required preliminary studies, lying perhaps outside of their special field, and hence do not try to get the degree. But it is a fact that fewer difficulties meet the American in this quest than the German himself. The university is the regular and essential avenue to the professions and many civil careers, and competition is very keen. But the faculty well know that the American does not seek promotion on German soil; they recognize the accomplishment of his long pilgrimage to their shores, and they are willing to encourage him, avoiding the appearance of anything like a potestante (sniff). Horace M. Kennedy, in Popular Science Monthly.

Conference Notes.

Mr. Horton: On yesterday I went forward the manuscript for the minutes of our Conference. The printer will go right to work on them. I see no reason why they should not be out almost in two weeks. Many of the subscribers have not even their postage. It is desirable that they furnish their postage to come at once at Jackson, Miss. If all our subscribers will furnish their postage, I will print them in connection with these appointments.

The money appointed by Conference to Mrs. U. Jones Thompson was entrusted to my care. Will some of our friends let me know for what purposes it is to be used.

Dr. W. C. Dunlap the writer of his recent visit to the Mississippi Conference: I had the very great pleasure of attending your Conference, of Yauco City, in the interest of our mission for the colored people. The Prime Institute, located at Augusta, Ga., I regretted your absence together with Dr. Marshall and other brethren. But my columns are well protected by the Conference. They gave me $1, and promised to their prayers. I told them I would acknowledge in the ADVOCATE.

Good Work.

Thankful to the good Lord for his blessing and preservation while traveling 3,500 miles to this place, I will leave in a day or two for Savannah, Ga., thence to New Orleans, where I hope to meet many old friends.

There is a great need about all Christians who have not suffered from the loss of their loved ones. Let us pray for them.

God bless the good shepherd and his flock.

Yours truly,
ANDREW A. V.

God bless the good shepherd and his flock.

NOTES FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Waiting, Luke xii, 36. (Mark xiii, 34.)
Waiting, (Ezek. iii, 17.) Waiting, (Cant. v, 2.)
Waiting, (Cant. xiii, 31.)

BY EVA TRAVIS.

We are waiting for the coming of the Master we hold dear.
We are waiting just to greet him and to hail his drawing near.
For our hearts are glad and ready, and our lamps are trimmed and bright.
We are waiting for the signal that will say he is in sight.
But we would not have him find us standing idle all the day.
So we learn to work while waiting, doing something by the way.
And we find that working for him is a toil so rarely sweet.
That we almost wish for tarrying in the coming of his feet.

And we know that he has hidden as loving others to his love.
And we long to fill the mansions that are waiting us above.
So while we work, we dare not fail to warm each straying heart.
That in our Lord and in our love they, too, may have a part.
Sometimes we almost weary of our constant gaze on high.
And our hearts grow dull, and hopeless of his speedy drawing nigh.
Then comes our need of seeking, for each moment brings him near.
And the signal thence of heaven daily shines more bright and clear.

Thus we stand, with waking heart-look, till the signal of his shall come.

Watch for the golden day-dawn that shall herald light and peace.

When the dim earth melts that sudden day before the sunrise bright.

And our hearts be fully gladdened in our Savior's glorious light!

John Jay's Journey.

A NEW YEAR'S STORY.

BY LOUISE CHANDLER MORTON.

Shall I begin by painting John Jay's portrait? I am sure that no one ever painted it. The Royal Academy did not know him, nor was he handsome or distinguished enough to be a temptation to their brushes. He had not even made mark enough on his time to get himself caricatured in the penny newspapers. He had no money to waste on photography, so not even the sun had made a picture of him. Yet John Jay was far from a bad-looking fellow.

He was about five feet, ten inches in height, with a well-knit figure. The one beauty of his face was his eyes—great, brown, full of life, with something such a look in them as you have seen in those of a high-bred, honorable dog, quite above the small, deceitful and subterfuge of the average human being. He had brown hair, straight and smooth, and a brown moustache. His features were tolerably regular, but in no way striking, except in their expression. He wore the look of an habitual dreamer. His world was not at all the world of the people he lived among. Other suns shone on it and other moons; and the dreams he dreamed and the hopes he hoped were all his own.

Nature had done her best to make him a poet, but his necessities had made him a journalist. He was a hard-working, poorly-paid literary hack, living in a hand-to-mouth fashion that promised little security for his future, and gave him no time to do the work which would really have expressed his soul. His voice was singularly unimpaired, but low, and his utterance was slightly hesitating, as if he came out of a dream to speak to you.

And now I have painted his portrait as you might have seen him the day before Christmas, in 1879, could you have looked in at a second-story front window in a queer old house on the Boston road in busy London. I said a queer old house; but the house was not as queer as its inmates. People came and went at all hours of the day and night in this dingy house. The landlady was a mystery. One had cork-soled shoes on each side of her calico dress, framing it in an oblong frame—she wore skimpy black gowns. Her voice was that of a querulous woman; but her upper lip bore a moustache many an Oxonian might have coveted, and her stride as she went down the Boston road was that of a grenadier. Looking at her sometimes John Jay used to quote, in that low, gentle voice of his:

They are neither man nor woman,
They are neither ghost nor human;
They are ghouls, ghouls, ghouls.

And a ghoul Mrs. Langley might have been for any interest she showed as to the welfare of her lodgers. They paid their money; she opened her doors—the compact ended.

It was a queer old house, and as no one had more than a single room, and on the upper stories several people huddled into the same room, it had many occupants who came in, some of them, at unholy hours and took other people's day for their night. There were only two of them with whom John Jay had any acquaintance. One was a dressmaker, Miss Renfrew by name—a slight, busy, little person, who occupied the first-story front, just under John Jay's room, and whose open door our journalist used to pass so often that he had got to feel acquainted with her, and frequently would stop to bid her good-day. She was what they call an "art dressmaker," though the dingy old house in Euston road was the last place, you would have thought, in which an "art dressmaker" would have been likely to find herself or be found by others.

John Jay's second acquaintance was a less reputable one. His name was "Dan"—the only name anyone knew him by—and he was a cobbler, and a drunken cobbler at that. Unlike Mr. Jay and Miss Renfrew, he seemed fitly to belong to the notorious old house with its crowd of mold-blent with bad tobacco, its walls which seemed always perspiring an unhealthy dampness, and its uncertain floors on which you stepped cautiously, with an uneasy doubt as to how long they would hold together.

Tap, tap, tap, went Dan's busy hammer all day long over John Jay's head; but with the nightfall Cobbler Dan, like other creatures of the night, used to steal out of doors and prow round Heaven knows where. Often enough John Jay, working late over some article, would hear him stumbling upstairs, and though he had a hearty contempt for the drunken little man, he was yet kind-hearted enough to listen to see if the cobbler got safely to his own door. Now and then, when the taper had taken a little more than usual and Jay heard him fall downstairs, he would go down and pick him up and see him into his room. Drunk Dan had a lively sense of gratitude for these favors, and on the strength of this emotion considered himself a friend of John Jay.

I forgot the children. They belonged in some way to the house, though nobody quite knew who owned them; but they were always there. There were two boys and a little girl, who seemed to have stopped growing when she was not more than a baby, and yet to be permanently old and wise. It spoke well for John Jay's heart that he was always good to these children, and when he had hardly money enough to keep his scanty fire alight would bring them home, now some apples, now a bag of taffy, or a paper with pictures in it; and they were grateful, too, so that after all John Jay was not quite friendless on the day before Christmas, 1879, though he said to himself that he had not a friend in the world.

It takes a holiday—Christmas, New Year's, a birthday—to emphasize a man's loneliness. On ordinary days John Jay worked so busily that he hardly had time to pity himself; but just before the very little to do, and his purse was almost empty, save one ten-pound note, with which he never parted; and the fire on his hearth was low. The afternoon was dark with fog, and it seemed to him that the ghosts jeered at him. We all have our ghosts—all of us who are past our youth—and at Christmas time, above all, they will have speech with us. They used to keep merry X-masses with us in the old days when X-mas was merry, and now they come back and we share our Christmas dainties with them against our will.

John Jay had no Christmas dainties to share. He sat there, in the foggy afternoon, and watched the flickering firelight, and the ghosts came—father, mother, sister, brother—all of their dear ones, all of them dead now. And then in the firelight he saw another vision, the fairest face, as he thought, in the whole world. There was no place in which this real Miss Florence Seyton would be less likely to enter than this second-story room, in the dingy old house in the Euston road; yet his fancy summoned her, and the firelight shimmered on her perfect form, clad in lustrous silk, her golden hair, and the girlish beauty, at once so proud and tender.

There was a curious feeling in John Jay's head, as if some chord there had snapped, and a kind of vagueness possessed his thoughts, so that what was dream and what was reality he hardly knew. He had eaten very little of late because that oneness of his purpose of which I have spoken, and this may have had something to do with the uncertainty that pervaded his ideas. He saw Florence Seyton as plainly as he saw the flickering fire near which he sat.

"Florence," he said suddenly. He had never called her thus by her name in reality, and even the vision seemed to resent it, for suddenly it faded and he was alone in the damp old room, with the smoky fire, and the tireless mouse gnawing at the wainscot.

It was four o'clock in the afternoon. He got up and looked down into the crowded, noisy street. Everybody was so heartily alive down there. School-boys were coming home for the holidays. Carts piled with Christmas hampers from country cousins were tearing along on their way from the Euston station. Rustling people on foot, hurried by their arms full of Christmas purchases.

"How happy they all look," he said to himself. "I'll go out and hurry along with the rest."

He changed his coat. The frock coat he put on was threadbare, but it offered a certain tribute to the proprieties of life; and John Jay was by no means an ill-looking man as he went down the stair and passed the open door of Miss Renfrew. He had taken his purse, with all the money he had left in it, and he was bent on making a purchase or two.

The night had darkened while he made preparations to go out. The street lamps winked in the fog. The wind drove the cold sleet in his face, and the noises of the crowded street seemed to deafen him. He pressed on to the lower street station and took a ticket for South Kensington.

"Where are you going, my man?" he said to himself, but all the same he knew very well where he was going. He got out of the train at the South Kensington station and walked to a familiar house in a familiar square—a large, stately house, glowing with lights. It was the Seyton mansion, the only grand house in London to which he had ever been welcomed. He owed his welcome there to some articles he had written for an influential journal on a matter which the Hon. Sir Seyton had much at heart. Mr. Seyton, an aging man, with a white beard, sought out the author and asked him now and then to his house.

I said in the beginning that nature had made John Jay a poet. It is much the same, perhaps, as saying that nature had made him a madman. At least there could have been no other thing than his falling desperately in love with Miss Florence Seyton. He might as well have set his heart on the North Star for any good it would do him. But you may be sure that Miss Seyton was quite aware of his devotion and enjoyed it. I wonder if she ever takes pleasure in burning the wings of the moth?

As John Jay walked toward the Seyton mansion a purpose formed in his mind, if, indeed, his mind was sane enough to harbor any real purposes at all. He said to himself: "If I am admitted to see her to-night, I will take it as an omen of good, and I will live on and struggle, if not—But he did not finish the sentence even to himself. As he drew near he could see her shadow on the blind of an upper room. She was pinning something in her hair, he fancied, and he came to a decision at last. He had been in the South Kensington station. When he reached his old haunts on the Euston road he made his purchases.

"I will dine to-night," he said to himself, "though I sup among the shadows," and he bought at an oaken table a plate of cold meat. Then he visited a toy shop, and at the best was a window a bunch of violets, and went in for it. Thus laden, he made his way home. The little dressmaker's door was open, and he paused in front of it. For fire was bright, and the cobbler before it tossing a muffin. For the first time he noticed that she had golden hair of just the same shade as that which crowned the proud, little head of Florence Seyton. She, too, was very pretty in her way, though he had scarcely noticed that either in the busy days gone by, when his heart and his hands had both been so full.

"It's very good of you," he said, "to keep your door open. You and your fire make the house cheerful."

"I'm afraid I don't do it from any such motive," she answered, looking up from her counter, with a smile. "The chimney smokes horribly the moment the door is shut, so I keep it open in self-defense."

"All the same you do make it pleasant for the rest of us, and I brought you these violets by way of saying thank you."

Miss Renfrew sprang up eagerly. She loved flowers with all her heart, and always all flowers—violets.

"Oh, thank you!" she cried, "and I do hope you'll have a merry Christmas. Shall you stay here?"

"No; I am going away."

"Yes, a good distance."

"To a pleasant place?"

"I hope so. I have never been there. I believe it is very quiet."

"And you go in the morning?"

"No, to-night. I have my preparations to make, so good-night and merry X-mas!"

"To-night! I hope you'll have a pleasant journey; but I wish it were a better night."

"I shall not mind the night once that I am on the road. Good-bye."

And John Jay went on up-stairs, and the little dressmaker sighed as she turned back to her counter. She would have asked him to share her muffins, but she feared he had a soul above them and her.

The journalist went into his room, where the fire he had left burned brightly, and he closed and locked the door behind him. He had eaten nothing since morning, and he made way with his cold meat, washing it down with a bottle of thin ale. Then he proceeded to inspect his other purchases. He cut the string of his brown paper parcel and produced, first of all, a wooden box from which he extracted a pair of shoes. The shoes were the shoes of a girl down-stairs, just such a doll as Min used to play with, and this doll was the last thing he took from the brown-paper parcel. Now, carefully he set all these things out, arranging them to the best advantage and, meanwhile, awakening in his heart all sorts of happy memories as a musician, striking chords at random, awake echoes of old songs.

When he had finished the arrangement of the toys he went to a little box, which he unlocked and drew therefrom three letters and a faded rose. As John Jay rose to go to bed, he laid out, how full of sweetness on the night when it left from Florence Seyton's hair, and she smiled as he picked it up and audaciously fastened it in his own button-hole. The three letters were from her. The first one said:

DEAR MR. JAY: Mamma wants to know if you will drop in to afternoon tea next Friday. She would write herself, but she has a headache.

Yours sincerely,
FLORENCE SEYTON.

The next was a shado warmer in style:

MY DEAR MR. JAY: How good you were to remember I wanted to see those books, and take so much trouble just to please me. Thank you so much. Your cordial friend,
FLORENCE SEYTON.

And the third was such a note as a real friend might write:

MY DEAR MR. JAY: We are going out to town. Come and say good-bye on Saturday afternoon and promise to miss us when we are far away.

FLORENCE.

And that was all. For a red rose and three letters he had thrown his life away. He went to say good-bye that Saturday, in the late August, and after all he had eagerly been able to spend the night with Miss Seyton, so surrounded by her been by others. And he had never heard from her since. She had returned from out of town and made him no sign, and all he had seen of her was her shadow on the blind in the fleety Christmas eve. He kissed her all sorts of happy memories as a musician, striking chords at random, awake echoes of old songs.

"The money is for my funeral. The toys are for the children."

"And then he carefully excluded all the outer air. He stopped at the cracks about the windows and put in it something in a pair, and then he knelt and said a prayer—only these words:

"If I am wrong, may God, who knows my heart and my life, forgive my sin and lead me into rest."

And then he threw himself upon his bed and folded his arms with a long sigh, as of one tired with the day's work who waits for sleep. And lying there in his damp clothes, strange visions kept him company. First it was Min and Ned—his sister and brother of long ago—who came out of the grave in the park with him the Christmas eve; and Min said, "See, he's asleep," and Ned answered, "No, he's only shamming." But Min still thought he slept, and very softly she sang a lullaby to her doll.

Then it was his mother, with her sad, tender gray eyes, who came in and said, "Al, poor fellow, he's asleep," and bent over him in mother fashion and kissed his forehead, and then went out of the room noiselessly as a shadow.

And then, oh joy of joys! she came—the lady of his love—even she who held his thoughts waking and his dreams sleeping, and from whom his soul was never parted—she was there in his lonely, barren room. He heard the sweep of her dress across the uncertain floor and the tread of her beloved feet.

"I have come," she said, bending over him gently and giving him her hand, and from her lips came to him the words, "I must not love you. I did not mean to make you love me. Oh, my dear, my dear! I am so sorry for you, so sorry."

And she knelt beside him in this waking vision and lifted his head, which throbbed so strangely, to her breast, and the glory of her golden hair caught the firelight, and he felt her heart beat beneath his head, and then—was it her tears that fell on his face, a gentle rain?

It was almost midnight when Dan, the cobbler, came stumbling home, less nsteadily than usual, however, for two bottles of whisky came with him. One was his Christmas treat to himself and the other he designed as a Christmas gift to John Jay. What could he give better than this? He himself liked best in the world? And he could not let Christmas go by without making some sign of gratitude for the quiet kindness that had watched over his uncertain steps so many midnight hours. He had even kept himself very reasonably sober, that he might be in good form for the presentation ceremony.

As he went by the little dressmaker's room he noticed that she was still up and sitting before her fire, though it was long past the hour at which she was accustomed to put out her light. Cobbler Dan glanced in at the lonely little figure as he went by, but he did not speak. He went on up to his own room, left there one bottle of whisky and his battered hat, and came down again to bring his offering to John Jay. He knocked on the door, but there was no answer. He shook it violently, still no response. Then down stairs he went, and stood in Miss Renfrew's still open door.

"If your door's been open all along perhaps you know whether Mr. Jay is gone out?"

The little dressmaker did not think it necessary to confess that she had kept her door open on purpose to see John Jay when he went by, and have one more good-bye before he started on his long journey. She only said that she was quite sure he had not gone out, for he had looked in on his way up stairs, and told her that he was going off that night on a long journey, and she had been sitting over since when she must have seen him if he had passed by.

"Then he can't have gone to sleep," cried Cobbler Dan, "if he's bound for a journey!" And with that he tore up stairs again, and made noise enough on John Jay's door to awake the seven sleepers one and all. But there came no response, and the little Miss Renfrew stood beside him, her face white with terror. An awful foreboding had seized her. Was the long journey to be a very long journey, indeed—too long for any man ever to make twice?

Break the door open; oh, for pity's sake, break the door open, and she pressed against it with all her poor little might. Then Cobbler Dan set his strong shoulder against it also and burst it in. And the room was full of the deadly fumes of burning charcoal. Dan dashed across it and threw open the window. The heat and Miss Renfrew's cries around them. They saw the toys so carefully arranged and the envelope with the few words written on it; and they saw John Jay, with his head at rest upon the pillows of his bed and his hands folded upon his breast. But they could not see the visions that came out of the past and out of their graves to play with him; the sad-eyed mother, the radiant golden head of the latest comers, all these companions of his journey, of such substance as dreams are made of, were invisible to them, and soon they were then left to fight. Was it in cruelty or in mercy that they brought John Jay back from his long journey?

But when he opened his eyes again he gazed around him as one who knows not where he is; and he habited words to which the two who watched beside him could attach no meaning. In the morning the doctor came, and his verdict was "brain fever," and he said "the charcoal business," as he called it, was part of the disease; no man in his right mind ever dreamed of suicide.

It was a hard fight, after all, for the manly life. Miss Renfrew kept him all day; and Cobbler Dan kept himself as sober as a town clock and watched over him all night, and between them they brought him through at last. All through his illness he called Miss Renfrew "Florence." Oddly enough this was really her name; and though she wondered how he could possibly have found it out, she never once dreamed that it was to another Florence that he addressed his passionate cries of love and gratitude and despair. She had grown to love him very dearly in those long days when he seemed to her that his very life hung on the frailest thread.

"He loves me, too," she would say to herself, "now that he is mad. 'Will he love me when he is sane again?'"

That time came at last. It was on February 15th, when Miss Renfrew was springing that John Jay came back to the consciousness of his own existence. He looked with a sort of pathetic surprise at his thin hands.

"Bird's claws, aren't they?" he said, holding them up to the light. "How long have I been ill, Miss Renfrew?"

"Six weeks—over since Christmas eve."

"The hot blood rushed to John Jay's pale face. Suddenly he remembered the last act of his Christmas eve—the long journey he had meant to take. He put out a thin hand, and Florence Renfrew took it in her own.

"You saved me," he said. "I know it was you."

"No, it was not I. It was Dan. He came to bring you a bottle of whisky. He pounded on your door, and when he could not make you hear, he broke in; and then I came, and then you had brain fever."

"And you nursed me?"

"Dan and I. He took the nights and I took the days, and he has kept as sober as a judge."

"God in heaven bless you both," John Jay said, solemnly; and then he turned his face to the wall, and who knows what he said or to whom he cried?

Two days afterward he begged to see all the letters that had accumulated during his absence. They were not numerous—a few requests for copy, a tailor's circular, a column of proof of the last work he did before his illness, and a large envelope which proved to contain an invitation from Mr. and Mrs. Rex Seyton to the wedding of their daughter Florence. Over this last he lingered a little grimly; then he put it into Miss Renfrew's hands.

"She was all of it," he said, with a smile that curved his lips but did not get into his eyes.

"All of what?"

"Charcoal, brain fever—all of it. She was as far out of my reach as the full moon from the child that cries for it; and yet I loved her—dearly. Do you know I've thought you were she all these weeks past? Haven't I called you 'Florence'?"

"Yes," said the little dressmaker, and she forced her quivering lips to smile, and turned her eyes away.

"Yes, but Florence is my name, and I thought you had found it out somehow."

Two weeks after that John Jay had got down stairs, and he was sitting by Miss Renfrew's fire, and she was resting in a chair, and she was looking at him, and she was saying, "I shall see you again, only this time it will be for good."

Sawyer, and sweet Sister Devine, Macon, and the amiable Sister Hogg, and Sister William Eckford, and brother, Parish, and the lovely Sister Price, and Bro. Robert Price, and Sister McGowan, and Sister Lay, who died in sight of heaven, requesting me to preach her funeral, and a amiable boy, Richard Leigh, who sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, and I shall see Sister Powell, and Sister Julia Organ, and my lamented brother, L. V. Ward, and there is Bro. W. and Bro. Tunnell, my early minister friends, and sweet Sister Jeff. Rogers, and the zealous brother, Joseph McLean, and that good brother, James McGowan, who was instrumental in my conversion, and the holy and zealous Bro. Sparks, and Bro. Darby Henry, who so often entertained me at his pleasant mansion in the name of Lord. And Robert and Philip McNeill, and Steadman and John Chalmers, young men of my charge in my outset as a class leader, who died fall. Also Sister Mims, and the sad Sister Barker. And shall I not tell that mother, who labored so faithfully to instill virtue and piety into young hearts, who died a martyr to faithfulness to her husband, who, with yellow fever in Mobile, can truly say, I have many friends in heaven, and I intend, by the grace of God, to meet them and be associated with them forever.

My labor on the Columbus church were greatly blessed; something of three hundred were converted between the first of June and the first of November. Almost every meeting a revival. The Lord seemed to be the windows of heaven and rain down his blessings upon the people. A remarkable circumstance took place at Pleasant Grove Church. At our tract meeting there, Bro. Hurd, preaching, remarked, "It is more probable that Bro. Shaeffer will have preached some of your funerals at next appointment." Bro. Sullivan, then sitting in the congregation in health, and with good prospect of life, and at my next appointment preached his funeral. He and other men, who were in the congregation, had died. Be ye also ready.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, 1885.

In the very beginning of the Conference year let plans be perfected for securing our connectional collections. Large deficits are chargeable mostly to postponement to the last few hurried, agonizing weeks of the pastoral year. Every assessment could easily be raised with more system in effort and more effort with system.

The Exposition is bringing hundreds of visitors from far and near to the city by every train. Though much has to be done in perfecting the display on the original plan, it is already a grand affair. When opportunity is allowed for its careful study we will give the ADVOCATE readers from time to time the results of our observations.

The management of the Exposition have so far respected the Sabbath conscience of the nation as to prohibit the running of machinery on that day. The United States building is closed and a number of exhibitors have their displays covered. This we hope will be done by all. On the other hand, however, the admission fee on Sundays has been reduced to twenty-five cents, and a bid for the Sabbath breaker thus effectually provided. We regret beyond measure that the Board did not act boldly in sealing up the gates on the Sabbath day. The whole nation would have applauded, and the moral tone of the Exposition been commendably emphasized.

With the beginning of a new Conference and calendar year we bespeak an active canvass for the ADVOCATE. Our paper should go into many Methodist homes now without a single church periodical. Such members are never liberal in the support of our institutions nor loyal to the polity of the church. Unacquainted with its current history, they can not be alive to its growing demands or inspired with its apostolic achievements. A letter came to this office recently addressed to "the presiding elder of the Methodist Church." It is fair to presume that such a correspondent is not alone. He types a numerous generation. The good effects of a liberal circulation of church papers are admitted by all pastors, and every year increases its importance. We earnestly plead with brethren to exercise extra diligence for the next few weeks, and see that every old subscriber renews and that the list in each charge be greatly enlarged. The editor can not visit every section of our patronizing territory. He expects to be much among the churches, but would much more appreciate a good subscription list from an active pastor. We contemplate some improvements for the ADVOCATE for the coming year.

Our notes from the Centennial Conference, at Baltimore, closed abruptly with the proceedings of Tuesday's session. That evening we left the "Monumental City," at nine o'clock, by the Baltimore and Ohio. With a thousand tender memories of a delightful hospitality, we bade adieu to the home and family of Bro. T. J. Talbot. To speed his parting guest, and to give him a last grasp of the friendly hand, he accompanied us to the depot and exacted the promise of another visit some day. Soon the capitol city of the nation is reached and passed, and at rapid speed we rush toward the foot of the Alleghenies. The charming weather enjoyed during the Conference now gives place to wintry blasts, and when the ascent of the mountains began their hoary summits were already crowned with snow. This storm prevailed without intermission during the entire trip from Baltimore to Meridian, Miss. Wednesday morning's session, with Dr. Buckley's paper on "Woman and Methodism," and the closing love-feast in the afternoon we had to forego. That was a fitting finale to a most enjoyable and profitable gathering of our great Methodist family. Perfect harmony and fraternal concord prevailed throughout. Its influence upon the spirit and integrity of American Methodism must be positive and permanent. Every essayist and speaker reaffirmed the doctrines of the fathers and urged a diligent return to the old paths.

The New Year.

The ADVOCATE is published this week on the first day of the new year. We send it out with the happy greetings of the season to all our readers, praying the Divine blessing upon each. These passages in life can but awaken serious reflections. Joyful amid the general joy of Christmas tide, in solitude the thoughtful will consider problems of solemn portent. The fact that another year has flown by on swift wing, and that eternity is hovering so much nearer, suggests the question, How has the past been spent, and how will it affect the great future? The experience of the year, whether of joy or sorrow, of labor or lost opportunity, may be recalled, but can not be redeemed. Duties neglected can never be discharged. Failure may inspire to greater diligence in the future; but the failure itself is a fact of history. Looking backward, the lesson we learn exhorts to more fidelity in keeping a watch over our hearts. Experience has been a poor teacher if the new year is not begun with higher hopes and holier purposes.

But good resolutions themselves need watching. After the sacrifices were laid upon the altar Abraham had to drive the fowls away who sought to devour them. We need to guard with sacred vigils even the holiest offerings we bring the Lord. They may be perverted or poisoned, and the blessing upon our own hearts be changed to maledictions. Now, if 1885 is to mark an advance in our spiritual history, every day must witness a renewal of promise and a repayment of vows to God. Neglect for a day will cause sorrow and failure for a week.

Every pastor whose eye traces these lines has doubtless promised the Lord to make this the most laborious and fruitful year of his ministry. To secure such a blessed result let that promise be repeated every morning, and then ask in the evening how much has been accomplished in one day. Postponing to to-morrow the duties of to-day will defeat the fairest hopes and disappoint the dearest expectations. Upon every pastor's heart let there perpetually be the solemn sense of present obligation.

In the name of our common Lord we must lift up our banners and renew the conflict against sin with a braver arm and more skillful hand. Upon every home visited by this ADVOCATE we invoke special blessings. If we can contribute anything to your holier living and more successful laboring, we shall be grateful and abundantly recompensed. A happy new year to the ADVOCATE readers everywhere!

The Mississippi Conference resolved to continue Centenary collections during the year 1885. Other Conferences have taken like action, and we hope the offering will yet aggregate an excess of the proposed two millions. It was agreed that an especial Centenary collection of $3,000 for foreign missions should be raised, and the editor of this paper was appointed to receive and forward the amount. The case is urgent, and we devoutly trust that the Centenary enthusiasm of the Conference will expend itself in that direction. The opening doors in our several foreign fields demanded the sending out of other laborers, and their going involves expense. Now, the question for the church to decide is, Shall the work go forward or shall missionaries be recalled? Methodism never beats a retreat. She has no armor for the back. The call is for an onward movement, and her voice must be heeded or we shall be fatally handicapped for all the future. "All at it and always at it" is our watchword and only guarantee of glory.

One of the most pleasant experiences of our recent attendance upon the Centennial Conference was meeting so many brethren of the press. It was, indeed, a joy to look upon the faces and grasp the hands of conferees whose pens we follow every week. And how different the real from the ideal! We had in imagination pictured the portrait of each; but in no instance was the artistic conception correct. Dr. O. H. Warren, of the Northern Christian Advocate, we had fancied to be a small, thin, pale, studious-looking man, with an eye for books rather than for Conferences. Instead he is of full habit, well cushioned with all-pose tissue, quite bald and, with a good voice, is much at home on the platform. His strongly built physical frame fits types the massive strength and chaste symmetry of his editorials. Dr. J. H. Baylis, of the Western, is broad-shouldered, and carries a genial face and well-poised brain. Dr. C. W. Smith, of the Pittsburg, we saw very frequently. His handsome, open countenance first attracted; then his warm, generous heart captured us. Dr. Buckley, of the New York, and Dr. Edwards, of the North-Western, we had seen before. Dr. Pierce, of Zion's Herald, we failed to meet; but Dr. Fry, of the Central, and his fraternal words will not soon be forgotten.

The Educational Work and Spirit of Methodism.

Bishop Granbery delivered an address on this subject at the recent session of the Centennial Conference. In the extract below, he states the question so clearly and urges our duty so forcibly that we take pleasure in commending his utterances to a careful reading. If we are to conserve the forces of the church that give it cohesive power and promise of perpetual enlargement, this matter is of imperative and vital importance. Methodism will fade away like a wave on the sea of the centuries unless she nurtures her educational, church extension and journalistic institutions. Read the weighty words of our scholarly chief pastor:

"It was the glory of Methodism to preach the gospel to the poor; to enlighten and elevate them by education was a more complex, costly and gradual work.

"Learning and mental acuteness are not prerequisites to sound piety. 'I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes.' The heathen jailor of Philippi was sufficiently instructed between midnight and dawn to become a baptized, rejoicing believer. But Christianity lifts its converts out of poverty and ignorance. Temperance, industry and economy change the severe struggle for subsistence into competence, comfort and wealth. Restrained from crime, vice and frivolity, which waste time and stupefy the mind; learning the surpassing worth of their immaterial and immortal nature; inquiring into the teachings of the Scriptures; accustomed to the exercise of faith in unseen realities, and to meditation on the sublimest themes of human thought—to the soul, eternity and God, stimulated to become more knowing that they may be more useful—they advance in knowledge and mental power. By preaching, Sunday-schools and cheap publications Methodism poured light upon the darkened masses and quickened sluggish minds. Gradually a taste and craving for higher education were fostered, and material prosperity furnished money and leisure to found and fill colleges and universities.

"Many motives concur to urge liberality and enterprise in the educational work of the church. There is the motive of philanthropy. Perfect wisdom is an attribute of God. The power of thought is a grand endowment of man; thence first knowledge one of his noblest impulses, and its acquisition one of his richest satisfactions. Many and close ties bind together religion and education. Each believer is a disciple, and should be led on to maturity of knowledge and judgment. The Bible is an exhaustless mine of wisdom, in which he should work diligently and ever. Intelligence sustains an important relation to character. A man of dull and untutored intellect may have a saintly spirit. But the range of sensibility enlarges with the range of thought. Religious experience is affected by narrowness or breadth, shallowness or depth, of mental development. Paul had profounder, vaster, loftier views of the plan of redemption and of the glory of God in Christ than were possible to an uneducated disciple; corresponding to those wide and exalted conceptions was the adoring love of the apostle. If there are thrones, dominions, principalities, powers in heaven, so in the household of faith there are ranks of intelligence and power, and we should help every man attain unto the fullest measure of spiritual life. Besides, mind is might, knowledge is power, and should be cultivated in consecrated men that they may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work, skilled as well as zealous in doing good, and especially in extending the kingdom of our Lord. The truth that sanctifies and saves must be taught along with secular knowledge, or else students will be carnal, worldly, skeptical. It is not enough to guard them against the poison of error; they need abundance of wholesome, spiritual food. He who is engrossed with manual toil, and has little mental activity, may preserve the fear of the Lord without much religious reading and reflection; but the educated classes will wax more and more earthly, and lose spirituality in devotion studies. As Methodists, we can not hope to retain our own sons and daughters, and to extend our influence over all social classes, if we do not offer the best and simplest facilities for education.

Ecclesiastical Trespass.

A correspondent of Zion's Herald, in referring to the progress of Methodism in certain New England localities, said: "It is about time that Methodists should cease to apologize for their presence in strongly Congregational towns. We exist by reason of the favor of Heaven, and have a God-given right to enter any place where we can do good and save souls." These utterances our staid cotemporary, the Christian Intelligence, repudiates, and he disclaims and declaims as follows:

We consider that such logic is too weak to stand the test of common sense. Churches may be guilty of the sin of trespass as well as individuals, and when they do trespass they ought to suffer tribulation, and thereby be led to repentance. We deny that because an institution exists by the favor of Heaven, it, therefore, has a right to prosecute its work anywhere. The enforcement of that doctrine would lead to any amount of unjustifiable interference with the rights of others, and in many cases to an interference equivalent to trespass. Questions of comity, propriety and expediency can not be excluded from consideration. Congregationalists are likewise supposed to exist by the favor of Heaven, and if they pre-empt a certain field, and diligently cultivate it with an adequate force of ministers and Christian workers, affording the people ample religious accommodations in way of churches, Sunday-schools, etc., neither the Methodist nor any other denomination has a right to crowd itself into the field. There is plenty of room in this wide world for Christian enterprise without Christ's brethren crowding each other and making sore toes.

Now, if the Methodist brother's logic is weak, the Intelligentist failed to expose its weakness. Who is he that he should set metes and bounds to the commission of any branch of the Lord's church? The case he supposes has no historic parallel. No doubt the dominant ecclesiastical organization thought they were affording the pre-empted field "ample religious accommodations," and were diligently cultivating it with an adequate force of ministers; but the "trespass" of another church and its marked success removed the deception. So the Church of England and the several dissenting bodies thought when Methodism was born. Its coming was considered an impertinence, and its success the evidence of a wide-spread superstition. And in New England it had a similar welcome and has encountered like criticism. The mission of the church to any section or community must be determined by itself, and not another. Through its proper authorities new fields are entered and older ones are strengthened. Because another church is on the ground and claims to have "pre-empted" the field is no argument against its entrance. The character of the work being done, and the question of reaching certain classes untouched by established churches, must enter into the determination. But if other persons or organizations were to fix our bounds, we would have a narrow field, to be sure. We might, as a church, repeat the song of the early itinerants:

"No roof of land do I possess;
No cottage in the wilderness."

The Methodist brother's proposition is both good religion and good logic; that we "have a God-given right to enter anywhere we can do good and save souls." Of course, if there are communities where we can not do good and save souls, there we have no commission. Our going would be not only a trespass, but a transgression. It is history, however, known and read of all intelligent people, that the establishment of Methodism in a community has put a new zeal and vigor into every evangelical church. They have been provoked to good works with an activity never before known. We verily believe that the world needs the gospel preached by Methodists, and that our founder had the voice of a prophet when he said, "The world is my parish." It is no trespass to do good and save souls, although in fields "pre-empted" by some slothful church. We are debtors to the world and must carry the gospel to earth's remotest bounds.

The Story of Genius.

The arrival of the steamer "India" at New York with the remains of the great American sculptor, Joel T. Hart, calls to mind the history of that remarkable man. Like many another genius, he lived and died in poverty and received distinguished honor after death. When far beyond the helping or encouraging hand of man the world is vocal with his praises and thousands are expended on a memorial to his genius. He who suffered for bread now has a costly mausoleum. Mr. Hart was a native of Kentucky, and died in Florence, in September, 1877. His remains are brought back at the expense of his native State. The Legislature made an appropriation for the transportation of his body and its interment in the State Cemetery, at Frankfort. The following facts of his life will be read with interest:

Mr. Hart died in poverty after a singular career. He was born in Clark county, Ky., and in youth worked as a farm hand. Then he became a stone mason. He began more artistic employment in Lexington as a tombstone sculptor, his first work being a tiny marble lamb.

Mr. Hart, who was sixty-seven years old when he died, lived for thirty-five years in Florence. He made the statues of Henry Clay that are in New Orleans, Louisville and Richmond. He also made a bust of Cassius M. Clay, for which he received $500, and it is related as an incident of his prodigality that he subsequently presented Mr. Clay with a pedestal for the bust which cost $1,000. He made busts of Millard Filmore and John J. Crittenden.

Mr. Hart's masterpiece was a life-size marble statue of a female figure, called "Woman Triumphant," upon which he spent eighteen years. The statue is now owned by the Art Memorial Association of Lexington. His body is to be buried at the foot of the heroine's monument, in the same inclosure that contains the body of Vice-President Richard W. Johnson, who killed Tecumseh, and the body of Theodore O'Hara, the author of the "Bivouac of the Dead." Mr. Hart left 1,500 poems, which will be published with a sketch of his life.

A Preacher's Christmas.

MR. EDITOR: I desire through your paper to express my sincere appreciation of the kindness shown me by the good people of Benton circuit. Since Conference many presents have been coming to the parsonage—presents for myself, Mrs. Cooper, "I. W." and our little Florence Ione. The good people say they wanted to give me something that would not wear out, and they presented me with a very beautiful and valuable silver pitcher and goblet. During my stay of two years a church has been built, two churches neatly repaired, parsonage repaired and about one hundred accessions to the church. May God greatly bless the dear friends and schoolmates of my boyhood home! Thank God for so many dear friends! They are lights along the itinerant's pathway.

Your brother in Christ,

Death of Rev. J. T. Heard.

A telegram from Rev. J. M. Weems, dated Shubuta, Miss., December 30, 1884, was received at noon, on Tuesday, containing these sad words: "Bro. Heard died here to-day." We read them with profound sorrow. A few days ago we parted on our return from Conference, and never was he in happier spirits. He led the Conference in the closing prayer just before the appointments were read, and with a fervor and power peculiar to himself. How earnestly he pleaded for the Divine blessing upon the preachers, and that each one might be assigned to the place where he could do the greatest good! And there on the train that afternoon he led the brethren in many sweet songs of praise. It was an inspiration to hear the old veteran praise the Lord in going out to his forty-fifth appointment. If ever man was called of God to pray, Joshua T. Heard was that man. In breadth of petition, fervor of utterance and evident mightiness of faith his prayers were remarkable. He talked with his Lord as friend to friend, and all that heard him felt that he dwelt much in the very holy of holies.

Entering the Mississippi Conference, in 1839, he continued in the active ministry to the very hour of death. He was never local, supernumerary or supernuminate. Into fields of every character he entered and labored with the spirit of his Master. Most of his ministerial life was spent in Alabama, where he served circuits; the most important stations and the largest districts with uniform acceptability. In 1870, when Conference boundaries were rearranged, he became a member of the Mississippi Conference, and has labored among us honored and beloved by every member. No man we have known had a richer religious experience. He dwelt on the borders of the glory land. In the love-feast his testimony was always bright and joyous. He walked with God and carried a countenance always radiant with heavenly light. Last year he was stationed at Brandon, Miss., and had just been returned to his beloved flock; but, alas! another voice must lead him.

To us his death is a sore personal bereavement. He has been a friend, intimate, sympathizing and true. He leaves a wife, who for all these years has been a faithful helpmeet, and two daughters. Other children have preceded him to the home of the blest. At this late hour before going to press we can not say more. "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horses thereof!"

Obituaries.

HEDRICK.—There passed from earth to an eternal home of bliss, one of the best and truest Christians, and one of the most devoted wives and tenderest mothers and the most faithful of friends, J. who for more than a quarter of a century enjoyed her confidence and reliance in her friendship, can fully testify to all these lovely traits of character. The bright, moving spirit in her happy home, the faithful ally, the loved one, the one who must bow in meek submission to the will of him who never errs. We who know her lovely life, the kind words she spoke for Christ, the beautiful hospitality of her home, feel assured of her peaceful rest.

MARY E. HEDRICK.—Wife of W. A. Hedrick, and daughter of Wm. H. and Mary Parker, of precious memory, passed from death to life on July 31, 1884. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for several years, and while the cares of many little children who God had given her, she was ever ready to give of her time and strength to the church, yet she always made a sacrifice of her pleasures that these lovely children might regularly attend both church and Sabbath-school.

Shelton gone from us, and we all do so, as a leaf. Only a few more stars, a few more lights, and we all shall be where there is no more life, and the waves of trouble can no longer sweep over us. Farwell, sweet friend, your presence here is another incentive, to keep my eyes fixed on my heavenly home.

A TRUE FRIEND.

BROWN-MISS MARETH BROWN.—Daughter of B. B. and E. J. Brown, deceased this life Oct. 8, 1884. This was the eldest child, and just becoming mature. She was a devoted daughter and sister, and having reached that age where she could be a companion for her mother, as well as comfort to the father, much of the grace of God was brought into requisition to enable them to say, "Thy will, O God, be done." In the midst of their sorrow they have much to comfort the bereaved. Miss Mareth joined the church at about ten years of age. Strong influences were brought to bear, to lead her away from the church. She could not disregard the solemn vows she had assumed. I visited her while sick, and found her not at all of death, but trusting in Jesus. She was born in Missouri county, Mo., Nov. 8, 1867, moved with her parents to Hinds county, Miss., December, 1880, and after a blinding many months to her, she leaves them, and goes to join her friends above.

The following resolutions were adopted by Fairplay Sunday-school:

Resolved, That we have pleasure to remember from our midst, Miss Mareth Brown, one of our brightest and best pupils, and believing that our loss is her gain; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deeply regret our loss, and will ever cherish her memory with the fondest affection. To the bereaved family we offer our sympathy in this their sad and trying hour, praying that in this affliction they may be able to bow in humble submission to him who doth all things well.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

L. B. BRADFORD.

CARTLEMAN.—Died at his residence in West Carroll parish, La., on Nov. 4, 1884, David P. Cartleman, of this parish. In his early life he connected himself with the Baptist Church, but after his removal South he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he was a member at the time of his death. He has lived in this parish about forty years, and was a married man. He raised sons and daughters who loved and honored him. This was another one of our oldest and best citizens passing away. Industrious and temperate, he lived to a good old age. He and his family made a comfortable living for himself and family. Believing in the truths taught by the Master, and practicing the same by precept and example, so when summoned to go hence, he was ready. He expressed no fears of death, only regret at leaving his wife and children, who have the sweet consolation of knowing that "Heaven is the home of the dead who die in Jesus Christ." They can go to him in that blessed land where parting will be no more.

MCALISTER-SARAH MCALISTER.—She was a woman of spirit and mind, which had been expanded and well stored with useful knowledge which she had gathered from standard books. No book, however valuable, was allowed to take the place of the Bible. She loved its precious pages, and rejoiced in hope of the fulfillment of all its precious promises, which, from her long, consistent and useful life, together with her quiet and resigned passage into death's valley, we have reason to believe have been verified to her as far as the Divine economy has promised to the disembodied of the pure in heart. She died at her daughter's, Mrs. Cole, of Suntown, Miss., Nov. 14, 1884, being 92 years old, lacking two days, and leaves two daughters and one sister to mourn her loss, but not as those who have no hope.

R. A. ELLIS.

MOSELEY.—Died at the residence of her mother, Mrs. C. A. Atkinson, near Jackson, Miss., on Monday, Nov. 10, 1884, Mrs. PATTIE F. MOSELEY, wife of Mr. L. B. Moseley, of Jackson.

Mrs. Moseley was the daughter of the late L. F. Alford, of Hinds county, and the grand-daughter of the Rev. Thos. Ford, whose memory is cherished as one of the ablest of Methodists' pioneers in this portion of the State.

How quickly the changes in life come on, and how soon is joy turned into sorrow! In February last a happy company assembled at the old homestead to see Miss Pattie married; now the same company, with tearful eyes and heavy hearts, turn mournfully to the desolated home and follow her to the grave.

Mrs. Moseley was a woman of rare loveliness. Amiable, affectionate, and religious from her childhood. She combined with her gentle virtues, a banal vigor of intellect, strength of character, educational advantages, the refinements of the home circle, and, above all, the ennobling and beautifying influences of the spirit of the Master had developed the lovely child into one, whose life was a benediction, a true woman, strong and pure and patient.

Illness had been protracted and painful, but death was unexpected, and up to within a few hours of her death, strong hopes of her recovery were entertained. Perfectly rational to the last, she was conscious of her condition, and her only regret at the thought of dying was that of being separated from those she loved. She said her father had come for her and she was going away with him.

Her death was as gentle and beautiful as her life had been.

May the God into whose keeping the wife and daughter were committed, guide and sustain the bereaved husband and mother.

A. F. W.

HOBBS.—DAVID M. HOBBS was born in Jackson county, Ala., Dec. 22, 1816, and died in Holmes county, Miss., Oct. 28, 1884.

He was attacked with paralysis two weeks before his death, after which he was not supposed to be fully conscious at any time. In his death we have lost a useful member of the church. His home had been the home of the faithful preacher for many years. It was pleasant to be with him. He was one of the most quiet, even-tempered men of our country, not very impulsive in his religion, yet at times one could see the whole man outburst for Christ. He had taken part in our meetings during the summer when his health would permit. Joy could be seen beaming from his countenance when he saw interest manifested by his neighbors, and especially so in the conversion of his sons.

The church at Jordan's Chapel loses one of its most faithful members in his death, and the family a devoted husband and father. This preparation for the event was made many years ago. Having lived a Christian so long, his whole nature appeared to be absorbed in heavenly and divine things.

J. F. EVANS.

She was a devoted daughter and sister, and having reached that age where she could be a companion for her mother, as well as comfort to the father, much of the grace of God was brought into requisition to enable them to say, "Thy will, O God, be done." MAXFIELD.—A memorial relative to the death of Rev. W. H. Maxfield. Whereas, We have been informed of the sad and untimely death of our former pastor, Rev. W. H. Maxfield, who died in Butte City, Montana, on Nov. 23; And whereas, He has been our beloved pastor and intimate friend for the present year; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we humbly bow to the will of Almighty God, who doth all things well, we can not avoid the shock of sorrow and a calamity.

Resolved, That in the death of this eminent young minister of the gospel, the Conference has sustained an irreparable loss, and the church has been deprived of a beloved pastor.

Resolved, That the church at this place will ever cherish a lasting memory of one so dear to her people, and of one who promised to be a most efficient worker in the vineyard of the Lord.

GRAY.—MARTHA ELIZABETH, infant daughter of W. T. and Mrs. T. L. Gray, was born March 4, 1881, baptized by the writer Oct. 5, and died Nov. 1, 1884. She was the only daughter of the family. Her life was brief, but she tarried long enough on earth to thoroughly entwine the affections of her parents around her. Hence that home now seems desolate without her. But she has gone to the bosom of the good Shepherd, who gathereth the lambs in his arms and carrieth them in his bosom. It is well with the child. The sweet spirit will rest in the immortal childhood in a far better world than this. May God bless the bereaved parents!

W. B. LEWIS.

LAIRD.—MAGGIE LAIRD, daughter of J. T. H. and Maggie Hays Laird, was born in Durant, Miss., Feb. 19, 1882, was dedicated to God in holy baptism by Rev. S. M. Thames, and died in Jackson, Miss., Oct. 24, 1884.

Our bright, beautiful, lovely little darling of three summers has gone to "join the angels." It gives us pain to see the purest of earth's mortal forms laid away, but "of such is the kingdom of heaven." We shall see our loved one again when death unbars earth's portals.

A WONDERFUL

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eye in good condition, so when you use them, they have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European opticians, who claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that I usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cool, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with all the redness and irritation to the eye.

4. With these glasses you can read,

CAN YOU?

BY MARY B. FOLSON.

Can you make a rose or lily—just one?
Or catch a beam of the golden sun?
Can you count the rain-drops as they fall?
Or the leaves that flutter from the tree-tops tall?
Can you run like the brook and never tire?
Can you climb like the vine beyond the spiral?
Can you fly like a bird, or swim like a fish?
Or make one feather on robin's breast?

Can you build a cell like the bee, or spin,
Like the spider, a web so fine and thin?
Can you lift a shadow from off the ground?
Can you see the wind, or measure a sound?
Can you blow a bubble that will not burst?
Can you talk with echo and not speak first?

Oh, my dear little boy! you are clever and strong.
You are so very like the whole long.
Try as hard as a little boy can
To do things like a "grown-up" man!
Look at me, darling! I tell you true,
There are some things you can never do.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: As I have already said, the city of Shanghai was recaptured by the imperialists on Saturday, February 17, 1855, being the first day of the Chinese new year. The night before this I had been standing guard and watched the fire as it swept from house to house, destroying everything in its way. The next day, the Sabbath, the city continued to burn, and it was not thought safe for any foreigner to go near the place, as everything was in utter confusion. Multitudes of thousands of the country people flocked to the city to see what was going on or to seek some friend or relation.

Later on the Sabbath we heard a large cannon had been fired near the north gate of the city and some five or six persons had been killed or wounded. A battery had been erected near our old mission-house, and upon this many heavy guns had been placed. One gun, some eighteen feet in length, had been loaded to the muzzle. Late on the Sabbath thousands of men and women were passing into the city, at the north gate when a soldier, passing by this gun fully charged, thought for sport he would touch it with a match, and in a moment the lives of several persons were destroyed or injured. As soon as it was ascertained who committed the deed, the general of the army had the man beheaded on the spot.

On Monday morning, while on my way to the city, I passed this immense gun which had been fired. Nothing but the bare walls of our mission house were left standing. Every house near the city was in ruins, including the two dwellings of the Baptist mission. Thousands of men and women were crowding their way to the city, eager to see the state of things or anxious to see those who had been so long crowded within its walls. Just before reaching the north pole of the city, such a scene of horrors I never before witnessed met my eyes. In a small ditch, which led up to the north gate, lay the dead bodies of half a dozen men. Their dead bodies had been stripped of everything and were coiled and mangled in a horrible manner; their bodies ripped open, their hearts taken out and all exposed to the gaze of the thousands who were passing. It is said the hearts were taken out by the imperial soldiers and eaten to increase their courage.

When drawing near the gate I was attracted by large crowds who seemed intently gazing on something before them. I made my way through the crowd and found four large baskets, each basket containing ten human heads, and among the number were several foreigners. It was a sickening sight to behold! We heard that five hundred insurgents had been beheaded by the imperial general near his camp, and among the number were several foreigners who had been connected with the insurgents. On passing through the gate everything in the city presented a most desolate appearance. More than half the city was in ruins, including many of the finest stores and dwelling-houses on all the business streets. As I proceeded, here and there were seen the dead bodies of insurgent soldiers, or of some unfortunate citizen, terribly mangled and cut to pieces, lying dismembered by the side of the street or charred amid the smoking ruins of some of the burning buildings. The city wall in many places near the six gates was covered with blood, besmeared heads of Chinese and some foreigners elevated on bamboo poles. These were exposed to the view of thousands passing in and out, and to me it was anything but a pleasant sight. Imperial troops were rushing hither and thither through the whole city, indiscriminately beheading men, burning houses and seafaring in every nook and corner of the city for fleeing insurgents and people, and taking possession of everything that fell into their hands. They had no mercy upon any one they met who had long hair, or had the appearance of having recently shaved their heads. In their judgment it was sufficient evidence they were rebels against the government, and for every head thus presented to their general they were sure to receive a reward in money or be promoted to office.

Many poor wretched beings were found hiding in cellars and some were secreting themselves in wells. As soon as the imperial troops discovered this, they overturned every coffin in the city, and if there happened to be dead bodies they were left exposed, so that in many places the stench was almost unbearable. In some cellars the dead had been turned out and the living had taken their places. They often found immense sums of silver, gold and valuables concealed in them. These men who were thus discovered were put to terrible torture and death at the hands of these merciless soldiers. The lowest estimate of the number of persons beheaded on the recapture of the city was not less than six hundred. It is believed that many innocent people perished among this number. The capture of the city was not the result of Chinese skill or courage, but because the French interfered and supported the imperial army. The French admiral, with two men-of-war, bombarded the city on three different occasions. He then tried to cut off their supplies, and it is said the Roman Catholic missionaries had something to do with it. There is no doubt they took this opportunity to enlarge their possessions, for the French marines, by order of the admiral, burned every Chinese house up to the city wall, and to this day the Roman Catholic missionaries hold the greater portion of it, the property of the church, while it is called and known by many as the French concession. After the taking of the city by the French and imperial troops, the French occupied the city and held it for some months, and it is supposed the land they now occupy was ceded to them by the government for the services rendered in recapturing the city.

It was remarkable that Protestant missionaries suffered so little in the midst of all these difficulties. They were often exposed to danger, and yet not one was ever injured. Many times have we felt we could sing with the Psalmist these words, "Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, there shall no high, thy habitation, there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." A Baptist brother, who is now living in Shanghai, was one day sitting in one of the lower rooms of his house with his teacher, when a cannon ball struck the roof of the building, came down through the ceiling and the upper floor, and as it was about to fall upon the dining table he reached out his hands and caught it as it was falling. His teacher was greatly frightened and begged him not to touch it. Our good brother tells this to all his friends when speaking of those trying times in his early missionary life.

Some of the missionaries houses were riddled with shot, and many, if not all those near the city wall, were burned by the government troops. All churches and chapels in the city were preserved and the missionaries began work in them in a few weeks after the recapture of the city.

While the French had possession of the city they opened a new gate straight through the wall without any curve, leading directly into the French settlement. According to the superstitious notions of the Chinese, the prosperity of the city flowed directly into the French settlement. The "fung shui," (wind and water,) was destroyed by the peculiar construction of the gate, and the people of the city must suffer. They could not, of course, prevent this, as the French had possession of the city. As soon as the French gave it up to the Chinese authorities, they set to work at once and built a second gate, and had a circular wall built enclosing a small space of ground between the two gates. Then the people were satisfied that the prosperity of the city was prevented from flowing into the French settlement, and was accomplished by the means which they had devised. As a result of this, the people were happy, free from calamity, and were prosperous in business. So they thought.

Yours in the love of Christ,

Bishop Mallaleu and the South.

Bishop Mallaleu, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is now in the city of New Orleans, deliberating whether the Crescent City or Austin, Texas, shall be his permanent home in the South. South of Atlanta no Bishop of that church has lived since the division of the great Methodist family. What does his coming into the midst of us mean? Simply that the extended work of his branch of the Methodist Church requires episcopal oversight, counsel, encouragement and presence. The membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South is claimed to be over 323,000, while their property south of the sectional boundary is estimated at over $5,233,723. This is a sufficient answer to the question why Bishop Mallaleu has been assigned the choice of a home in Louisiana or Texas. But greater significance than this is to be attached to his coming South. He has formerly made his home in Boston, where he has been long and favorably known. He has contributed not a little in forming the character of the Methodist Churches of that city. He is a man of culture, scholarship and convictions, and has the ear of the great Methodist Church, North, West and East, and through his church he enjoys the respect and confidence of the country at large. All these qualifications for citizenship he brings with him. Should not such a man at such a time be most heartily welcomed by us? What does the coming of such a man among us imply? Of course Bishop Mallaleu has been a reader of the current history of American affairs and in view of making his home South, especially of those relating to this section. He has not only read, but has conversed much on the phases of Southern life. He has had representations made from his side of the industry and laity concerning the South, and upon these he has already come to tentative conclusions. Are these conclusions correct? That the South, the Southern Methodist Church and ministry have been slanderously represented in Northern church journals by letters from irresponsible, incompetent and injudicious spectators, no one can deny who has the weekly visits of the different Northern Advocates. It would have been time thrown away to deny these slanders. But they have been largely circulated throughout the country to the hinderings of a complete fraternity between the two great branches of Methodism to the discouragement of immigration among us and to the fostering of suspicions of disloyalty to the government. We claim for our section of the country not perfection, but as high an ideal of allegiance to the country and to the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ as that which obtains in any section of the United States. Those who know us well and intelligently accord this much to us. We invite intelligent, broad-minded, candid criticism. Our sister church North has not always been fairly represented in the South, and consequently the South has not been properly represented by them to their constituency in the North. We have seen an amount of prejudice, fanaticism, sectionalism and intolerance in some of the reputed workers of the Northern church which has not greatly stimulated on our part a very warm hospitality. Bishop Mallaleu, a distinguished and competent representative of his church, a conspicuous and respected citizen of Boston, a moulder of thought, will now study this problem with candor and intelligence. He will take his own time before altering or affirming conclusions to which he may have already arrived. Of the issue we have no uncertainty. We desire to be known to our friends of the North and we desire to be known through candid hearts and well-informed heads. Dr. Talmage has made us occasional visits and he gave to the country his impressions of us. Henry Ward Beecher made us a flying visit, but long enough to shake our hands and look into our eyes, and the country has heard from him. Horace Greely did us justice after having visited us. Joseph Cook has hardly departed from our doors and our only regret is that his sagacious and intuitional genius could not have remained long enough to have seen more of us. We do not want our Northern friends to see us in our holiday apparel, but we do desire them to go in and out among us, moving through all the grades of ignorance and intelligence, ruffianism and refinement, belief and unbelief, and then take back with them a true picture of the original.

Aside from the great exhibition of the world's progress in science, invention, manufacturing, agriculture, and in mineral wealth with all material prosperity, the devout prayer of thousands of those who visit the World's Exposition in New Orleans, with most intelligent and gratified appreciation is that it may prove one of the efficient means of erasing the lines of sectarian and political differences which have weakened and retarded our national development for more than a quarter of a century. As warm as is the welcome extended to the thousands of visitors from foreign lands, a still warmer handgrasp is awaiting every visitor to us from north of Mason and Dixon's line. Would that we had the power of so fascinating the thousands who visit us as that they might be persuaded, as were the daughters of the Sabeles by the sons of Rome, to become members of our household and citizens of our commonwealth. The North wants our temperate climate and alluvial, productive soil and teeming mines, and the South wants Northern muscle, capital, brains and energy. Distinguished Northern visitors who come to remain permanently with us will, in the nature of the case, make their interests identical with our own. This will lead to a more widespread advertisement of our resources and character, and more eventuate in emigration and investment from the North. We therefore look with real pleasure and hopefulness upon the contemplated residence of Bishop Mallaleu. We are aware that he comes in official capacity with the proved objects of advancing the educational, Sunday-school, temperance and evangelic work of his church, and in fields where practicable to encourage the erection of churches, schools and eleemosynary institutions under the auspices of his church. Why not? Why should not Northern immigrants find their own church in any Southern community in which they may settle? New York belongs no more to the Methodist Episcopal Church than to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Nor should the spirit of fraternity be in the least involved by the occupancy of the same field by the Methodisms.

Our neighbors have far outstripped us in the race. Their enterprise and elasticity have given them the lion's share of the good things of this world. But the South is waking up, and it is in exact proportion as she gracefully adjusts herself to the progressive spirit of the age that she shall catch the breath of a new life and become sharer of its general benefits.

The Traveler Travelling.

MR. EDITOR: I was delighted to meet you and so many worthy and able men of our common Methodism in that great conclave at Baltimore. I wrote you from that point. My visit and stay in Baltimore will form a blessed page in my history as a Methodist preacher. You have doubtless kept your readers posted as to the doings and sayings of the Centennial Conference. Let me say: I visited the graves of the revered Asbury, Strawbridge and Jesse Lee and gathered some pebbles and myrtle from their last resting-place at Mt. Olivet Cemetery. Grand and glorious men. Their names shine out on the pages of Methodist history. They are enshrined in the hearts of millions. They are dead so far as this world is concerned; yet they "speak" for "their works do follow them." I climbed the spiral stairs to the balcony near the summit of Washington Monument, beautifully located at Mt. Vernon Place, and viewed the great city stretching out in all directions. I went into the Peabody Institute and ranged among the sculpture and paintings of that beneficent institution. It was with reluctance I left my hospitable hostess, Mrs. Lester.

My route to Savannah was by way of Charleston. I spent one day at that place, as the South Carolina Conference was in session, under the firm master hand of my old Louisiana Conference compeer, Bishop McTyeire. I found a hospitable and delightful home at the residence of Col. Hagood, where was domiciled several of the preachers, who, with the cultured and refined family, made the Oregon preacher's temporary stay delightful. My dear little friend, Lida Hagood, must not forget her promise. I formed the acquaintance of many of the preachers, whose spirit and demeanor taught me they had been near the cross. One remarked: "We have no stars in our Conference." I conclude if there are "no stars," there are many planets who shine with steady lustre. While sitting between Drs. Critzberg and Kelly in mutual and subdued chat, I thought of Ajax and Achilles and felt how little I was. I shall not forget Bro. Kelly; he knows what I mean. I had learned in my school-book when a boy that "Charleston was noted for its hospitality," now I realized its force and fact: Grand South Carolina Conference!

My line of travel led me to Savannah as a subjective point. The South Georgia Conference was in session, Bishop Granberry presiding. Here I have spent a most enjoyable time at the hospitable home of C. H. Carson, Sr. This loving and lovable Christian family is a model. My mingling and intermingling with the preachers and laymen has been so pleasant; such a means of grace! Attending their deliberations, entering into the spirit of their discussions, hearing the preaching—all so pleasant. My venerable friend, Dr. McFerrin, whom I met in Baltimore, Charleston and now at Savannah, is felt and beloved by everybody. His clear, scriptural sermon on Sunday night, at Trinity, on the operations and work of the Holy Spirit, was forcible and attended with power. Dear old man! he is, nearing the mark.

There was an increase of over 2,000 members, and at this announcement, and almost spontaneously, (the good Bishop suggesting) the large audience arose and sang the Te Deum of Protestantism: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," etc. This is a strong and desirable Conference to work in. Methodism seems well entrenched, fortified, and exhibits much of the old fire and power which has made it the wonder of the nineteenth century. Savannah, with its broad streets and double rows of live oak trees, parks, fountains, monuments, statuary and ample dwellings and grounds constitute it the most picturesque city this traveler has seen.

After a brief stay with loved ones here, I leave for New Orleans, but rest a day en route at Ocean Springs with my Bro. Stewart. My heart leaps to rejoin the friends and loved ones in Louisiana. I leave representatives in this Conference in the person of son-in-law and daughter, Rev. C. H. Carson and wife, to cultivate Immanuel's lands. Thus we scatter, but preach Jesus.

Affectionately in Christ,
THOS. B. WHITE.

A Semi-Centennial Experience.

Fifty years ago, in the old Light Street Church, which was the successor of the old meeting-house in Lovely Lane, Baltimore, the Rev. George Cookman, the eloquent pastor, received me into the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I was a small boy, but Mr. Cookman believed I would make a faithful member. To-day the great Centennial meeting in Baltimore adjourns, having had a glorious reunion of noble Methodists in a magnificent church standing on a spot which was in the woods—Howard's Woods—when I became a Methodist. My father was a Methodist preacher, and my maternal grandfather, who was also a Methodist preacher, died in the very town in which his grandson was admitted to trial in a Methodist Annual Conference.

Soon after I became a member of the Methodist Church I went to college. The absorbing nature of my studies and other influences deadened my religious emotions; so that sometimes I felt as if I had no claim to be considered religious. But, in my dearest state, when most worldly and ambitious, I never missed a class meeting. I had resolved to keep all the rules of the church, and attendance at the class meeting was one of them. I told most honestly all my defections, my worldliness, my loss of assurance, my general unworthiness, and my dislike of the class meeting. But I told them that I intended to attend every week if I killed me, unless I should be turned out of the church—which, perhaps, I ought to be; but that I would never voluntarily withdraw from the church. And they bore with me, and prayed over me, and some of them wept over me, and so I never missed class meeting until I graduated, when I was full of zeal and licensed to preach. I shall thank God forever for Methodist class meetings.

Although I do not now belong to Methodism, in the sense (comparing small with great) that John Wesley in his latter days did not belong to the Established Church, yet Methodistism belongs to me, and I claim everything good and noble and sweet that grows on the top of that hill from whose height my mother and my father spread their wings to soar away and be forever at rest.

And this is the semi-Centennial experience of one who was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church in his boyhood, just half way between the Christmas Conference of 1784 and the Centennial Conference of 1884. I am going into the second half century of my Christian life, praying the prayer of Charles Wesley:

To serve the present age,
May calling to fulfill,
O may I all my powers engage
To do my Master's will.

FOR EARLY SAKS.

BY FREDERICK W. WEAVER.

Do you remember that morn in May, dear?
Birds were singing and flowers were blooming?
Out in the woods we kept the day, dear,
Baby's birthday, a year ago.
Chasing the butterflies o'er the clover,
Picking the flowers a crown to make,
For she was queen the whole world over,
All was happy—for baby's sake.

But the sunshine passed, and the dark clouds Drifted, Fell a shadow o'er life between,
And baby's sweet little face was seen,
Wondering what could that shadow mean.

Father, kiss mother, baby's father!
Oh! we wept till our hearts must break.
At the old, old love came back unaltered!
All forgiven—for baby's sake.

Baby is gone to the golden weather,
Over the shining mountain bow,
Through the dark mist we walk together,
We have each other now and pray,
Pat your hands into mine and pray, dear,
Pray that soon the morn will break,
That God will hear us and show the way, dear,
Safe into heaven—for baby's sake.

Methodism and Modern Sunday-Schools.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE CENTENNIAL CONFERENCE, IN BALTIMORE, NOVEMBER 15, 1884, BY THE EDITOR OF THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Sunday-school has passed its apologetic period. Its right to live has been demonstrated by the spiritual achievements it has wrought—by the marvelous history it has written. We have no longer to plead for its existence, but rather to restrain the unwisdom and guide the zeal of its friends. It is no more considered an accident in the annals of the church or an expedient to meet an emergency, but a vigorous and essential member of the body of Christ. Though slow of recognition and adoption by the churches as a divinely authorized agency for the spread of the gospel, it now commands a foremost place and is crowned with the sovereignty of success. The most skeptical have been convinced, while cautious conservatism has developed into ardent enthusiasm. Fear has given place to favor, and reluctant acquiescence to cordial acceptance. I do not mean to intimate that an ideal has been attained—that there is not yet much crudeness of conception and administration—that dangers are not to be feared and important modifications made; but this must be admitted—its value is so universally and thoroughly appreciated that no church can neglect it without large and lamented loss. Such indifference is a sure prophecy of failure, and the slothful church "must neither wonder nor complain if Heaven leaves her nothing to nurse but her own desolation."

But, my purpose this evening is rather to bring former things to remembrance than to philosophize and prophesy. To see what the church-school has done, and not to discuss its methods and needs, its dangers and duties.

The inspiration and purpose of the Sunday-school is obedience to that scripture, and others of like import, which saith: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." The careful, prayerful training of young children is one of the highest and holiest inspirations of parenthood in both the Old and New Testament scriptures. It was clearly commanded in the original constitution of the church, and was often re-emphasized through all subsequent years by patriarch, prophet, and apostle. And all during the early history of the Christian Church, as a well-known writer informs us, "a tender solicitude for the religious instruction of children was one of its most beautiful characteristics." Mosheim, in his "Ecclesiastical History," writing of the first century, said: "Christians took all possible care to accustom their children to the study of the Scripture, and to instruct them in the doctrines of their holy religion; and schools were everywhere erected for this purpose, even from the commencement of the Christian Church." And such character of instruction, with varying methods and fortunes, was in all places more or less imparted, and indicates the vicissitudes and spiritual vitality of the church through all those annals down to the eighteenth century, the real epoch in Sunday-school history. As early as 1738 Mr. Wesley organized a school in his parish at Savannah, Ga., in which children were taught "to read, write and cast accounts," and to receive a rather excessive amount of catechizing. Upon this enterprise Divine blessing rested, and many of the pupils "were, at their earnest and repeated desire, admitted to the Lord's table." Mr. Wesley thus characterizes the success of the movement in his journal: "Indeed about this time we observed the Spirit of God to move upon the minds of many of the children. They began more carefully to attend to the things that were spoken, both at home and at church, and a remarkable seriousness appeared in their whole behavior and conversation." This has been aptly termed "a prototype of the modern Sunday-school," and deserves a more conspicuous place in its history. The school was crude and short lived; but it was a prophecy of things to come. I would not pluck one flower from the crown that adorns the brow of Robert Raikes, the reputed father of modern Sunday-schools—all honor to his name—but it is history known and read of all intelligent Methodists that Hannah Ball, a young Methodist, at Iligh Wycombe, organized a school in 1767, fourteen years before Robert Raikes began his at Gloucester. And, further, that the idea of a Sunday-school was first suggested to Raikes by a Methodist lady of England who afterward became the wife of Samuel Bradburn, one of Mr. Wesley's most efficient and distinguished ministers. She urged the immediate establishment of a school, aided to its organization, became one of the teachers and marched with Raikes in the first and famous procession of ragged children from the school-room to the parish church. So, as it has been truly said, Raikes' "Sunday-school scheme had a Methodist origin, and, amid the jeers of the populace, it received a Methodist baptism at its birth." Mr. Wesley was the first man in England to give these schools public approval, and predicted that they would become "nurseries for Christians" and "one great means for reviving religion throughout the nation." Indeed, our great founder became so enthusiastic over the mighty spiritual possibilities locked up in the movement that he wrote to a friend in 1788: "I verily believe these Sunday-schools are the noblest specimens of charity which have been set on foot in England since the time of William, the Conqueror."

After this warm commendation and repeated exhortations to his preachers, we are not surprised that Sunday-schools multiplied so rapidly among the "societies." In 1788 there were five hundred children in the school of his society at Bolton, and the number increased the following year to eight hundred taught by eighty "masters." And it was at Bolton, and in Methodist schools, that the important change from paid to volunteer teachers was first made. In the same year, at Cheshire, were nearly seven hundred children under regular masters. Into all denominations of the United Kingdom swept this "mighty wave of light," and in only three years after Wesley's published account in the Arminian Magazine, "there were more than two hundred thousand children already in them."

But each caught an inspiration and urged forward the grand movement. Now after a hundred years, from 1780 to 1880, it has been estimated that Protestant Christendom contained not less than one and a half million of teachers, and twelve and a half million of pupils—an aggregate of at least fourteen millions.

But for the purpose of this Centennial occasion we are more concerned about the history of Sunday-schools in America. And that leads me to say that we are this evening commemorating the Centenary of an institution that had no existence in this new world one hundred years ago in the old Christmas Conference. In that historic assembly of heroic, apostolic men there was no discussion of the Sunday-school; and no advocate of it as a possible evangelical agency. Other methods and forces of spiritual conquest were considered and employed; but the modern Sunday-school, which has attained such magnitude, had there no advocate or apologist. It was nearly two years after that Conference adjourned before the first Sunday-school in America (after the experiment of Wesley in Savannah) was organized. And, like many other special facts in the history of American Methodism, the honor of its origination belongs to Francis Ashbury. It was in the year 1788, and at the house of Thomas Crenshaw, in Hanover county, Va., and God set his seal of approval on it by anointing one of its little company to be an honored and useful minister of the gospel. Nearly five years thereafter, in 1793, the institution was formally incorporated into the church, and an ordinance passed by the Conference establishing Sunday-schools for the instruction of "poor children, white and black." The action had on that occasion is thus recorded in the minutes: "Let us labor, as the heart and soul of one man, to establish Sunday-schools in or near the place of worship. Let persons be appointed by the Bishops, elders, deacons or presbyters to teach (gratis) all that will attend and have capacity to learn, from six o'clock in the morning to ten, and from two o'clock in the afternoon till six, where it does not interfere with public worship. The council shall compile a proper school book to teach them learning and piety." And this, we are told, is the first official recognition of Sunday-schools as a distinguished department of labor by any American church. From that small beginning the movement spread rapidly in every direction until the little company became a great army. On April 2, 1847, in the city of New York, the Sunday-school Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, and at its first anniversary, 10,290 teachers, 63,240 scholars, besides 2,000 managers and visitors were reported. This society flourished until 1853, when it was merged into the Bible, Sunday-school and Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1856 this cumbersome, three-fold organization was dissolved, and in 1840, in the goodly city of Baltimore, connected with so much thrilling Methodist history, an association was formed with the old title, which has continued with wonderful success to the present day. A like progress marked the heroic enterprise of every branch of the Wesleyan family until the little cloud no larger than a man's hand overcast the broad heavens of our entire continent, and shed its life-giving waters upon almost every neighborhood. Now, instead of the small band in the Virginia cottage of Mr. Crenshaw, there are more than 50,000 Methodist Sunday-schools in the United States and Canada, taught by 410,000 teachers, and attended by 2,100,000 pupils. Connected with all denominations, we have to-day in the United States and Canada, in round numbers, 85,000 Sunday-schools, 900,000 officers and teachers, and 7,200,000 scholars—a total of over eight millions of persons actively engaged in Sunday-school work. Thus it will be seen that the Methodist represented in this Centenary Conference claim to-day nearly one-half of all the Sunday-schools and Sunday-school pupils in all the evangelical denominations of the western world.

But these bare facts and figures, marvelous as they are, do not indicate the full progress of the enterprise. The modern Sunday-school idea itself is a growth. Its first suggestion and initial development was as a moral police institution. Its avowed purpose was to restrain the depredations of ragged hoodlums upon personal property, and their shameful descriptions of the holy Sabbath. The divine idea of Christian nurture was subordinated to this end. Its second stage of progress was eleemosynary and educational, furnishing free tuition to the poor and ignorant, "white and black." Then followed the nursery idea, voiced by Mr. Wesley in his prophecy that these schools would become "nurseries for Christians." This was the popular conception of the Sunday-school's mission until the dawning, a few years ago, of the "international lesson system" of Bible study. Now it is known as the school of the church in which infant and adult, parent and child, are exhorted alike to become reverent and humble students. The scope of the Sunday-school has so enlarged that the old "nursery idea," which did long and faithful service, has been discarded, and now it is fast becoming the teaching institute of the church for old and young. At the anniversary of the American Sunday-school Union, some years ago, a distinguished teacher said: "I call such an institution our great national university—its faculty are the Christian men and women who teach in these schools; its students, the millions of American youths; its curriculum of study, beginning with Moses and all the prophets, and teaching them in all the Scriptures the things that pertain to our Lord Jesus Christ." This is a grand conception—an inspiring prospect. When it shall be more fully accomplished—when the adult population of the church shall unite with the children in the regular systematic study of God's word—a Pygah height will have been reached from which we may view the land of millennium triumph and joy. And to conform to this larger conception, at least one member of the Methodist family represented here has substituted the word "persons" for "children" in the old disciplinary statute that required a Sunday-school to be organized "wherever ten children can be found."

Now, let us consider what have been some of the direct and divine results of the Sunday-school to our beloved Methodism. And, first, it has been an efficient means of bringing souls to Christ. Multiplied thousands have been led to the Savior by this instrumental. Before the year 1846 no record was kept of the number converted to our Sunday-schools; but since then the Sunday-school Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church alone reports over one million conversions. From the best estimates I could gather the number of souls led to Christ last year by the Sunday-schools of the various bodies represented in this Centenary Conference will reach 125,000. A distinguished religious author has said: "It is a well-known fact that Sunday-schools and revivals are to a great extent identified; that the noblest triumphs of God's grace have often been found in these nurseries of knowledge, virtue and piety." The elder Dr. Tyng once said that in a ministry of thirty-one years he had received from the Sunday-schools over three hundred youths of both sexes, while two hundred others had been received from the resulting influence of previous Sunday-school instruction. And thus the church has advanced to a proper appreciation of child piety and profession. The religion of children has been depreciated because of irrational judgments and unreasonable expectations. Childhood is not to be measured and judged by the habits of sedate, matured manhood. It is folly, as a noted pulpit orator has facetiously observed, "to set the life of a vivacious child to the tune of Old Hundred." Christianity is peculiarly the religion for children. In no other religion is a child to be found. And the church has at last caught inspiration from the fact that not only are the richest sheaves gleaned from the golden harvest fields of life's springtime, but that the religion of Jesus "is better adapted to childhood than any other period of life." Secondly, it has developed and utilized vast latent resources in the church. Year by year it is commanding a larger per cent. of the ablest, best talent and consecrated piety. It is not unworthy of the ripest scholarship and most brilliant attainments. Idle pens have been kept busy to meet its growing demands. Books have multiplied on every subject that would aid to a clearer interpretation of the Scriptures. Commentaries, dictionaries, cyclopedias, maps, charts and volumes of Bible geography, chronology, biography, history, etc., have been prepared for its use. And this department of labor has become the post of honor. But it was not always so. It once was subordinate and considered effeminate, unmanly. But the jeers of the Gloucester populace at Robert Raikes; and Sophia Bradburn have been converted into peans of praise. To-day the most polished writers, profound scholars, eloquent pulpit orators, earnest evangelists and broad ecclesiastical statesmen are devoting their noblest powers to this honored and "loved employ." By the brilliant history the Sunday-school has written the church has learned that it is the spirit of a man, and God's blessing upon it, that ennobles and sanctifies position. To be a door-keeper under Divine appointment is as exalted and exalting as to wear a seraph's robes or hear the messenger of heaven on the wings of an archangel. Any work which God appoints is honorable above all earthly distinctions. And our reward is not according to position, but fidelity in it, whether high or low. The soldier who fights in the ranks is as deserving of honor as the general who plans and commands. And in the Lord's army it is so. A Sunday-school teacher occupies a place no less praiseworthy than a true minister of God, be he deacon or Bishop.

children in every place—the Sunday-school seems to have been specially appointed by Providence. In origin, synchronous with the great Methodist movement, they have been mutually helpful, and their careers alike marvelous. So while the Sunday-school has been eminently useful to all evangelical denominations, in our Methodism it has been conspicuously valuable. Preserving the fruits of a revival ministry, it has saved multitudes to the church who would otherwise have found a spiritual home in other denominations. Concerning our Methodist esprit du corps, it has attached our children to the church with intelligent convictions and tender sympathies. So true is this that, in after years, amid the memories of childhood, the church is no less vivid and distinct than the old home itself. A distinguished minister of this country, with a world-wide fame, returned unannounced after nearly forty years absence, to the home of his childhood from which he had removed at seven years of age. The place was reached at night. In the early morning he started out, without guide or inquiry of any one, to see if he could find the old homestead. But after long wandering and failure, he inquired for the Methodist church. From that point he took his bearings and went straight to the door. Three times every Sabbath he had traveled the distance from his home to the church, and that path worn smooth by his little feet could not be forgotten. So he had first to find the house of God in order to reach and recognize the home of his birth. Other streets, places and faces had faded from memory, but the way from the family altar to the Lord's temple was yet radiant and fragrant. That place is Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and that distinguished minister is a member of the Centenary Conference and the acknowledged leader of all modern Sunday-school workers, the Rev. Dr. John H. Vincent. And so this institution has bound many a child to the church by ties too strong ever to be broken by the vicissitudes of subsequent life. That it may become more and more efficient in developing a denominational vitality among us, we need to educate our children more thoroughly and specifically in the distinctive doctrines and polity of Methodism. They have only to understand our system fully to appreciate and not to understate it. We have lost much by a boasted liberality which has often degenerated into a sickly latitudinarianism. The Ecumenical Conference, which met in Old City Road Chapel, London, in 1881, issued an official address "to the ministers and members of all Methodist churches throughout the world," in which occurs this declaration and earnest exhortation: "We recognize as of the highest importance the conversion and nurture of children. To this end let them be solemnly consecrated to God in Christian baptism, and let us observe with pious care all the obligations of the baptismal covenant. . . . They should be taught at home and in all our Sunday-schools, the doctrines of our church, and be educated in all the principles of our holy Christianity." These words need the emphasis of universal practice.

Passing by many other results of this great institution which has been an inspired benediction to our Methodism, I conclude with a few words of prophecy: The church of the future that is to rank first in evangelical achievement, that accomplishes most in winning a redeemed world to Christ, is the one that will wield most wisely the divine arm of service. The work of the evangelist is to be transferred largely from the field to the school; the pulpit is not to lose its power, but the pen is to become a more potent factor. When Frederick the Great heard on a certain occasion that his army had suffered defeat, he exclaimed, "We must educate!" He would make the spelling-book defend the laurels of German chivalry. In the school-room he would rear a better disciplined and more courageous, patriotic soldiery. His words rang like a trumpet through the empire, and marvelous were the results. A distinguished writer has truly observed that "in a philosophical analysis of the forces that have wrought the autonomy of the German empire and her present greatness and glory, the chief place must be given to the kindergarten, the gymnasium and the university." And so from the church school we are to recruit the army of our Great Captain with soldiers as chivalrous and loyal as our fathers, and spiritually of a no less sturdy hewn and brain. Edmund Burke's ringing words, "Education is the cheap defense of nations," have passed into a proverb. But if I would venture a watchword for the Methodism of the next hundred years, it would be this: "Bible training is the hallmark of Christianity." A systematic and thorough knowledge of revelation is the pledge and prophecy of the church's purity and triumph. When the word of God is hid in the hearts of the people, they have a royal panoply of strength, defensive against all forms of error and offensive for the pulling down of strongholds. The forces marshaled for the overthrow of Christianity are as subtle, powerful and aggressive to-day as in any period of the past. The forms of opposition have changed, but the hostility is no less intense. Demogues best us on every hand. The achievements of the past, grand and divine as they may appear, have not purchased immunity from possible perils. And I wisely believe, Christian brethren, that among the mightiest agencies for the world's conquest is this long-neglected but now enthroned and honored department of our service. One of the early and most desperate struggles of the on-coming of our race was with an archangel for the dead body of Moses, Israel's great lawgiver. His final onset will be for the heart of the last-born child. And when folded in that, the new heavens and the new earth robed in ineffable light, will move into place to the tuneful doxologies of the redeemed of the Lord. And then if agencies as well as individuals shall be commemorated for their achievements, conspicuous among them all will find joyful, exultant mention, the school of the church.

Down at my Mississippi home, a few weeks ago, a grave was being dug and a resting place prepared for the remains of precious dead. It was discovered by the sexton that far beneath the surface the roots of a magnificent oak had woven a perfect cross in the very center of the grave. No skillful artisan could have made a pattern more beautiful out of wood or stone or marble. Without guidance of human fingers and unseen by mortal eye, the rootlets had locked in loving embrace and grown together in the form of a cross. How significant and inspiring the lesson! The God of nature had woven the symbol of his faith and triumph just over the place where the Christian soldier was to sleep. Looking upon that emblem, wrought by the unseen hands of the Eternal Father, the heart of sorrow could but exclaim, "O death, where is thy victory!" God himself had planted the promise and pledge of everlasting life right in the silent bosom of death. And so, beloved representatives of a great and numerous family, as we stand to-day over the grave of a hundred years—a grave filled with precious dust, saints and sages, of heroes and martyrs—I see the cross in which they trusted and triumphed, and the symbol of hope for a new century of grander results. By it they wrought righteousness, endured hardships and won victories. Sons of honored, heroic sires, to that cross I point you as the promise of coming years. If the next century of American Methodism is to emulate the apostolic zeal and pentecostal glory of the first, we must be true to that heaven-wrought and only symbol of "victory that overcometh the world, even your faith." That such will be its history I confidently believe, for "Faith hath still its Olivet,

And here its Galilee."

January 22, 1851: I returned last evening from Auburn, Ala., the seat of our Annual Conference. The session was a very pleasant one. Bishop Capers presided. The Sabbath exercises were very interesting. The Bishop preached an admirable discourse at eleven o'clock, after which the deacons and elders-elect were ordained. Bro. McTyeire, from New Orleans, preached at three P. M. a fine discourse, which was attended by a most gracious influence from on high. Many of the preachers were blessed, and their rejoicings and shouting were heard afar off. I scarcely ever felt a deeper consciousness of my own unworthiness and insufficiency for the great responsibility that devolves upon me. I feel that I have not improved my time and talents as I should, and am determined to amend my ways. To add to my sense of insufficiency the Bishop has appointed me presiding elder of the Columbus district, a station that I feel utterly disqualified for. I enter upon the duties and labors of this year with fear and trembling. But I trust that God will give me grace and spiritual good and the advancement of his cause and glory. I found our sunrise prayer meetings at Conference a great means of spiritual profit. I sincerely pray that all my brethren in the ministry may be sanctified and filled with the Holy Ghost and the work of holiness may revive in our Conference.

Saturday night, February 8, 1851: To-day I opened my commission on my district in Butaw, a beautiful town in Greene county, Ala. I scarcely ever felt the cross heavier than I have in coming to this place. Indeed, ever since I was appointed to the charge of the district, I have felt a load of responsibility and a sense of insufficiency that has been quite oppressive. May the Lord be with me and bless my labors and give me souls for my hire! Friday, March 14, 1851: I wrote in my diary as follows, viz.: This day has been set apart as a day of fasting, previous to the Columbus quarterly meeting. I have observed it strictly. We had a prayer meeting this morning, which was much blessed. Bro. P. I. Neely, the pastor, seems much in the spirit of religion, and there was an unusually meeting time among the members present.

I feel my deficiency very sensibly. My heart is too hard and unfeeling. I am not as spiritual as I wish to be. I feel my heart is not as pure as it should be. I am too doubled minded, too selfish, too backward to deny myself. I am proud and too much disposed to judge others. I am too pharisaic, too formal in devotion, too cold and lifeless in religion. I am too much at ease in Zion, too indifferent to the prosperity of Zion. I have to hold a quarterly meeting in Columbus to-morrow and next day. This is a heavy cross to me. I feel so incompetent to fill the important station I am called to occupy. I shrink from the task. They have

Our Young People.

A CHILD'S PRAYER.

Father, I am weak and small,
Thou the mighty Lord of all;
Yet, with tender love and care,
Thou wilt listen to my prayer:
Let me not a stranger be,
But a loving child to Thee.
Let my feeble infant feet
Walk to angel's music sweet;
Make my heart so pure from sin,
Thou canst always shine within;
Let my heavenward spirit be
Not so near to men as Thee.
Heaven is high, and earth is wide,
And my path is full of strife;
Let me love and trust Thee still,
Hold by hand, and fear no ill;
Life and death and all shall be Only as it pleases Thee.

Our Children.

DEAR CHILDREN: I trust you are all well this morning and enjoying a happy Christmas to be succeeded soon by a happy New Year's day. To see all this children happy on these annual festival days is a scene of joy and gladness to my old heart. It takes me away back in memory to the joyful seasons of my childhood and the many merry Christmas and New Year's days I spent with my wife, children and domestics in the more than half a century that I was the head of a happy family. It is still a pleasure to me to call up from the treasure house of memory the joyful reminiscences of the long ago, and this morning I entered as gleefully into the innocent merriment of the children as though I was myself a child once more. Being an early riser, I was awakened before daylight into the family room to see children opening the various packages that the mysterious Santa Claus had deposited for them during the night. As I entered the room the bright light revealed ten faces wreathed in smiles and ecstatic joy, each one anxious to show grandpapa what the ubiquitous man of universal benevolence had done for them. The elder members of the family had good books with sundry articles of utility; the larger children had sundry additions to their wardrobe with suitable books, etc.; the little ones had miniature wagons, dolls for the girls and many things too numerous to mention, and all had an indefinite supply of fruits, nuts and candies. I had not the heart to tell them to talk one at a time, but gave them up to their individual impulses, and such a chattering as I heard for half an hour I seldom hear, and all was love and innocent joy. Old grandpapa was not overlooked by our tight-heeled visitor last night. I found in my room this morning a hand basket of ample dimensions filled with sundry packages. Curiosity at once prompted to an investigation, whereupon I found sundry articles of utility just such as I need about my writing desk and on my railroad trips, with fruits, candies, raisins and nuts enough to last me until 1885. Our solitary colored tenant added somewhat to our amusement. He hung a corn sack on a peach tree near the house and expressed a hope that the man of universal good-will would not pass him by unnoticed because of his color. The first I saw of Frank, he bowed me good morning with a broad smile on his happy face, as he had just found in his corn sack some needed additions to his wardrobe with an ample supply of Christmas fruits, nuts and candy. We take no dog in our Christmas eggs which we enjoyed very much for breakfast this morning without the dog. I once knew a reformed drunkard forever ruined by his beloved sister who—not thinking of the danger—prevailed on him to take a Christmas egg with her. He had not been drunk for years and had become much respected in all the relations of life, but the fatal enemy lurked in that Christmas egg which from a sister's hand that foused up the ombers of a suspended, but not yet exterminated, thirst for alcohol, and he immediately resumed his drunken habits and, after a few years of shame and misery, he filled a drunkard's grave.

But let me tell you a little more about our happy Christmas. Two of the young ladies of our family went the round trip of a half mile before breakfast this morning—one with a basket of solid food and the other with a basket of neck-ties to supply the wants and cheer the hearts of a poor widow and her fatherless children, who were stripped of almost every thing material by what we call the Beaugard cyclone of 1883. I also bear that the Knights of Honor are now sending round their Christmas wagon loaded with provisions for the poor of our town. How Christian-like it all looks! It adds greatly to our happiness to make others happy.

Our Christmas Trees.

"Mamma, please tell us about your Christmas trees?"

Yes, children, I will. I have often told it to my own, and I would like to tell the dear children of the ADVOCATE.

"Mamma Sallie" and I had agreed to have a Christmas tree at home, for the village was two miles away, and we knew that all the little ones would not be able to enjoy the festivities of the school.

We were very busy with our arrangements and had sent a secret messenger to Santa Claus' headquarters, and in consequence on Christmas Eve, though the sleet and rain were falling in a dismal storm, a genuine Christmas box was set down at our gate. Well, we hurried the children off to bed, and we repaired to the cellar where we had stored one of the prettiest holly-bushes that our Southern forest could produce. It was as straight as an arrow, with beautiful tapering-limbs all covered with scarlet berries, and a tiny vine climbed gracefully through the emerald branches, which we took care should remain just as nature had provided. Having planted our tree in a box and removed it to the parlor and decorated it with every accessible beauty, we both stood back and admired it with satisfaction. After awhile "old Santa's box" was opened, and in it we found a lovely present for every one of the household, from the beautiful silk handkerchief for grandpa to the pretty little holly for baby. Of course "Mama Sallie" and I must arrange the gifts upon the tree, and when we finished we decided our tree was both useful and beautiful to behold.

Next morning before the first dawn of day the children began to stir, and soon rushed in to find their stockings, for we had not hindered them from hanging them up as usual on Christmas Eve. How deeply they sighed as one by one they found their stockings all empty, just as they had left them the night before. We lay still in bed watching their disappointment, and hearing them lament that Santa Claus had passed them by, and they began to wonder why it was, just then some one had occasion to peep into the parlor. It took but a moment to communicate to the rest the joyful news of "a Christmas tree" in the parlor, and quicker than I can tell, our disappointed little group found their way there, where their shouts of joy and surprise soon aroused the entire household; and when they all came in, we suggested, if they would march around the stand and sing "sweet carols," we would then distribute the treasures of the tree.

We were just disentangling the last gift from the tree when some one exclaimed: "Come see, yonder is another Christmas tree!" Now we were surprised, and we all rushed into grandpapa's room, where the first rays of the sun were streaming softly in from the eastern sky, and out through the window we looked to see the other Christmas tree. I know you would not guess; so I must tell.

When we changed our garments the night before, dear, precious grandpa had quietly taken up all the soiled garments of old and young, and there they hung in spotless cleanliness upon the old fig tree.

We all laughed heartily while grandpa gave one of his significant grunts, and as the rest turned away I stood to note that every one of our household, including grandpa, children and grand-children, had a garment waving upon the branches of the apocryphal tree. Gently came into my mind the greatness of her soul who, perhaps weary with extra toil of the day, would not sleep until her dear hands had deftly made ready a fresh garment for all. Dear grandpa, how great is her love! so like the love of our blessed Savior, whose birthday we try to commemorate with deeds of kindness.

We always love to think of our two Christmas trees, and to tell our children about them. How thankful we feel every Christmas that dear grandpa still lives to bless our hearts.

Diabetes Cured.

New Orleans Picayune, Jan. 20, 1884.

Mr. Mathias Doll, business place No. 23 North Peters street, residence Royal street, between Jeanne and Bartholomew, New Orleans, has been a most intense sufferer from kidney trouble (diabetes) for the last six long and weary years. He said to us: "Even earlier than that I frequently suffered from pain in the back, and frequent making of water, but gave it no thought until about the time stated, when the almost constant desire to make water became unendurable. The pain in the back, and sometimes in the legs, made me so lame at times that I could scarcely walk. I consulted one of the best doctors in this city, and was under his constant treatment for one entire year without deriving the least benefit. I then consulted from time to time, during the last five or six years, six or seven physicians, each one standing in the front rank of the medical profession in New Orleans, and though I sometimes was a little relieved of some excruciating suffering, yet upon the whole I was not only no better, but in many respects much worse. My limbs became swollen and sore that I could not cross my legs when sitting on a chair—all of which, they said, was caused by diabetes. I then tried some highly-lauded patent medicine. But they all turned out to be humbugs. I had given up all hopes of ever getting relief, much less being cured, when I noticed in the papers some wonderful cures that PERUNA had made in this city, as prescribed by Dr. Hartman, giving the name and address of each person treated. I called to see him; he at once prescribed his PERUNA, which is not over three weeks ago. I am so much better that I would not for any amount that I would not place myself under his treatment. All my pain and lameness is gone. The swelling and stiffness in my legs has disappeared, and instead of making water every fifteen minutes, I now make it only in three hours during the day, and only twice in a whole night. I am, indeed, quite well again. I don't hesitate, don't say humbug, but get the PERUNA at once and take it as its printed label directs, or, if you think this is only an advertisement, and not strictly true, call and see me and see for yourself."

The swelling and stiffness in my legs has disappeared, and instead of making water every fifteen minutes, I now make it only in three hours during the day, and only twice in a whole night. I am, indeed, quite well again. I don't hesitate, don't say humbug, but get the PERUNA at once and take it as its printed label directs, or, if you think this is only an advertisement, and not strictly true, call and see me and see for yourself."

A MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.—European custom prescribes that when a marriage takes place, the parents of the two young persons shall unite in a marriage settlement. The custom has much in its favor, as it secures the family against poverty. But a conversation which was heard in a Leeds tavern, some years ago, presents the custom in a light that is not attractive.

Two manufacturers, each of whom had risen by his industry and enterprise from the position of operative, met in the tavern.

"Thy lad's looking afeard my wench," said one to the other.

"What then, Jaimes?"

"What then, Joseph? What a do thou mean to do?"

"Thou speak first, Jaimes."

"Well, I'll give 'u the little factory, if I'm content."

"Well, I'll give ten thousand down and share with the rest."

"Thy's a bargain, Joseph."

"Well, then, let's have 'o'other pint on't."—Youth's Companion.

The principal excellence which the Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company claim for their new Upright Piano is that they are characterized by peculiarly pure, refined musical tones.

Their new method of construction gets rid almost entirely of that mere noise, (sound without musical pitch), which has heretofore been inseparable from the tones of this instrument. To the musically cultivated ear the Mason & Hamlin pianos certainly justify this claim. An incidental advantage which many will value almost as highly, however, is their greater durability. Any musician who examines one can see the reason for this in the fact that they use only accurate and perfectly secure metallic fastenings for their strings instead of merely winding them around pins set in wood.—Boston Journal.

THE PILLOW CURE!

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION.

THE PILLOW-INHALER is one of the most effective inventions of the age. It does what no other has done before—viz., restores the strength of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption by a continuous application of Medicated and Curative Air to the diseased mucous membranes of the air-passages of the nose, throat and lungs. It makes a radical and permanent cure.

Lungs and Throat Diseases Claim One in every Ten of the Death Rate. The Pillow-Inhaler has and will positively cure them.

Most people who have Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption have tried from one to a dozen different remedies without being cured. Why have they not been cured? Simply because what they took were not cures. How is a snuff to get into all the intricate air-passages and in the blood for Catarrh is a constitutional disease? It is a disease of the blood, and the blood is the only place where the cure can be made. The Pillow-Inhaler is a snuff that gets into the blood, and the blood is the only place where the cure can be made.

Obituaries.

LAKE.—Miss. CLEMENTINE J. LAKE was born in Dorchester county, Maryland, January 19, 1815, and died at Ocean Springs, Miss., August 4, 1884. She was married to Vio. Lake, Sept. 19, 1836. At a camp meeting held in her native county during her girlhood, she was soundly converted to God, and united herself with the Methodist Church. Immediately after her marriage she removed to Grenada, Miss., where she continued to reside until her death. For many years she was an invalid, and deprived of a great extent of her services in the church, and could not engage in active work for that cause which she loved so well. These years of great bodily affliction, were years of discipline and wonderful spiritual growth. Our heavenly Father was fitting her for the great usefulness which marked the closing years of her life. When her health was restored, her place in the church was never vacant when possible to get there. She never failed, when she reached her seat, to lift her heart to God in silent prayer for his blessing on the services of the hour. She loved the church and her pastor, and did what she could for each. It was a great pleasure to visit her, read a chapter from her well worn Bible and pray with her. The writer of this humble tribute can never forget her words of encouragement, and tender solicitude for himself and family. The memory of it is as precious a treasure as any of her life. An ideal of what a Christian should be, was a beautiful one, and she endeavored by God's grace to realize it. She added to her faith all of the other graces, and walked in all sincerity and godliness before the Lord. Naturally very timid and shrinking, she was only fully known by her intimate friends and in the inner circle of her own home. Both by precept and example she impressed the truths of her religion on her children, all of whom are members of the church of God. In July last she went with an invalid daughter to Ocean Springs. When she left her home she seemed to be in perfect health. On the morning of Aug. 4 she seemed to be only slightly indisposed, but was impressed with the idea that she would die very soon. She entered into a religious conversation with a lady friend sitting by her bedside. She remarked that she felt that God was unwearily and that she was ready whenever the summons came. Only a few moments after, the messenger did come and carry her pure spirit to the bosom of God. The news of her death came quickly, and the children whom she loved so well were sorely bereaved. A full, ripe and long life, followed into the Master's garner. The rich aroma of a pure and holy life still lingers among us, and the example of fifty years spent in the Master's service is our heritage.

ARANT.—Died near Lind Grove, La., of swamp fever, PHILIP A. ARANT, son of our aged and esteemed brother, Nathaniel S. Arant, of Morehouse parish, La.

Another Philip was a young man just entering his twenty-eighth year, of life and hope, and looking forward to many years of usefulness in the Methodist Church, of which he had been a member ever since early boyhood. Trained by a father who loved his church, it is no wonder he became, early in life, devotedly attached to the altar at which his father had worshiped so long, and over which he had the warmest feelings of love for his Christ, and especially for those of his own communion. He was a faithful attendant upon the worship of God, and loved to live with religious people.

His sickness was of short duration. He died calmly and peacefully, and with trust, in full hope of everlasting life. His little babe, a few months old, died two hours after his death, and was buried in the same grave. He leaves a wife and child, aged parents and brethren to follow on. May our heavenly Father comfort them in their affliction.

EDWARDS-AMMON.—Edwards was born in Wilkes county, Georgia, April 10, 1803, and died in Dale county, Ala., Oct. 6, 1884, in triumph of the Christian's faith. He was happily married to Emeline J. Gaudin Oct. 4, 1827, in Bibb county, Georgia. In 1829 he moved to Talbot county, Ga., and in 1839 he settled in Russell county, Ala., where in August of the same year he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was baptised converted to God, in which faith and communion he lived a consistent and devoted member to the day of his death. He was the father of eleven children, five of whom have preceded him in the life beyond, and the other six (all sons) are trying to follow in the footsteps of their father; one a minister of the gospel, four are superintendents of Sabbath-schools, and the other a church secretary.

No wife ever had a more devoted husband, and no children a more affectionate father. His greatest ambition in life was to do good and see his children good and honorable. Of the seven boys he raised to be men, not a man drank or a profane swearer was in the number. For many years he was a practical steward of the church, when the mantle fell upon his oldest son. He was a man of great will power, but was always conservative in his intercourse with his fellowmen. Few men were ever more instrumental in settling difficulties than he. While he was deprived of an early education, yet his practical good sense always gave him first rank in the country where he lived.

The last thirty years of his life was spent in Dale county, Ala. The writer was with him day and night the greater portion of his last sickness, and such patience he hardly ever witnessed. The only thing that seemed to trouble him was leaving his aged and devoted companion, who had shared his joys and sorrows through a married life of fifty-seven years. What a happy reunion it will be when the companion who still lingers on the shores of time, only wait for the summons, and the children all meet, if faithful, around the throne of God.

MCKENZIE.—SARAH M. MCKENZIE, Black Mt., was born near Raleigh, Smith county, Miss., in the year 1839. In her seventeenth year she was married to Daniel C. McKizle. Their married life, though a happy one, was brief, being only about three years when he died, leaving her with two little children. It was then she waked up to her great responsibilities and her inability to meet them without the assistance of God's great grace, as such, she began seeking the salvation of her soul. And one morning at home, while on her knees before God, supplicating at a throne of mercy, the voice of love reached her heart, in the sweetest accents she knew his voice. It was her Lord. She then knew she had been converted. When a little girl, she said she had the same feelings, but did not know that was religion, for she was too young to judge for herself and none to tell her so. She lost her first love, but never became a happy Christian. In the year 1861 she received her into the Methodist Church, in which communion she lived faithfully and truly all her days, and in the faith of Christ she died. Sister McKizle was naturally as good as she could be, and when she became a Christian she was one of the very best women—active, joyous, sweet spirited, loved by all that knew her, until she was stricken with sorrow and disease that laid her low upon a bed of suffering for many months; but she loved submissively and kissed the rod that had smitten her with pain and sorrow even to the last, and on Aug. 25, 1884, in her father's home (Major Blackwell), in the town of Forest, Miss., she fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. She leaves a son, a young man preparing for the ministry, and a sweet, pious daughter, with many other loved ones, to mourn that she is gone. But griefs not, ye stricken ones, your Sarah is in heaven, where she will weep and sorrow no more forever.

A. D. NICHOLSON.

LEWIS.—ROBERT L. LEWIS was born in Lauderdale county, Miss., Oct. 15, 1855. He was married to our daughter, Miss Julia P. Armstrong, Nov. 14, 1878. Professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. George Underwood, September 1877, and from that time until death he lived a consistent Christian. He died at 4 o'clock on the morning of Nov. 25, 1884. Oh! he was so good and pure a man. His house had been the home of himself and wife for the last eight years. He was all kindness to us in our old age. Oh! we are ruined now. No one can care for us as dear Robert. I can say truthfully that I never heard him use an improper word, or the least out of temper. He died of typhoid pneumonia. He called his wife and two little girls and embraced them, and told them to meet him in heaven. He requested me to raise his children; but oh, my God, I am so old and infirm that I can't expect to live to do that. But the God of his father will take care of them. He called me to his bed and said, "I'm going to die, but I am going to heaven." "Pa, perhaps I have not all three lived as prayerfully as I ought, but then I prayed regularly, and I am prepared to die. My way is clear for heaven." His home was always the home of the weary traveler. He was always glad to see and care for them. His poor, dear wife, and little girls will miss him, but none can miss him more than wife and self in our old age.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

But few families put wearing apparel and house linen in the "wash" every week of less value than twenty-five dollars, and fewer still consider that the addition of three cents at the most, to the price of the soap used each week will be a positive saving of as many dollars, for the majority of soaps sold are too powerful, so will burn and rot the fabrics. Prof. Langley, of University of Michigan, says, "The Ivory Soap can not injure any fabric."

Free of charge. A full size cake of Ivory Soap will be sent to one who can get it of their grocer for two cents, to pay postage, are sent to the grocer, and the grocer sends it to the customer. Please mention this paper.

HUMILITY.

The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground its lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Sings in the shade when all things rest.
In dark and midnight we see,
What hinders hallow humility.

The saint that wears heaven's highest crown
In deepest adoration kneels;
The light of glory flows in down
Then most when most his soul ascends.
Nearest the throne, itself must be
The foot-stool of humility.
—Southern Churchman.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: After the horrible scenes which occurred on the capture of the city, things seemed to quiet down; but there was one disturbing element. The French unceremoniously took possession of the city, and that caused unpleasant feelings among the natives against foreigners, and this continued for some months.

The young missionaries of our little band went to work in good earnest to master the colloquial language of this people. Their first desire was to be able to communicate to them the blessed truths of the gospel of Christ, and to give to them a practical knowledge of the plan of salvation through Jesus. Up to this time we had not been able to attempt much direct effort for the spiritual welfare of the people, because we could speak sufficiently well to be understood. Our little church had been destroyed, so that our native preacher, Bro. Liew, had to preach on the street, in temples and wherever he could get an open space of ground. His home was near the city, and in the midst of all the troubles. At one time the government soldiers entered his house at night and robbed him of almost everything he had. When he could, he went with us to our little chapel in the country and to the dispensary, and there he would preach to those poor people in as plain language as it was possible to do. The first six months was a time of toil and preparation to us. It was to me a great trial to see so many thousands of my fellow-men around me in total spiritual darkness and yet not be able to tell them something of the love of Jesus. I did at times try to hammer out some message of truth to those around me, for I felt it was my duty to use every effort to give them the gospel of our blessed Savior. I was often conscious that the truth was sown in weakness; but I tried never to look at what I was doing or could do, but at what Jesus had commanded and what he had promised, and my soul was often blessed when I could see no fruits of my labors.

About this time, March, 1855, Mrs. Lambuth took in her first Chinese pupil, a little girl whose name was Siadoc. She was but eight years of age and not able to read, neither did she know even the name of Jesus. She was brought into our family and taught from the beginning, only how to read, but to sew, to do all house-work and to do much fancy work. When Mrs. Lambuth opened her first school in 1856, she was the first and most advanced pupil. Her father and mother were heathen, but her grandmother was a Christian. Her father died of consumption, and it soon became evident that Siadoc was consumptive. She was not naturally intelligent, but was a good girl in all her deportment. In 1861, when we returned to the United States, she went to her grandmother's house, and after lingering three years in consumption she died believing in the Lord Jesus. She had some time before joined the Episcopal Church, in which her grandmother was a member. She died in peace and in full hope of eternal life.

About the last of March I opened my first school in a country village with fifteen boys. The distance from my house was a little over a mile. I visited the school two or three times a week and once on Sabbath. In April, 1855, I made my first effort to preach to the school and to the people in the village. Well do I remember that Sabbath and how the people gathered in the little room to overflowing to hear the foreword to try to speak their language. Many stood at the door and among the number were many women and girls. I remember some of them peeped through the holes in the paper window, and when there was no opening in the paper they made one or more with their fingers, all eager to get a sight of the foreigner and hear what he had to say. I was a great show both to old and young, and they listened freely my appearance, my clothes, eyes, hair, etc., and yet they were all very respectful. He would often say, "How white he is and how long his hair is!" Many times did the boys come to the edge of the village when they saw me coming in the distance and call out pleasantly, "Lan-sen-san, morning mung, ha la vah?" ("Lan, teacher, we come to greet you, how are you?") The little school-room was a ground floor and often quite damp. The seats were hard, wooden stools, and not a picture or ornament of any kind in the room. In the course of time I had the ten commandments, the creed and the Lord's prayer. I tried faithfully to lead them to Christ, and it may not be revealed to us in this life what good was done in Jesus' name in that little village, but we shall know hereafter. It was for the good of those poor people I labored and for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom among them.

About this time Dr. Kelley opened a dispensary in another village in the country. I often accompanied him to help him in dispensing the medicine given and relieving the distressed. I learned then a great deal of the spoken language of the Chinese and became acquainted with many of their customs. It was new work for us and it brought us into direct contact with all the country people in all their simplicity and profound ignorance. Every day revealed to us the solemn fact that we were living among a heathen people. "Dead in trespasses and sins" and without a knowledge of God. They knew nothing of the light of the glorious gospel of Christ and were full of all superstition and wickedness. The words they often uttered in our presence were shocking to us when we knew their true significance—words and expressions we would not place upon paper in any shape or form. Many a time have I been truly thankful to an Episcopal minister, a brother missionary, who told me soon after my arrival in China it would be well to turn a deaf ear to all such expressions and never allow my teacher to explain any of them to me. He said he had taken some trouble to analyze them, to get at their true meaning, and he had always regretted it, for he was shocked to hear these vile expressions every day when on the street. I have followed his advice and have never at any time sought to explain them to them. Some of them I could not hear and understand. We did not allow our children to go upon the street among the people unless we were along with them or some Christian person. Oh, the depth of the wickedness of the heathen around us! No tongue can fully express the violence and immorality of the life and conversation of the vast multitudes of those with whom we came in contact every day.

The women, too, seemed to us to be in a most degraded and unhappy condition. Here were these poor, ignorant heathen mothers, listening to the vile language uttered by their sons, and yet there was seldom, if ever, a word of remonstrance uttered. They had not the Christian religion to elevate and refine as in our own native land. Mrs. Lambuth, seeing this, determined from the very first to do what she could to educate and Christianize China's mothers and daughters. At first we found much opposition from many Chinese, and none would allow their daughters to come to any of our schools unless we paid their mothers ten copper cash (one cent) a day. We both felt that a great work was to be done in the education of the women of China, and there was no difficulty in missionary ladies reaching the great majority. There were no closed "zenanas" here as in India. Many of the women are secluded, but thousands in this part of China are accessible, especially in the country. Thousands in humble dwellings welcome the missionary and his wife to their houses, and this gave us great encouragement to hope for the blessing of God upon our efforts, though they were very feeble. We praise God that our labor in that direction has not been without its fruit. We have seen native women who had experienced the power of the grace of God in their hearts speaking in the most loving and tender manner to their heathen sisters who were strangers to this power. We have seen men and women who, by their humble Christian conduct, were "living epistles" to all their heathen neighbors. They were truly "lights in dark places." Many of these native Christian women have been of great assistance to Mrs. Lambuth in her work among heathen women, visiting among families, instructing women and children and teaching them how to pray. We met with many difficulties, annoyances and discouragements, yet we found it to be through the blessing of God a work of love. The missionary work was not all sunshine, but we felt it was done for Jesus and in direct obedience to his command. This made our crosses, trials and discouragements become a pleasure and a joy to our hearts.

Yours in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Fitches and Cumins.

The prophet uses these two words in a beautiful figure to illustrate the truth that we ought not to use means too great to the accomplishment of the end. Men do not thresh fitches with a threshing machine, but with a staff; nor cumins with a cart wheel, but with a rod. Machinery of an expensive character may thresh as well; but the amount to be threshed will not justify the use of it. Fitches and cumins were not cultivated on a large scale because there was not a large demand. In a small way they are profitable, but not otherwise. The countryman who had use for a ginnet was not wise in buying a barrel of ginnets, though by so doing he got them cheap enough if he could sell out to have a hundred ginnets clear. Again, fitches and cumins could not be transported to a central point and pay for the threshing. Yet I once knew a tenant upon a gentleman's plantation who offered him a fair price for his little cotton and corn as it was upon his place. The tenant thought the landlord was oppressing him. He went and hired a team at four dollars a day to haul six hundred pounds of seed cotton three miles to a gin upon another plantation. Then he had to wait till it was ginned and packed; then he had to haul the seed to one place two miles away, and then to market with the cotton five miles. It is not surprising that this man remains poor. And his name's Brigade.

I wish to notice some fitch-and-cumin crops:

1. A wealthy father once brought me a wisp of a boy whom he wanted sowed down in German, French, Latin and about six sciences. There was hardly a full-grown chick-pea in him. After trying him for awhile I was frank enough to tell the father that there was not timber in him to make the ribs of the "Great Eastern." I gave moral advice. That boy went to one of the finest colleges in the South, and hundreds of dollars annually were spent upon him; but a chick-pea pod grew where the father wanted a pumpkin every time. The father has yet to learn that that pea-head will not be any larger after soaking in the original Plerian spring than in a duck puddle.

2. Others sow fitches and cumins in learning trifles. They are wonderfully patient and careful in doing things that when done are worthless. I knew a college graduate to spend half an hour peeling an orange. He would fight a wind-mill all day and sleep on his arms at night. The only way to stop the war was for the wind-mill to surrender or retreat under cover of night.

3. There is much fitch and cumin in both Church and State in regard to education. For example, brick and mortar are being substituted for analytical training. Kludergarten begin with object lessons. The "in-qui-tiveness of the child, which so often asks such difficult questions, is stifled." The answer is presented objectively, and he is taught to receive that as all. Then come the immense buildings and endless apparatus of the lecture-room. The graduate comes out, and his ideas of science are bounded by the machinery and experiments of the lecture-room. The young doctor comes home full of the notion that, after dissecting a dead body and mastering the medical terminology, he knows it all. The world's greatest teachers taught their pupils to analyze.

4. The fitch-and-cumin crop in the church is what our style leaders call cultus. This is merely O-car Wild-is in holy orders. There is an immense acreage sown both among clergy and laity. The use of those two words indicates its presence. Thirty years ago I never heard those terms except by the church. This cultus goes alongside the cry for education. They are not in themselves objectionable; but men ought not to expect either or both of them to cure sin or crime. The grossest sins and blackest crimes known to the laws of God or man are entirely compatible with the most refined cultus in religion and the highest intellectual training in science or art. The incense and awkward are not generally those who corrupt morals. Corruption begins and spreads most rapidly among the refined and cultivated.

5. There is too much appeal made to the sensual and selfish. Worldly ends and worldly motives are urged to induce men to become religious. We preach a good deal of religion, but very little Christianity. Our ditch patch is made larger than our corn field. It is a great pity sometimes that organizations, religious as well as political, have such vigorous constitutions. The members come to regard themselves as exponents of a particular factor of the world's religious or political life. Large areas of mind are pre-empted or bought up by this syndicate and devoted to fitches and cumins. All the appliances and fixtures look to this one end, and whatever the advantages of soil and climate for something else, it is rightly excluded. One day in August I passed a farm in which grass was larger than cotton. The owner was tugging at the great turfs and sweating and swearing profusely. "Jake," said I, "were I you, I'd let that grass grow and save hay instead of cotton." "No, I shan't," he answered, sulkily; "I've set out to make cotton and kill grass, and I'll do it if it takes all summer."

There is another meaning to the prophet's figure which touches the sublime. "Do men thresh fitches with a threshing instrument?" Do you think that all the preparations of Providence, the mighty struggles of empires, the intense longings of the heart and mind after the unrealized, but ideal good, are for nothing? Is the sowing of the All-wise but a ditch crop—inferior food for horses, asses and cattle? Are the wonderful revelations of both inspiration and science merely for the perishable and now is, but to-morrow goes into nothing? Do not distress yourselves. The mighty machinery means a vast crop. There will be something better than the establishment. Pass along the immense rooms of the building—admire and praise. But the Architect is not building for admiration or praise.

From one end to the other the wheels, hands and other machinery shall be set in motion—not for motion's sake or the display of power, but for the preparation for use of the mighty crop which must be housed and turned into bread for the world. Pass along the hall of God's truth in history or revelation, study the masonry of the temple not made with hands. Grand in its vastness and its wondrous mechanism, but grander when we know that its solemn services, imposing ritual, inspiration and record are but preparatory to the garnering of that crop.

Which through the ages grown Shall ripen by the sun and dew,
And from their fields in harvest season
Be garnered in the sky.

The English Department in Southern Colleges.

To the Editor of the New York Nation.

SIR: A regular reader of the Nation often feels that its editor is keenly alive to any token of better things in the South. One of the most recent signs is the kind and encouraging notice taken of two thoughtful letters which were written by Prof. Shepherd for the Raleigh, N. C. Chronicle. Such articles are not uncommon in Southern papers. The chronicler, needless to say, is not all his work. Prof. Shepherd is right. We think in stating that the South has in the last ten years, made wonderful strides in educational progress. In such matters there was never before the Civil War one tithe of the interest that is now shown in almost every Southern State. But this interest has not yet reached the schools that prepare for college—then academies. During the war they were, as a rule, discontinued, and since then the common schools and the small so-called colleges have usurped their place. Those well acquainted with the South have to admit that Prof. Charles F. Smith's article in the Atlantic Monthly, (October, 1884), is only too true a statement of the facts. North Carolina has a Bingham's, Tennessee a Wells's and Virginia a McCabe's, a Hancock Academy, a Pantons, and perhaps, one or two more. But I dare assert that not one-third of the students graduated from these academies can enter the Freshman class of Harvard College. All the rest of the South can not add five more such schools to the list. Hence we find "preparatory schools" connected with almost every Southern institution of learning.

But the following statement is especially misleading: "There is not a college in the State (North Carolina) in which the study of English is not subservient to the wishes or the convenience of every other department, living by mere subsistence. The result is, as this writer points out, that students feel a sort of contempt for the study of English. The condition of affairs is not confined to North Carolina. In nearly all Southern colleges, teachers who, like Prof. Shepherd himself, are earnestly engaged in the attempt to inspire students with a proper appreciation of their own speech, and to present to them the results of English philology, have to encounter the apathy of regents and trustees, and to overcome the distrust of pupils, who have been taught to regard purity of idiom as coming 'by nature.'" (Nation, No. 1014, p. 482.)

I have been associated with three Southern institutions—two colleges and one university—and the trustees of all three have taken a warm interest in the study of English. Last June the trustees of the University of ———, becoming ashamed of the bad English of its graduates, made provision for a professorship of English, but the measure was defeated by the chancellor of that university. He even went so far in his opposition as to write against the proposed measure. But regents and trustees can take care of themselves.

About fifteen years ago a teacher of Greek in Randolph-Macon College, Virginia, conceived the happy thought of placing the study of English alongside the study of Greek, Latin and mathematics, both in time and in importance. Ever since that time the study of English has been the most important study in that excellent college. Prof. Thomas R. Price, present professor of English in Columbia College, New York, was that teacher. Ten years later he gave his experience as a teacher of English to some of our teachers in Virginia in these words: "Thus, in my experience I have seen countless young men that would not be either driven or led into a faithful study to Latin or Greek, turn with eager desire and with persevering zeal to the study of English. I have seen the study of English spread like a conflagration through all the grades of ungraduates till even the lowest and the feeblest were moved to labor for an object that, even the dullest could appreciate as desirable."

For this statement I can vouch, for I was one of 237 students who caught the contagion, and this I had thought was the experience of every earnest teacher of English in Southern colleges.

Of these teachers there are many more than the above quotation would lead one to believe. Virginia can show four well-taught departments of English, one in each of the following institutions: The University of Virginia, Washington and Lee University, Randolph-Macon College and Hampden-Sydney College. The University of South Carolina and Wofford College, S. Carolina, have each an excellent teacher of English. Each of the following universities and colleges is trying to do thorough work in English: Bethel College, Centre College and Kentucky Military Institute, in Kentucky; Emory College, Georgia; the University of Alabama; the University of Mississippi; Tulane University, Louisiana; the University of Texas, and Vanderbilt University, Tennessee. The Southwestern Baptist University, Tennessee, and the Southwestern University, Texas, have each recently called an energetic, scholarly young teacher to organize a thorough study of the mother tongue. With most of these teachers I am personally acquainted, and I know what kind of work they are trying to do.

In most of the above-mentioned institutions English is associated with some other study, but want of funds is almost invariably the cause. Four have separate and distinct departments of English. Vanderbilt University, the University of Mississippi, the University of Alabama and the University of Virginia. Vanderbilt University is an example of what the new South will do for the study of English when it has a good opportunity. An entrance examination on English is required just as on Greek, Latin and mathematics. The course of study in English runs parallel with that in those three departments. The same number of men are at work in each of the four departments. No degree of the university is given without a thorough study of the English language and literature. This plan has been pursued three years and a half, and this year the department of English shows a larger number of students than the department of modern languages had four years ago. In that one department there were two teachers, in the two separate and distinct departments there are six.

In other respects, too, the South is not altogether behind. Ginn, Heath & Co. are now publishing, for the first time in America, a series of Anglo-Saxon texts. Of the seven editions of "The Library of Anglo-Saxon Poetry" the editor-in-chief and four others are Southerners. At present there are several young Southerners studying English philology in Germany, and I know several others who will go to Germany for that purpose as soon as they can make money enough to pay their way.

You will pardon the words South and Southern necessarily used so often in this letter, for a constant reader of the Nation for eight years could not use those words in a sectional sense; but I do not wish to have the part of our common country in which I am now living misrepresented.

Threadgill, H. L. Vaughn. The Minutes will be out of press and ready for delivery in about three weeks, and I will mail to every preacher ten copies.

MACON, MISSISSIPPI. J. M. BOON.

Bishop McTear has a genius for saying apt things in a striking way that must be read and remembered. In a recent letter to the young editor of the Texas Advocate he says:

"As one who has been in your place, let me advise you, for your own soul's comfort, to preach every Sunday somewhere. Have regular times and places if you can. I will do others good and help you to keep the center of gravity in the right place."

Conventional Methodism is a fact of war and power; however, a provincial or local article, I love Methodism in Alabama, but save me from Abolition Methodism, from Tennessee Methodism, from Georgia Methodism. Methodism in Texas has a great outlook; but see you to it that there shall never be a Texas Methodism.

PAUL AT ATHENS.

BY REV. D. M. DUBOIS.

Mid Athens' splendor-forms
And sculpture, capital, and less mine
Of every age the least and prize—
The temple of the gods of Greece.
The temple of the gods of Greece.
The temple of the gods of Greece.

Through all the morning depths
The night soul, with its love alone,
The chain of man enthralled;
The grooving fear that fixed his shame
And shed its light on learning's home.
The grooving fear that fixed his shame
And shed its light on learning's home.

To gods of lands unknown, unseen,
Altars with smoking victims
And incense of the East and West,
Bow'd down and drunk with wine,
Unhappy times, degenerate days,
When god-like men's souls were
In chains; not fear, not valor
To meet the soul's insidious foe.

And this is Athens! This is she Who, first of states in freedom won,
And mistress of the East and West,
Turned ancient empire back to scorn.
To cleanse her robes from dark disgrace,
Narcissus' self she gazed in vain;
To rouse the slumbering, fallen race,
Is Sparta's hand the torch of Greece.

Where Mars, by Pegasus led,
And Athena, by the owl, led,
That hill where oft in centuries dead
Came judgment on the helpless good—
Fixed as the base of some great pyramid,
Or ancient rock removed by flood,
Headless of crime, hate or evil pride,
Confounding all, the hill stood good.

Ye angels lost in heavenly high court,
Look down on deeds of earth and hell;
The souls that leave the King's report,
In stillness, message to the soul,
Ye holy years of wasted power,
Stand reverent round the machine scene,
Equal things equal the hour
When God enters with mortal men.

Like some dead evil's dire portent,
Brooding above that solemn hill,
Bat suppliant, dumb and dumb,
Yet stern as death and awful still,
The eagle, from the sky and earth, greets
Whose fate is Athens' falling tide,
Who holds the world in death or life,
Standing upon this vanished spot.

With brilliant tower and temple crown,
As if to force the hindering skies
To applaud the triumph of the crown,
In end in pride, above the Acropolis,
With Trojan shield of seven-fold base
And spear above Peloponnesus,
Falls Athens, maddened with martial grace,
Guarded the hollow ground.

Glorious Greece! her myrtle will
For the mild, new day of truth,
That has a spell that ye shall thrill
The long procession of the coming years;
But lo! ye shall soon come to feel Man's pulsing thought; their echoes be Through ages born, with ceaseless swell,
Like billows of the troubled sea.

Hear now that voice by Heaven provoked:
"Ye know ye name the Almighty One,
Whose form from word from nothing evoked
The earth and sea, the sky and sun;
Who launched the first light's primal gleam
Restless shape of conquering light;
Who filled with life the fruitful womb;
Who, increase, resides to night."

"One Father's offspring, brethren all,
And kindred of the world, one voice
Shall breathe its force; one end befall:
One common hope of life and joy;
For sinning dead shall quit the mould,
Reborn, and life with glory play
Before the chosen Judge of all Is done, in the judgment day."

Why love ye, then, to senseless stone,
When one of might unseen is near?
When one of grace and love alone,
Why shed ye blood to nameless fate?
Ye groping souls in darkness lost,
Seeking, ye ignorant of the life,
Trust not to shrine or altar's host,
Receive the name that is life's life!

From over the blue Aegean Sea,
Where first was heard the voice of song
To build in olden melody, Came early wisdom from the Isles among,
To end within thy sheltering groves
A safe retreat from vulgar hate;
And by the deeds that wisdom loves Supernal wish in man create.

Trouble names are false, and deathless need,
And boasted oracles that taught
Ere this the world the helpless creed,
And term life in the life brought Things that were never meant to be;
And this is Athens' latest word;
But wisdom's call is come to-day,
A voice, before thou ever had heard.

$334.

CENTENARY OFFERING OF MAJ. WILLIAM BARNETT.

The giver of the above offering is now ninety-two or ninety-three years old. In early life he gave himself to God, and since that time has given much of his means and time to the service of the church. Having served as a steward for many years, he was the preacher's sure and kind friend. At our last Quarterly Conference he declined the office any longer, as he was too old; but, like the palm tree, whose fruit is sweetest in its last years, he bears fruit in old age—and precious fruit it is. The above sum pays for a church in the town of Hickory, Miss., complete and ready for dedication. It leaves a sweet fragrance of love, and is an example of munificence to be commended. Having almost finished his work, this gift crowns his life gracefully, and leaves him, with feeble step and dimmed vision, ready to bid adieu to earthly labor and joy, to loved ones and friends, to enter into the rest of a better life. May he have no abundant entrance administered to him above in the prayer of his retiring pastor,

J. W. ELLISON.

Wine for the Lord's Supper.

The discussions of this subject at the last session of the Mississippi Conference, and various other similar ones all over the church, show abundantly that the matter must be inquired into. The floor of a Conference is not the best place to do it. Everything there is impromptu; not one in forty has ever studied the subject. The following practical thoughts are submitted for the consideration of my brethren for what they are worth.

First, I do not consider it necessary to go to the Scriptures for any literal, critical, chemical or commercial examination of the word "wine," or to find out the exact mode of manufacture or miraculous production, as intimated in the second chapter of John. I will not believe in any exegesis of this text that makes Jesus increase an already prevalent intoxication, if there was any, on that occasion.

Second, The very ancient history of wine, like all other ancient history, is enveloped in much darkness and uncertainty; but since about the year 500 B. C. it is pretty clearly understood. Since about that period and until recently wine was made out of grape juice exclusively. There were a great many varieties of wine; about fifty kinds are well known, and of intoxicating qualities from almost non-intoxicating to such as contain alcohol equal to about one-third or one-half the proportion of that in brandy.

Third, As to fermented and unfermented wines, the following seems to be the case. All commercial wine is fermented in the process of manufacture; but this is but one of several different processes. This fermenting is done partly by exposing it to the atmosphere, and partly by a variety of other modes, according to the kind of grape, climate, weather, etc. No grape juice will ferment if kept strictly in air-tight vessels from the first. Unfermented wine, or simple grape juice, is non-intoxicating. This is not an article of commerce. But in order for us who live now to look into the subject before us there is no need that we inquire into the history or mode of manufacturing the various kinds of wine, any kind of commercial liquor, called wine. The word "wine" does not describe, indicate or point out any particular kind of liquor. All liquor in every liquor house in the land, containing considerably less alcohol than those most intoxicating, such as are called whisky, brandy or gin, is flavored and colored to suit purchasers, and called wine, with no sort of reference to the materials out of which it is made. Whatever is cheapest is best. Almost all vegetable matter contains sugar, which is the chief base for making alcohol. Few things are better or cheaper for making wine or any other kind of liquor than market-house garbage, such as rotten potatoes, beans, cabbage and decayed vegetables of all kinds. The market-houses furnish thousands of tons of this material every morning. Any kind of decayed vegetable works into wine with facility and profit.

Fourth, The present mode of manufacturing liquor of all kinds is a very recent invention. What is now called distilling, and which, with its various improvements, includes all kinds of liquor making, was invented by a French chemist in 1801. This invention, or discovery, thoroughly revolutionized all liquor making. Before that time wine was made of grapes or chiefly of grapes. Whisky was made of rye or other small grain, etc.; but this distilling process of Mr. Adam—for that was his name—introduced to the liquor makers almost every kind of vegetable matter. This process, or those various processes, are now so perfected and simplified that the best experts can not ascertain whether certain wines, brandies or whiskies are made chiefly of grapes, cabbage, apples, rotten hay, green walnuts or market garbage in mass. It is idle to talk about grapes in wine.

Fifth, Now, what about sacramental wine? Do we want "wine" merely—that is, commercial liquor called by that name—or do we want wine made of the juice of grapes? When our Savior appeared incarnate it became obviously necessary to change the mode of administering the personal sacrament, for the former way pointed forward to that which is now past. So, at the last Passover, "as they were eating, Jesus took bread and blessed and broke it, and he gave to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body." And he took a cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the covenant, which is shed for many unto remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it with you in my Father's kingdom." (Matthew xxvi, 26-29, N. V.) The other accounts vary but very slightly in terms—none in meaning.

There is no doubt but the Savior on that occasion ate unleavened bread, and we may with equal confidence set it down that he drank unleavened wine. Then, what does this prove touching our duty now? The bread and wine are used only as symbols. The Lord's Supper gives outward expression to the personal sacrament or obligation. We might use light bread or manufactured wine—the former made of wheat or corn, and the latter of potatoes or cabbage, if we could do no better; but it certainly becomes us to formulate our service as near as we can to the Divine model. Can we do this? Mere grape juice is not never was commercially considered or valued wine, though it has been and, in rare cases, is now the chief and, in rarer cases still, the almost sole ingredient out of which wine is made. Can we procure for general use among the churches non-fermented, non-alcoholic and non-intoxicating wine, grape juice, or whatever it may be called? This question is not so easily answered as some might suppose.

It is said that certain wine dealers keep pure unfermented grape juice on sale under guarantee of purity. That is possible, but not probable; and, if so, it would be of little or no use to the churches. Such wine must be immediately, on being expressed from the grape, put carefully into strong air-tight packages, and used immediately on being opened. If the weather be as warm as sixty degrees, fermentation and the formation of alcohol begins at once. Non-alcoholic wine must be consumed the day it is expressed, or certainly the next day, or, if kept perfectly airtight, immediately on being opened.

Sixth and lastly, I see no way practicable for the churches to procure and use non-intoxicating wine but the two following ways. And I might as well say here that I write by the book, having before me what are said or supposed to be the best extant treatises on the history and manufacture of wine.

It can not be procured from wine merchants or liquor dealers. It is not nor never was an article of commerce except in the near vicinity of the vineyard, where it is consumed the same day or the next after being expressed. The "guarantee" of the dealer is the result of ignorance or something else. He can guarantee nothing.

Mild non-intoxicating wine may be had by buying from the nearest saloon or liquor house the best you can get. One place is as good as another, and one kind of wine is as good as another. If not expressed from the cluster yesterday, or kept perfectly airtight and just now opened, it is manufactured alcohol, chemically mediated and sweetened to taste and to make it sell. Take this liquor and dilute it with water to three parts water and one of liquor, or about that degree. Now, you have mild liquor, and as well entitled to the name of "wine" as any liquor that can be furnished by ordinary commerce. Somebody said to the milkman that he preferred to mix it himself. The milk is the same whether watered at the dairy or the breakfast table.

Again, and according to my taste, a better way: Let the wine be expressed from the grape on Saturday and used in the church on Sunday. This is practicable, easy and, to my mind, unobjectionable everywhere. The best wine grapes are frequently found more profitable as ship and soil in the cluster than to make them into wine. Such grapes are a common article of commerce and on sale everywhere. The French word "raisins" does not change or adulterate their character in the least. The mode of preparing and shipping grapes is exceedingly simple. When ripe they are cut through the vines, so as to separate the clusters from the main vines, where they dry in the sun, and then are packed in boxes, marketed and sold. They undergo no change except drying out the water. In this state they keep well for almost any length of time. There is no chance for adulteration.

And now, by the simplest process of decoction, the water taken away is restored, and then by expressing the juice you have with chemical exactness the same liquor you would have had if the juice had been expressed in Malaga at the first. That portion of Spain is celebrated for the finest grapes we get from Europe.

Now, what objection is there to this process of procuring sacramental wine? There is a very powerful objection: We didn't do it yesterday. Is there any other? None that I am able to see.

We are not interested in any critical inquiries as to what was, or what was called wine two thousand years ago. The question that interests us is, What is wine now, and how may we conveniently procure non-intoxicating wine now? The best material in the world for making it can be had in any country store, and the making of it—the only way in which unfermented wine ever is made—is the simplest labor of a half hour, or less time.

YARBO CITY, Mississippi.

R. ANDREY.

Death of Mrs. L. Q. C. Lamar.

The wife of Senator Lamar is dead.

On December 29, 1884, at Oxford, Miss., the light faded from her eyes, her heart ceased to beat and her sweet spirit was at rest in the inheritance of the saints.

Death never claimed a purer, brighter spirit; earth never lost a nobler, gentler soul. She was the pure type of an exalted Southern womanhood. She was reared in an atmosphere of culture, purity and refinement in the home and under the influence and training of her gifted father, Judge Longstreet; and when she stood upon the threshold of womanhood, bright and beautiful, she was transplanted, a tender flower, into the home and heart of her honored husband, L. Q. C. Lamar, where she lived surrounded by all of those ennobling influences born of love and nurtured and cherished by genius. In her life was developed all those Christian graces and nobility of soul that give to the name of daughter its charm and sweetness, to the name of wife its halo of love and devotion, and to the name of mother its jeweled crown of sacred memories. Let us pause and render a tear to her worth and memory. Ah! well do I remember but a short time since how tenderly and how lovingly I heard her husband speak her praise, and I can never forget the tears of sorrow that gathered in his eyes when he told of her suffering. Many a tribute of a noble husband to an idolized wife I have thought that she would so soon cross over the river and leave him in his sorrow. She is now a link that unites him to heaven. She awaits his coming beyond the clouds, and in the sweet by-and-by they will be reunited in that wondrous land, where all is light and love and joy. God alone can still the wild throbbings of his heart and mellow his grief. He is plentiful in mercy unto all them that call upon him, and will sanctify this deep affliction into his good.

January 1, 1852: I have just closed another year and entered upon a new one. In reviewing the past year I feel that it has been a year of great mercy to me and my family. I entered upon the labors of the year with more fear and trembling than I felt in a long time. The cross was very heavy and I shrunk from the weighty responsibility of my new station; but God has brought me through the year successfully. I have not lost a single appointment, having held thirty-six quarterly meetings, besides attending several protracted meetings. There have been about three hundred conversions at the meetings I have attended. There have been some conversions on every circuit and station in the district—in all about one thousand. The missionary collections will double those of last year, and the preachers have been much blessed in their labors. The health and lives of my family have been preserved. The Lord has been bountiful in his providence towards us, giving the necessities and comforts of life, and blessing us with peace of mind and quiet consciences. Surely I ought to be grateful, and I feel that I am.

While I record with gratitude the goodness of God, I see many things to call for humiliation and reformation on my part. I have wasted much time. I have not cultivated my intellectual powers as diligently as I should. I have not reflected and meditated as much as I ought. I have been entirely too indolent. I must be more industrious. I have been deficient in doing good. I have been too much disposed to avoid responsibility. Though in some things the church on my district is prospering; in others there is much delinquency; class meetings are too much neglected. There is too much of a worldly, money-getting spirit among our people. The preachers do not devote themselves to the spiritual interest of the people as they should. A preacher must convince the people that he loves them if he would do them good; but he can not do this while he manifests indifference about their souls and satisfies himself with a formal discharge of the more prominent duties of his station, while he neglects the numerous little matters that prove how greatly his heart is in the work and how deeply he feels for their spiritual welfare.

Our Annual Conference was held at Mobile. Bishops Paine and Andrews were with us, the latter presiding. Drs. Wadsworth, Hinkle, Sehon and Wightman, and Bros. Kooser and McIntyre, besides several other visiting brethren, also attended. Our missionary collections were nearly $24,000; more than ever has been collected by any Annual Conference, either North or South. There has been a remarkable excitement on the subject of missionary collections in some parts of the Conference, whether of a sanctified character I will not say. I would be glad to see our people give to benevolent objects from Christian principle; giving whether called on or not; giving because it is right to give; because the cause of Christ requires it; because God commands it. Our benevolent efforts are too spasmodic. We have to be excited to influence us to liberality. Giving to benevolent objects should constitute a prominent part of our piety, or more properly be a prominent development of our piety.

We had many gracious revivals during the year 1884. The Annual Conference met at Marion, Ala. It was a remarkable, pleasant and harmonious one. We received thirty-three accessions, and the missionary collections amounted to upwards of $20,000. The Conference was in a prosperous state. We opened the first Friday in May last as a day of fasting and prayer, and God signally answered our prayers. There had never been such a class of protracted meetings since the Conference before; whether we consider their numbers, appointments or piety. Many of them were graduates from colleges, and several of them professors of perfect love. I was reappointed to the Columbus district.

The twenty-second session of the Alabama Conference was held at Tuscaloosa, Ala., commencing on December 7, 1884. We had a pleasant and profitable session. Bishop Paine not being present, Rev. G. Garrett was elected president, and presided with great dignity. There were seventeen admissions and three readmissions.

My district paid off every preacher, quarterage and table expenses, and sent up over $9,000 for missions. The entire missionary collections of the Annual Conference amounted to $22,000. I was reappointed to the Columbus district.

We had many gracious revivals during the year. My health and that of my family has been good. The Annual Conference for 1884 was held at Tallahassee on December 13. We had an interesting time. The Conference was very hospitably entertained, and I trust, a good influence was exerted on the community. I was appointed presiding elder of the Gainesville district.

Rev. John Johnson.

We extract the following sketch of a very remarkable man from the little volume of Rev. W. C. Black, entitled "A Centennial Retrospect."

John Johnson was born in Louisa county, Va., January 7, 1783. His father died when John was an infant. When he was about grown his mother moved to the neighborhood of Gallatin, Tenn., and became a tenant of a Mr. Douglass. Douglass owned some slaves, and one of these slaves owned a fragment of a spelling book and knew the alphabet, though he could neither read nor spell. John Johnson became a pupil of this old darky. After working hard on the farm all day, he would go at night to the old negro's cabin to receive instruction. By the firelight he and his sable instructor pored over the dingy, stained pages until he had mastered the alphabet. He now knew as much as his teacher. This was the only schooling he ever had. He taught himself to read in this way: He procured an old hymn book. In this book there were several hymns that he knew by heart from having heard them sung. He would get some one to show him in the book one of the hymns, he knew, and he would run away at this until he could read it. One hymn after another he read in this way until, at the end of six weeks, he could read the Bible moderately well. During this time he often sat up until midnight after working hard all day. He also learned to write without a teacher. This difficult task he accomplished in this way: He procured from a friend manuscript copies of two songs—the works of which he had heard in his memory. He first learned to read these, and then copied them. By copying them over and over again, perhaps a thousand times he learned to write a very legible hand. From this time on for several years he read every book he could get his hands on, so that when he was twenty-four years old he was far above the average frontiersman in general information.

About this time he was converted and joined the Methodist Church. One year later—1808—he was admitted into the Western Conference as a traveling preacher. The first of his journeys was to the mountains of the West, where he was to preach one day twenty-five miles to meet an appointment at a little ridge hut in the woods. The appointment had not been well circulated, and church going was a new business in that section any way, and he found a crowd of one or two hundred, with a crowd about two years old. Her father, a thrice-bred apparition showed that she was poor, while her countenance indicated that her heart was sad. He soliloquized thus: "If my Savior preached to a solitary sinner, why should not I preach to a crowd of sinners?" He was a very pathetic preacher, and his sermon on this occasion was of such a character that before he got through (to use his own words) "there was one universal shout all over the congregation." When the services were over he spoke a few words to the women, and she departed. As she went away he could hear her, every few steps, exclaiming in a subdued tone of voice, "Glory! glory!" A month later he was at the little "meeting-house" again, and was greatly surprised to find an audience larger than the house could hold. A notice of his previous occasion had spread his fame through all that region. Moreover, he learned that this solitary auditor, at the first appointment, had walked and carried her child ten miles to hear that sermon. Her husband opposed her going, but she would not let her have a home. At the second appointment both she and her husband were present. Moreover, this time she came on horseback, the husband walking. One result of this second service was the conversion of this wicked husband, whose name was Baker. Before the close of the year, the preaching church was organized at that place, and Baker was made a class leader. He remained faithful until death. To this day the church in that locality maintains a vigorous and healthful existence. So much for a sermon to a solitary auditor. The next year—1811—Johnson was preaching on a circuit, lying along the line Sandy, in what is now West Virginia. During this year he procured a substitute for a short time, and went to a camp meeting in the central part of Virginia. His object in going was to improve himself by hearing the celebrated preachers of that section. Up to this time his work had been altogether in those frontier regions where fashion was at a discount. Accordingly, he had, literally, taken "no thought for himself." That his spiritual would attract any special attention at the camp meeting was a thought that had never entered his head. When he reached the camp meeting, however, he found himself "the observed of all observers." John the Baptist, with "his garment of camel's hair and a leather girdle about his loins," would scarcely have been more conspicuous; his shoes were coarse russets, such as are worn in the rudest days; his coat and pants were made of the very coarsest quality of tow and, for some reason—why, no one could divine—his hair was pinned tight around his neck. Moreover, his suit was old and very badly weather stained. He wore a very broad-brimmed white hat that had seen four years' service. It was a camp meeting custom in those days to invite every minister present to preach; so the minister in charge came in a quadriga. They did not wish to slight a brother, and yet it would never do, they thought, to put the man up to preach to that wealthy, refined, intelligent, aristocratic nobility. (These people were, doubtless, all F. F. V.'s.) After a consultation they sent a committee to wait upon the backwoods brother, and to tell him that they would not invite him to preach. This was perfectly satisfactory to him. He had not come to preach, but to hear. The meeting dragged on to the last day without producing any perceptible effects. When the last day came, and the tent holders were all packed up to go home, it was decided to give "Bro. Johnson." It would do no harm now, as there would be scarcely anybody to hear him. When the hour for service arrived there were under the vast shed three men, one woman and four boys. The preachers themselves had retired to a remote tent to wind up some business. He began the service by singing, "Come, ye sinners, poor and needy." He was a fine singer, and had a voice like a trumpet. Moreover, he had just spent an hour in the grove near by in communion with God, and so he commenced the service with his heart thrilling with emotions that added to the natural richness of his voice. As the rich tones of his voice rang out, full and clear, upon the morning air, there was something in them that arrested the attention of the whole encampment, and one after another of those who were least occupied proceeded to the shed. The earnest, pleading tones of his opening prayer attracted still others. Before his sermon was half ended all the packing up and wagon loading had ceased, and everybody on the ground—preachers and all—had joined the assembly. The preachers were greatly surprised to find that this frontiersman spoke as good English as themselves. His sermon was one of those appeals that stir the soul to its profoundest depths. At its close forty penitents came to the altar. When that service had ended the tent holders unpacked their goods, and the meeting lasted two weeks longer and resulted in more than two hundred conversions. This occurred only a few months before the appointment to Nashville. To reach Nashville he had to travel twelve hundred miles on horseback, and during much of the distance he was in danger from savage Indians. Whether he made the acquaintance of the tailor and the barber on the route we are not informed. He reached Nashville about the first of November, 1811, and at once entered vigorously upon his work. In a letter to his mother, written a few days after his arrival, he speaks of his circuit as "in bad order."

Although there was a membership of about one hundred, with three local preachers and five class leaders, as he says in a letter written in a prayer meeting or class meeting, on the subject of "the people in general," as "very rich, very proud and very polite—exceeding all for compliments, but as having 'little humility, little religion and little piety.' He also uses the following language: 'There are a few who are true in the Lord, and whose treasures lie in heaven; who stand like solid rocks against the swelling waves and pelting storms of persecution, temptation and opposition.' From another letter, written March 15, 1812, we learn that up to that date—8 years after he had traveled 800 miles, preached forty-seven times and taken between twenty and thirty persons into the church. During this period, besides doing a good deal of general reading, he had "read the Old Testament through once, the New Testament three times, and the book of Revelation four times." He also speaks of the fact that he has "been studying music." We learn also from other sources that he was at this time quite a good Greek and Hebrew scholar. Yet he speaks of himself as "doing very little." Nathe's efforts, which consisted of, at least, the reading of the Bible, and the taking of between twenty and thirty persons into the church. ## Christian Advocate.

CHAS. F. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, REV. J. T. SAWYER,
REV. W. L. O. HUNNICUTT.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1885.

Our good friend and popular correspondent, Rev. R. G. Porter, ("Gilderoy") received a handsome vote for the editorship of the Texas Christian Advocate. That Bro. Briggs was elected over such a competitor is a high tribute to his ability. "Gilderoy" will therefore continue to be the property of all the Advocates.

A correspondent of the Baptist Record argues that it is a very righteous thing to proselyte other Christians to the Baptist faith. Just so, and yet they admit these unimmersed Christians may be very pious and sure of heaven. We have seen more rejoicing over one proselyte than over a dozen converts from the world. All of which is very disreputable. Did you never observe what a stealthy movement these little ecclesiastical burglars have?

Mr. William H. Vanderbilt generously donated to Mrs. Ger. Grant the $150,000 loaned to her husband before his recent business failure, but she refused the offer. The letter tendering the donation recited the facts of the loan, and expressed the tenderest sympathy. The sword, commissions, medals and gifts from the United States, states, cities, and foreign governments, and all articles of historical value and interest, embraced in Mr. Vanderbilt's mortgage, will be presented to the government at Washington.

Dr. W. M. Patterson, Superintendent of our Central Mexican Mission, has been in the city since Saturday last, accompanied by his wife and two little boys. They are the guests of Bishop Keener and family. Dr. Patterson delivered an address on missions at St. Charles Avenue Church on Sunday night. On Wednesday night a reception was tendered him by the ladies at St. Charles Avenue, when he spoke at length on our work in Mexico. We acknowledge the pleasure of a call at our office and much instructive talk on the history and outlook of the mission. He leaves this morning by rail for the City of Mexico, and will reach the end of his journey in five days.

Bishop Lyman, of the diocese of North Carolina, vigorously criticizes in the Churchman the recent letter of Bishop Thompson on the negro race. He dissents most entirely from the sweeping statement of the Assistant Bishop of Mississippi against ordaining colored men to the ministry, and invites his brother bishops to go over to North Carolina and see how the thing works. He has ten colored clergymen and all doing creditably well. These lively discussions of good brethren who have never done anything for the negro are quite amusing. There is not a colored Episcopal preacher or church organization in Mississippi. But with a revival of conscience on the subject we hope this long neglect will be atoned for by abounding work "in the Lord."

Not all perverts from Methodism to the Baptist Church can be claimed as superior interpreters of the word of God. Occasionally a zealous immersionist tells how he became a Baptist, and in every case it was at great personal sacrifice and profound study of the Scriptures. He found the Bible didn't teach what he had long believed. A Baptist proselyte who became such by any other influence than a simple searching of the word is an anomaly. Bro. Hackett tells how patiently he read and read only the Book, and how at length he joined the Baptists. But right in Bro. Hackett's neighborhood, and about the time of his going over, an old Methodist sister became an immersionist, and the following is the history: Before the congregation the pastor commenced the usual examination precedent to a vote of admission. Doubtless expecting to make capital out of her conversion from error, he said: "Sister, you have been a Methodist. Was it by reading the Scriptures that you found out your error and now apply for admission into the Baptist Church?" She answered, "I can't read," with the peculiar nasal twang that belongs to such ignorance. Thereupon the examination ceased; not another question was asked, the vote was taken, and Sister was given the right hand of fellowship.

Personal Work in Soul Saving.

This is at once the most important and difficult duty of a gospel minister. After years of study and experience, he finds it comparatively easy to address congregated multitudes; but to speak to them personally and effectually often exposes his weakness and paralyzes his courage. It requires less faith and a lower religious experience to preach to crowded houses than to converse instructively with a single devout seeker after Christ. There is an intellectual stimulus and nervous excitement in the public discussion of a subject that is conspicuously absent in a single-handed conversation with a dying soul. Your only resources then are a vivid personal experience, a knowledge of God's word as a means of life rather than a system of doctrine, an ingenious faith and a passion for the salvation of men. If either of these is lacking, the pastor finds himself at sad disadvantage. All his knowledge of theology and philosophy serves him then but poor purpose. What he needs to satisfy the inquirer is a heart acquaintance with God as a Father full of mercy and truth.

In addition another qualification is necessary—that wonderful something we call tact, or, as some one has denominated it, "the sixth sense." A very zealous pastor, intent on the Master's work and burdened with a soul-saving desire, in this fails for lack of this virtue. A man may be approached unwisely, and is burned rather than helped by the interview. A merchant beset with customers eager for a final settlement of their accounts is in no mood to hear a needed rebuke for his delinquency. A calmer, more quiet hour should be sought, and the entrance to his heart will be found comparatively easy. A lawyer on his way to the court-house to conduct an important case for a client will get impatient with a pastoral dissertation on the street corner. In this personal work we must be wise as a serpent and gentle as a dove. And in order to the largest success we should dwell much with God in prayer.

But the cultivation of this "sixth sense"—taking counsel of our discretion—must be guarded, or we will compromise conscience by excessive caution. Fear of doing an unwise thing has led to cringing failure in doing the right. Duty has been neglected rather than risk a blunder in obedience. A pastor imagines that he is not the proper person to approach a certain citizen, and so the man is neglected, though possibly hanging for a word of spiritual counsel and encouragement. No doubt if we met the conditions in our own experience, the Spirit would help us as in the early days when the apostles were assured of special inspiration for imperative duties and emergencies. The right word would be given us in that hour, "for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost."

Another word of caution we venture to utter—care must be had that in every effort to interest and win the young pastoral dignity and consistency be preserved. A minister can be cheerful without foolish levity, and sympathetic with vivacious young life without being puerile or a buffoon. The line that separates between a bright, joyous, hopeful Christian life and a rapid, sentimental, formal caricature of religion must never be overstepped. We can command the respect and appreciation of the young without the slightest compromise of ministerial dignity and propriety. At a recent meeting of London Methodist ministers the President of the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. Dr. Greeves, delivered an admirable address, in which he referred to this very subject as follows: "Some think it well to win the confidence and affection of young people by sharing in their recreations. They think they do good by joining in lawn tennis, or by going with them to the billiard-room. I find our golly people are a little dubious about that kind of influence. I remember a family, known to me in my younger ministry, where the young men declared of a certain minister that he held them to Methodism by his kindness in the billiard and smoking-room. Not one of these men is a Methodist now, nor, so far as I know, a professing Christian. I pronounce no judgment; only, if we mingle in the recreations of the young with the intention of doing them good, let us often say words that show we have not forgotten our responsibility for their souls; and let us so act that their words and speak may have the fullest weight." More fitting and careful counsel could not have been given. It was well adapted to this as the other side of the sea. Specific directions in this character of work can not be given. Filled and fired with a passion for soul saving, every pastor must be a law unto himself. But that these general observations may be helpful we enter upon the duties of the new year, in our earnest prayer.

Louisiana Conference.

This body met in the town of Minden, Webster parish, on Thursday morning, the eighth instant. Bishop R. K. Hargrove presiding. Since the completion of the railroad from Monroe to Shreveport all the populous and productive hill parishes of North Louisiana have been brought into easy communication with the outside world. The brethren who went up from New Orleans left at seven P. M., and the next afternoon were welcomed to the generous hospitality of Minden. What a few years ago, was a weary journey of days by land and water, with the usual accompaniments of mud, broken wheels, waiting for a boat, and bars and multitudinous detentions, is now a pleasant trip of less than twenty-four hours. And thus the railroads speed the progress of the gospel. We regretted not being present at the session; but the Advocate was in the competent, industrious hands of Bro. Jamieson, the junior publisher. Our acquaintance with the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, and a more intimate knowledge of the field they have cultivated, has heightened our appreciation of their apostolic zeal and heroism. The difficulties they have encountered are not understood by many of the older and more favored Conferences.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Evans was elected secretary—a position for which he has special fitness. He has the pen of a ready writer and records facts, unobtrusive and without the popular qualifying adjectives. From the reports furnished us we learn that the session was harmonious throughout, and that Bishop Hargrove gave excellent satisfaction in the social circle, in the chair of Conference, on the platform and in the pulpit.

Resolutions were passed concerning the Palestine Institute, and an impromptu collection was taken for its support amounting to $354.

Dr. Carter's centennial sermon, a Sunday night, was a grand effort, and was listened to with rapt attention by a vast multitude. By request of the Conference it will be published.

Centenary offerings reported amounted to $24,965, and the committee was continued for another year. The treasurer of the Board of Missions reported collections from the several stations and circuits amounting to $4,200.

President Rush, of Centenary College, forwarded his report, which made a favorable showing for the institution over which he so worthily presides. Mansfield Female College, under Dr. F. M. Grace, is enjoying a successful term. It has weathered the storm and has the promise of a smooth sea.

The trustees of the New Orleans Methodist Depository property reported, and vacated in the Board occasioned by the resignation of Bishop Parker and R. L. Robinson were filled by the election of T. J. Carver and J. H. Campman.

The next Conference will be held at Baton Rouge.

Minute questions were answered as follows:

Admitted on Trial.—Horace D. Kimball, Wilson Moore, Robert Harry, J. D. Jackson.

Remained on Trial.—S. J. Davies, H. J. Boltz.

Discontinued.—George F. Hill, J. W. Bleker.

Superannuated.—Fred White, A. G. Miller, W. R. Whitley, A. M. Wallis, George Jackson.

Superannuated.—J. S. Davis, G. M. Liverman, R. M. Croness, Jesse Fulton, P. H. Dieffenwerth, John Pipes.

A Wralhy Bishop.

The A. M. E. Church Review, for January, contains a symposium on the question, "The Democratic Return to Power—Its Effect?" with short articles by fourteen prominent colored writers. Their views agree in the main that the negro's status and rights, political, civil, religious and moral, will not be unfavorably affected by a change of national administration. The most intemperate and ill-natured sentiments, we regret to say, were uttered by Bishop H. M. Turner. He seems to be a man of violent passion, and takes counsel of his fiery prejudices rather than common sense and the religion he preaches. Speaking of the country, he says: "I care nothing about it, wishing it nothing but ill and endless misfortune—wish it could only live to see it go down to ruin and its memory blotted from the pages of history. A man who loves a country that hates him is a human dog and not a man. Therefore, you can readily realize that I am in no mood to give an opinion touching any political or civil phase of the nation; yet I am in as good a mood as any other negro possessing the instincts of humanity ought to be."

We prefer to, and do, believe that such sulphurous stuff does not represent the negroes of our country. As ardent they are kind and unresentful. Their local and personal attachments are strong, and they readily adapt themselves to their environments. Bishop Turner does his people gross injustice when he presumes to represent them in this matter. Were he a fair exponent of negro sentiment, every patriot and Christian might well ponder with very horror the great political and social problem now presented to the American people.

But Bishop Turner is a religious teacher, and, as such, is a blind leader of his race. How he can read and preach from the sermon on the mount, and say, "A man who loves a country that hates him is a human dog and not a man," is beyond our ken. By what sort of logic or conscience he reconciles the two has not been discovered. But then the country does not hate him. Because the Supreme Court of the United States makes a certain decision upon a point of law and a majority of citizens vote a certain way by no means warrants his rash utterance. The country does not hate the negro. Here he has found his highest development and truest friends. Both sections of the nation are now united in providing means for his further advancement. How far such ugly speeches as Bishop Turner's will retard these beneficent plans we desire not to contemplate. He talks like a wild Commanche rather than a Christian Bishop. For the good of the race we hope his views will meet with universal condemnation among more intelligent colored people.

Some further observations made upon the probable treatment of the negro in the South are in better spirit. But even these might have been modified to the credit of his common sense and Christian conscience. As a friend of the negro, we pray for his deliverance from such counselors.

—Rev. Stephen Noland has again become one of the publishers of the Central Methodist.

The Silent Orator in Congress.

Senator Vest, of Missouri, has championed a much-needed reform, and he will be supported by the moral sense of the nation. He has introduced a concurrent resolution in the Senate, providing that the Congressional Record shall print nothing but what is actually said and done in Congress. Many of the supposed speeches printed in the Record, and sent out to an admiring constituency, were never uttered on the floor of either house. The innocent voter pored over the eloquent printed periods and imagined his home statesman holding the entire Congress spellbound. Such a fraud and sham ought to be stamped out. Many a lazy, lounging, reveling Congressman has held his seat by garden seed and begging "leave to print in the Record." In some remarks supporting his resolution Senator Vest, who is one of the most eloquent men in that upper chamber, said:

"The people of the United States are the best natured upon the face of the earth. No other country would have tolerated such outrages as have been perpetrated for years upon the Congressional Record. The Hon. Birdwell Siote franks his remarks by the thousand to the people of his district, as delivered on such a day in the House of Representatives, whereas, in fact, the Hon. Birdwell made no such remarks. He only would have liked to make them, and got permission to publish them as if he had made them. In reality, at the moment when he was supposed to be electrifying the floor and the galleries, interrupted only by rounds of applause and by the presentation of bouquets, he was probably munching a frugal lunch in the House restaurant or snoring placidly in the cloak-room. Some of the speeches reported as having been delivered before an admiring house are so ludicrous as to appeal to the national sense of humor, and the American public has learned to regard the proceedings of Congress as a sort of 'variety performance,' where nothing is real but the pay. In the Record, of April 13, a member, of poetic tendencies, obtained leave to print his remarks on a bill providing for 'certain paintings on the wall of the Capitol,' and then inserted blank verse to the amount of sixty pages quarto; in another Record, a few months later, there are a very few remarks by a member, supplemented by the entire Constitution of the United States."

A Remarkable Career.

When Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines died in this city on last Friday evening, the 9th inst., there closed one of the most remarkable careers known to history. For more than half a century her name and cause have been known to the courts and newspapers of the country. With a persistent purpose that never flagged and a heroic devotion to a cause which involved not only her claim to an immense estate, but the honor of her parentage and the legitimacy of her birth, she toiled till her death. The story of her life, if written by a skillful pen, would have a fascination and thrilling, sustained power, unexcelled in the finest works of fiction. Striking events and strange passages in her life succeeded each other with the rapidity of a drama. Filled on many occasions she never knew failure. When an adverse decision was rendered, she had already anticipated it and renewed the contest on another theory or question of law. The Supreme Court of the United States once pronounced her case "the most remarkable in the records of the courts." It is said that her knowledge of laws relating to successions was marvelous, and on several occasions she pleaded her own cause with real ability and forceful eloquence.

The outline facts of her history as we find them summarized in the city dailies are as follows: Mrs. Gaines was born in New Orleans in 1806. Her mother was Marie Zolime Carriere, who married a Frenchman named De Grange, said to be of noble ancestry, but who was reduced in circumstances and became a confectioner. Charged with having an other wife living at the time of his marriage, the matter was investigated though not positively proven, and De Grange left the city never to return. Subsequently she married Daniel Clark, a fascinating, brilliant young man, who served as territorial delegate in Congress from Louisiana, from 1837 to 1839. Of this marriage Myra Clark was born. While in Washington the young delegate became acquainted with a Miss Caton of Baltimore, and sought to annul his marriage with M<sup>rs</sup> De Grange. But this he failed, and it is said returned to New Orleans, repented of his course and made Myra Clark, his universal legatee. She in the meantime lived in Philadelphia, with a Mr. Davis, while her mother married a Dr. Gardette and removed to Paris.

It was not until 1834 that Myra Clark, then Mrs. Whitby, knew that she was the legatee of Daniel Clark under the will of 1813. Then began a litigation, with varying fortunes, which continued to the hour of her death. She had obtained judgment against the City of New Orleans for a million dollars or more, and was prosecuting it vigorously in highest courts. Her life was a sacrifice to one thing. The sweet pleasures of social life were all surrendered to this supreme purpose. She was a member of the Carondelet Street Methodist Church, but the pastor being absent at Conference she was attended by Dr. Palmer, who also officiated at her burial.

Our special friend, the Rev. H. M. DuBose, of Houston, Texas, writes the editor a long, personal letter, from which we make an extract or two of general interest:

"I am delightfully situated. Bro. Werlein did a grand work here and has made the sailing easy for his successors. * * * I have the Centennial Daily in full. How I longed to be at that auspicious gathering! The speeches, the sermons, as I read them, made my heart ache for what I missed. Bishop Foster's sermon thrilled me. It was catholic, grand."

Wine in the Lord's Supper.

BY REV. C. O. ANDREWS, D. D.

The report of the Committee on Temperance at the late session of the Mississippi Conference was directed exclusively to one point, viz.: the evil of using fermented or intoxicating wine in the administration of the Lord's Supper. I voted against the report, and am glad that it did not prevail. I have no controversy with those persons who oppose the use of adulterated liquors for sacramental purposes. I am in hearty accord with the movement to procure, whenever practicable, the pure, unfermented juice of the grape for the holy communion. However, I do conscientiously believe the effort to prove that the approved wine of the Scriptures, as well as the wine the Savior made, were not intoxicating, but simply fresh, unfermented grape juice, is not only futile, but is even a disadvantage to the cause of temperance. Some persons assert that there are two kinds of wine mentioned in the New Testament: one commanded, the other condemned. It is true that there are two uses of wine mentioned in the New Testament: one commanded, the other condemned; but the uses are of the same liquid—wine.

In the Greek Concordance, now before me, I find but two words in the New Testament translated wine: one is oinos, the other gleukos. The last is used but once: "These men are full of new wine." (Acts ii: 13.) Evidently the gleukos they had been accused of using would make them drunken, as that was the way the "mockers" accounted for their seemingly extravagant conduct. Oinos is used many times in the New Testament; in every place it is translated wine; where it is condemned as well as where it is commended, viz.: "Be not drunken with wine," (oinos) and "use a little wine," (oinos) for thy stomach's sake," ("not given to much wine," (oinos) and "hurl not the oil and the wine," (oinos) "involuntarily, that, excess of wine" (oinos) and "where he made the water wine," (oinos).

The word wine is used five times in the narrative of the wedding in Cana of Galilee; in each place the original is oinos. Furthermore, that the wine which the Savior made was not simply the unfermented juice of the grape is plainly inferable, if not demonstrable, from the address of the ruler of the feast to the bridegroom. "Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine," (oinos) and when men have well drunk then that which is worse, but thou hast kept the good wine (oinos) until now." The Greek word here translated "have well drunk" is methusthai, the principal meaning of which is, to make drunk, to intoxicate. There is no indication that the guests were intoxicated, or that the Savior was encouraging drunkenness, but there is merely the statement of a general principle based upon the well-known effects of wine. It requires a very great stretch of the imagination to think that there was any difference between the wine at the beginning of the feast and that which the Savior made except in the quality. The ruler of the feast was ignorant of the miracle and was simply stating that the custom of this bridegroom was different from that of others, in that he had provided not a different kind of wine, but the best of the wine for the last of the feast.

Legitimate arguments abound by which we can, and will, throttle the demon of intemperance. Let us not jeopardize the cause by venturing upon untenable ground.

Centenary contributions have reached $1,100,087.

John Stuart Mill's adopted daughter, Helen Taylor, is one of the editors of the new London Democrat.

Canon Liddon is writing a biography of Dr. Pusey, and its appearance is looked for with great interest.

Mrs. Sallie Watts Wright, sister of Miss Matie Watts, one of our missionaries to Brazil, died recently in Louisville, Ky.

Bishop Granbery has removed to St. Louis, and is comfortably domiciled in a residence provided for him by St. Louis Methodists. His address is 3006 Chestnut Street.

Bro. L. D. Palmer, Business Manager of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, spent Wednesday last in the city, en route to the Louisiana Conference at Minden.

The Illustrated Methodist is a new candidate for public favor. It is an eight-page monthly, and costs only thirty-five cents a year; four copies for a dollar. It is published in Baltimore, Md.

There was a net gain of 1,000 in the South Carolina Conference last year. And Bishop McVeyre says more than one hundred parsonages were ready to receive their pastors when the appointments were read.

Bishop Wilson we suppose is now at Hot Springs, Ark. That the healing waters there may restore his wonted vigor is the prayer of multiplied thousands. Let our chief pastor be remembered at the throne of grace.

The Moravian missionary income for 1882 was upward of 1,000,000, of which more than a thousand were from French Switzerland; while in the same period that of the Basil Society was not far from 300,000,000.

Prohibition sentiment grows apace in Alabama. The legislature has passed thirteen special acts, including the whole of Conecuh county and authorized Eowah and Calhoun counties to decide the question of "license" or "prohibition" by popular vote.

Rev. O. A. Fisher, one of the veterans of our Methodism in Texas, has been called from labor to reward. He is said to have been a great builder of churches, and all over the territory of his itinerant toils there are left memorials of his Nehemiah enterprise.

William Sherry, the patriarch of New Orleans Methodism, fell asleep in Jesus about midnight, of Monday, the twelfth instant. A fitting notice of his long and godly life will soon appear in our columns. We simply make the announcement of his death as the paper goes to press.

We are in receipt of a sad note from Rev. L. D. Worsham, of the North Mississippi Conference. He was absent from the recent session of Conference on account of sickness in his family, and now his little daughter has been called away. We sympathize deeply with our brother in his great affliction.

Dr. C. H. Richardson, pastor of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Baltimore, occupied the Carondelet pulpit last Sabbath morning. In company with some lady friends visiting the city he gave us a call on Monday morning. Dr. Richardson was a prominent member of the Centennial Conference.

Rev. John A. Williams, D. D., has been appointed a General Superintendent of the Methodist Church of Canada, in place of the late Dr. Rice. We met Dr. Williams at the Centennial Conference, and had the pleasure of hearing him on the platform. He will worthily fill the place made vacant by his glorified friend.

The annual rental of pews in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, Henry Ward Beecher, pastor, occurred on Tuesday night of last week. Although there was some coaching for the occasion, and a few antipathetic admirers of the venerable pastor bid extravagantly for effect, the amount realized was $27,256 as against $31,839, last year.

Dr. W. H. Potter, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, one of our most valued exchanges, is spending some days in the city "doing up" the Exposition. It is really refreshing to see an editor off duty. We bid him welcome to our sanctum and a carte blanche to our exchange that mirrors the Wesleyan. The Doctor is a vigorous, courageous journalist, full of missionary fire and has a broad connectional spirit.

Two wills of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaudier were presented for probate on Monday last. So the vexation of litigation pursues her beyond the tomb. One is an obituary will said to have been written on the 8th inst., the day before her death. The other was written on the 5th inst., and witnessed by five gentlemen, including her attending physician. In this instrument she bequeaths $10,000 to Rev. J. W. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference.

The Closing Incident.

The Centennial Conference closed in the old orthodox way with a grand love-feast. It was in many respects the supreme hour of the session. There was less display of thought and culture, but more of heart and Christian communion. It was a time of joyful testimony and genuine fraternity. One incident of that occasion thrilled the vast congregation and will go down to history. Imagine that you see Gen. Clinton B. Fisk standing within the chancel with his hand on the shoulder of Dr. John B. McFerrin, and read the following:

It will take two hours for me to tell all that is crowding upon the heart. This meeting is the remarkable hour of my life. First, I am happy in the Lord; I am glad I am a Methodist. I am glad to see the work of this meeting. It will be twenty years in a few months since, when at the close of the "great struggle" when the smoke and flame had died away, to my quarters in Nashville, where I was clothed with more responsibility than generally comes to me, or more than I desired, there came two men; one of them was J. B. McFerrin, and the other was A. L. P. Green. At the mention of that last name how many hearts throb with gratitude to God that ever such a good man lived. We sat down and talked together, and the talk was a religious one. We talked about Methodism—not about organic union just then, but about a better state of things and about fraternity. And I said to him, "Do you think the time will ever come when there shall be a better state of feeling?" and this good old man turned to me, and said, "Why, bless you, you will see them all sitting down together in a love-feast yet," and here we are. I was in a difficult place, and with most difficult work on my hands, out there in that portion of the country, and from the President down no man gave me so much help in my perplexing work and trying position as this good man upon whose shoulders my hand now rests.

With deep feeling the Conference then sang:

Together let us sweetly live,
Together let us die,
And each a martyr crown receive
And reign above the sky.

Last Hours of Rev. J. T. Heard.

We hoped before going to press to have received a full account of the last hours and death of Bro. Heard. Thinking that another pen had furnished the facts so eagerly desired by his friends everywhere. Rev. J. M. Weems, of Enterprise, forwards only a short note which we give as follows:

He preached in Shubuta, Sunday, on the subject, "Consecration," urging the importance of it at the beginning of the new year. He also spoke of the immortality of life and that some present might not see the close of the old year. He went out to Bro. DuBoise's Monday, sat up late that night talking of Conference and religion, and went to bed. He got up next morning and dressed himself, but soon felt sick. He called Bro. DuBoise, and told him he could not live. He suffered with pain in the heart for one hour, and died sitting in his chair.

The following from the Richmond Dispatch is the very sensible expression of a secular journal on a theological issue. The illustration is striking and susceptible of extensive application:

We are glad that Dr. Woodrow has been silenced; for, whether the doctrine of evolution be true or not, it should not be taught in a Presbyterian theological seminary. Suppose the free traders had a college—anywhere—and a professor elected by free traders, and paid by free traders to teach free-trade doctrines to free-trade young men, should insist upon teaching protectionist doctrines. That would be a much less offense and not so outrageous an act as had faith as Dr. Woodrow has been guilty of.

We find this pleasant personal in the Pittsburg Christian Advocate:

Methodism seems to find pretty well the generations of its people. In the late Centennial Conference were two great-grandsons of Philip Baratt, after whom Baratt's Chapel was named and on whose farm it stood—the Rev. T. E. Martindale, a preaching elder of the Wilmington Conference, and Hon. E. P. Pratt, a layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The New York Christian Advocate says of a noted man:

Wm. M. the inventor of the sewing machine known as the "Wheeler & Wilson," after having long been a confirmed drunkard, wandering about in rough garb, and with a hat in his hand, and a bag of tools in his pocket, he has been put in the insane asylum, a hopeless wreck. It takes more manhood to bear prosperity than to earn it or invent the means of it.

Through Sleeping Car to Sioux City, Iowa.

The Illinois Central Railroad will run a through sleeping car to Detroit, Bloomington, Mendota, and Freeport, Ill., and Chicago, Manchester, Waterville, Dodge and Sioux City, Iowa, leaving New Orleans at 5:30 Thursday of each week. Through passengers for points in Northern Illinois, Northwestern Iowa, and Southern Minnesota will appreciate the advantages of this weekly through sleeper from New Orleans to Sioux City.

Death of Rev. M. C. Callaway.

A telegram from Rev. D. M. Rush, of Jackson, La., was received on Tuesday night, announcing the death of Bro. M. C. Callaway, pastor of our church at that place. We had no knowledge of his illness and was profoundly shocked at the sad intelligence. A few weeks ago he was at Conference in vigorous health and cheerful spirits, but now, alas! has fallen on sleep. Enterprising, active, consecrated and zealous, he promised great usefulness to the church and honorable distinction to himself and family. The gallant young soldier has joined the old veteran, Joshua T. Heard, in the land of eternal triumph. To his bereaved young wife we extend sincerest sympathy. Our forms are opened to make this brief announcement.

The following is good enough to be remembered:

Secretary M. C. Hazard divides the church into three classes, viz.: The church militant, the church triumphant and the church terminant. The last class consists of those who take the back seats in church, and growl at what others do.

Books and Periodicals.

"CENTENNIAL HISTORY OF AMERICAN METHODISM." Inclusive of its ecclesiastical organization in 1784, and its subsequent development under the superintendency of Francis Asbury, with sketches of the character and history of all the preachers who have been members of the Christmas Conference; also an appendix, showing the numerical position of the Methodist Episcopal Church as compared with the other leading evangelical denominations in the cities of the United States, and the condition of the educational work of the Church. John Atkinson, D. D., Rev. Dr. New York: Phillips & Son, Cincinnati: Crampton & Stone.

Dr. Atkinson has produced an original book on a well-travelled subject. Many histories of Methodism have been written, but this is unlike them all and quite the equal of any. It is not so elaborate as Stevens and not so simple as McVeyre's, and on a different plane. Events are discussed in their logical rather than their chronological order. So to those who have Stevens and McVeyre, this book will possess a special value. The style is fresh and scholarly, and the events grouped with rare skill, while many facts are here presented before published. We are grateful for the copy received, and shall use it freely in our columns.

HYMN STUDIES. An illustrated and annotated edition of the Hymns of the Methodist Episcopal Church. By Chas. Nutter. New York: Phillips & Son, Cincinnati: Crampton & Stone, 1884. Price 25c.

We are indebted to the publishers for a copy of this unique and valuable volume. For a long while we have desired such a book. In connection with the hymns, which are given in full, there is a sketch of the author and a history of each hymn. The changes that have been made in the re-publication and several editions are all related, and in many cases the circumstances of the writing. We cordially commend it to all our readers fond of hymnology.

THE THEOLOGY OF CHRIST, FROM HIS OWN WORDS. By Rev. J. P. Thompson, D. D., with an introduction by Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D. D., New York: E. B. Treat, 75 Broadway.

From our brief examination of this book we are prepared to speak of its great merit. Its careful study would confirm the doubting and prove helpful to every devout inquirer after truth. Whatever the attainments or exegetical skill of any reader, he will find pleasure and profit in its perusal. We are profoundly indebted for a copy.

Square Pianos were formerly much more generally used than Upright Pianos, though the latter were undoubtedly the more elegant and convenient as furniture. This was because the square was decidedly the best as a musical instrument. The improvements lately made in uprights have changed this, and the uprights are now fairly claimed to be as good as square as musical instruments as well as more desirable as furniture. Especially is this true of the improved Upright Piano now offered by the Mason & Hamlin Company. Their pure musical tones are a delight to every appreciative ear, and in durability they present great advantages. This is the result of adding to all valuable improvements heretofore made, one which is more important than any, being a new method of fastening the strings, by which they are more securely held, making the vibrations more perfect, and the instrument less liable to bad shifts, atmospheric changes.—Boston Traveller.

OARVER & JAMIESON.

SEND $1 BILLS.—We wish our patrons to bear in mind that in payment for subscriptions we do not desire postage stamps, and that they should be sent only or fractional parts of a dollar. A dollar bill is much more convenient and safe to remit than the same amount in one, two or three cents stamps. The actual risk of remitting money is slight; if properly directed not one misarrangement will occur in one thousand. Inclose the bills, and, where letters containing money are sealed in presence of the postmaster, we will assume all the risk.

"What is a weather report?" asked a small boy, who was reading a paper. "I don't know precisely, but I suppose that thunder is the kind of a weather report," responded his parent.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Alden & Bro., Fifth & Vine Sts., Cincinnati, O., and 10 Nassau St., New York, making them our Special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the local advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

Visitors to the Exposition should not fail to call at the Depot of the New La. Brewery, 151 Fifth, and learn some of the great facts about its brilliant triumphs—which are perpetual.

When a clothing store gets on fire, some of the clerks spring over coals, and some fall over coals, and every one pants when he gets out. The fire waste costs and makes breaches in the store when they are gone.

A GOOD REPUTATION.—That enterprising plan merchant, P. Weisler, may be justly proud of the leading musical instrument for which he is especially so of the Mathushek piano. The reputation of the public for this particular instrument has tended to prosper and increase his business most materially. It is the reputation of the Mathushek Piano Manufacturing Company to furnish all the pianos in a most complete and perfect manner, using the best materials obtainable and their efforts to keep this piano ahead of all others in every respect is a commendable effort which the public has evidently appreciated by their extensive patronage. Judges of musical instruments say that the Mathushek piano, instead of being out of date, is like many others, is a quarter of a century in time at a quarter less expense than any other make.

What influence has the moon upon the tide?" asked the Professor. The class was puzzled but he did not know exactly what influence it had upon the tide, but that it had a tendency to make the untied awfully spooky.

Since the introduction of Parker's Hair Balsam all other hair preparations have taken rank in the rear. Neat, pure, Price 50c.

Mrs. Bondeby (who is excessively droll): "How good of you to come and see me, Mr. Puckerton." Mr. P.: "Well, you know, Mrs. Bondeby, the population wouldn't come to Mohammed, so Mohammed had to come to the mountain."

Notice to subscribers who order their address changed. Please give full address of last Postoffice, otherwise change cannot be made.

"I have gone around all day; and now I am tired," remarked an exhausted Austin mother. "You are like a wheel; are you, Ma?" asked Tommy. "Why, little boy?" "You are tired after you go round; but a wheel is tired before it goes around."

LAKE—Resolutions by the faculty and pupils of Whitworth Female College, in memory of Miss Maggie R. Lake.

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove by death Miss Maggie R. Lake, a member of the family of Whitworth College; therefore, be it

Resolved, That, submitting humbly to this dispensation of Providence, we recognize in it the hand of One whose acts are all done in wisdom and love.

Resolved, That in the life of Miss Maggie Lake, as it was known to us during the past four years in which she filled the different positions of monitor and accountant of the college, there was a rare combination of prudence, justice, faithfulness and grace; and it is not too much to say that, in her death, Whitworth College has lost a zealous and accomplished teacher, society a cultivated and useful member, and each of us a kind and helpful friend.

Resolved, That we regard it worthy of public notice that Miss Maggie Lake was the first to contribute to the erection of the Institute building recently completed; and, that, in recognition of her devotion to the college, the desk and chair of the mistress be suitably draped, and we will wear the annual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere sympathy to the family of the deceased in this their sore bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of the college, and that a copy of them be forwarded by the secretary to the afflicted family; and to the Brookhaven Leader, the Oxford Eagle, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, for publication.

R. S. RICKETS, Secretary.

HARPER—Died at Jefferson, Texas, Mrs. Mary Adeline Harper, wife of W. W. Harper, M. D. The subject of this sketch was the daughter of John and Orinda McKee, of Woodville, Miss., where she was born May 15, 1831. She was united in marriage to Dr. W. W. Harper, Esq., in 1852, at Savannah, La., by Dr. (now Bishop) Parker, and departed this life in great peace and triumph Oct. 23, 1884. Sister Harper professed religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in her childhood, and she remained until the day of her death faithful to her Lord and to her cause. As a Christian, she was devout and earnest, and in her pure, blameless life as wife, mother and friend, she has left behind her the priceless legacy of a good example. It was the privilege of the writer, as her pastor, to visit her frequently during her last illness, and it was a source of great joy and privilege to her from the world of God was brought to her remembrance, and to also hear her frequent utterances of trust in the Redeemer and resignation to his will. To our repeated inquiries as to her spiritual state and hopes for the future, she would reply that the clouds of darkness interposed between her soul and Christ. Death had no terrors for our dying sister. No vain regrets were indulged; but confident that her Lord would keep that which she had committed unto him, her heart was fixed upon the glorious and eternal realities beyond the grave. When far under the shadow of death, she joined her family and friends for the last time on earth in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The next morning one of her dear children was brought to her bedside and dedicated to the Lord in baptism. She then bade her husband and family farewell, left messages of love for absent relatives and friends, and lingering only a few hours she peacefully and gently passed away from our midst to the home of the pure and the good. May God bestow his sustaining grace upon this stricken family, and also upon the large circle of relatives and friends, and may this sorrowful affliction yield to all of them the peaceful fruits of righteousness, and in the end everlasting life.

INGRAM—Gus Ingram, son of the late J. R. and Mrs. Hester Ingram, was born at Walnut Grove, Marshall county, Miss., July 12, 1875, and died at home, Nov. 11, 1884.

These dates denote a brief stay among mortals, but the little fellow lived long enough to become the centre of bright smiles and attraction at home; the friend of association, and the favorite of the boys of the neighborhood.

His father's little playmate, as well as his playmates; but we cherish the memory of his many excellencies, and hope to overtake him in the better land.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

RAMSEY—Thomas S. Ramsey was born in North Carolina, and was married to Mary Ramsey in Middle Tennessee, and moved near Klenz, Miss., more than thirty years ago, where, on the night of August 18, 1884, he was called to his reward above. He was a devoted religionist about fifteen years, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he lived the remainder of his days. Bro. Ramsey always occupied a warm place in the hearts of the preachers who served the charge on which he lived. After his conversion, his house was the preacher's home. In addition to his love for his kind husband and father, he was the father of the Rev. E. B. Ramsey, who is taking high rank in the North Mississippi Conference; for whose interest he lived. Just before his death, he was visited by his son how he felt, to which he replied, "I feel I am on my way to heaven." Thus he passed away.

McCORMICK—Again death has visited our fold. On Sunday 16, 1884, he entered through the land and reached the land from the mother's land and embraced the land, FERNANDO MILTON, only two years, three months and nineteen days old; but angels loved him and took him to heaven. His last breath was a shout of praise to God, and he was taken to his home in heaven. His wife, Mrs. F. M. McCORMICK, has been bereft of two of her children. Bereft, yes, bereft, but they are thus made the parents of spiritual children in heaven. Spill no tears in the kingdom of heaven.

McCORMICK—Again death has visited our fold. On Sunday 16, 1884, he entered through the land and reached the land from the mother's land and embraced the land, FERNANDO MILTON, only two years, three months and nineteen days old; but angels loved him and took him to heaven. His last breath was a shout of praise to God, and he was taken to his home in heaven. His wife, Mrs. F. M. McCORMICK, has been bereft of two of her children. Bereft, yes, bereft, but they are thus made the parents of spiritual children in heaven. Spill no tears in the kingdom of heaven.

BROOKS—Miss BRASSIE BROOKS, daughter of M. T. and Sister M. S. Brooks, was born Oct. 15, 1880, in that portion of Red River parish, near Conshatka, which was then contained in Natchitoches parish, and died at her father's, near Campt, in Natchitoches parish, Nov. 2, 1884. Her father died when she was a year old, and her mother when she was nine, and left her to the care of her aunt, Mrs. Jacob Porter, with the solemn charge, "Take care of this child, and she will be a blessing to the world." That charge Sister Porter has faithfully and bravely, successfully kept.

She was a pupil of Mansfield Female College for several years, and went from there to Millersburg Female College, where she was converted, and after a year's hesitation, she a struggle between a sense of duty and a fondness for pleasure, so-called, her purposes were fixed to do God's work, and she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at a camp meeting at Davis Springs Camp Ground, during the fall of 1882, since which time she has, so far as I have been able to learn, lived an exemplary life and done a happy, triumphant work.

Her suffering was very great, yet she never complained or forgot her blessed Saviour, but would frequently rouse up saying, "No other one but Jesus," or some other song of praise, and would request to be prayed with.

Thus passed the happy spirit of Sister Brooks to that mother and father who had gone before. May the example of her later days be followed by all young persons.

ROBERT HANDLE.

EUDY—Mrs. HELEN EUDY, daughter of Stephen and Mary Cornick, was born Dec. 23, 1881, near Brownsville, St. Helena parish, La. Was married to J. P. Eudy, Oct. 31, 1872, and died Sept. 30, 1884.

It was my privilege to be the pastor of Sister Eudy for two years, during which time I visited her. She was a woman of strong mind and of decision of character. (She died before her marriage.) She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having been reared under Methodist training. She loved the Methodist Church and the promotion of Zion in the world.

As a wife she was devoted; as a mother, tenderly affectionate; and as a neighbor, unsurpassed. She fell a victim to slow fever, in which she lingered, leaving many relatives to mourn her loss. We heartily join in sad tears, but pray the God of all grace to add consolation to all bereaved hearts.

G. H. HENDER, Pastor.

THOS. J. CARVER, W. L. DAKIN,

FORE—LAURA E. McINTOSH was born in Catahoula parish, La., in 1880; was married to Thomas L. Fore, of Tensas parish, in 1881; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Jordan Chapel, Tensas parish, La., in 1880, under the pastorate of Rev. J. J. Landrum, and died at her home on the Tensas river, La., Nov. 27, 1884, after an illness of eleven days.

The death summons did not come unwelcome, nor with any of its horrors; but found her resting upon the arms of her Saviour. Since her connection with the church, she has lived a consistent and true member; and has also been a constant and attentive reader of her Bible. Several times has the writer been requested to sing some hymn, and she would heartily join in singing the old songs of Zion. While she was courteous and charitable toward Christians of all denominations, she was especially and warmly attached to the church of her choice. The preachers could never come too often; and let it be night or day, they were always sure to find a warm reception at her hospitable home.

The Dyspeptic's Refuge.

"Parker's Tonic cured me of dyspepsia of fifteen years' standing. It is the dyspeptic's refuge." So writes Mr. Charles H. Watts, of West Somers, N. Y.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 7.—Gov. Lowry today appointed Judge James M. Arnold, of Lowndes county, Supreme Court judge, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Chalmers.

New York, Jan. 8.—The Prohibition Convention to-day formally declared that the National Prohibition party is an independent political organization, and its members acknowledge no dictation in the use and disposal of their ballots. It will make no compromise of its prohibition principles by coalition with any other political party. The prohibition of the liquor traffic is the national issue. The Federal Constitution, and the Prohibition party is a necessity to secure such an amendment, and to maintain an administration in power favorable to its enforcement.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 9.—Gov. Porter delivered his biennial message to the Legislature to-day. It shows the debt of the State to be $1,876,000, of which $607,825 is due to the State school fund. The school fund amounts to $3,330,325, an increase of $55,160 during the year. The school revenue last year was $1,488,982. The number of children in the schools was 501,542.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 9.—A vicious war on the Sabbath breakers in this city has been inaugurated by Attorney L. A. S. (the Sledge) as published in the local press, that heretofore the Sunday law of the State would be enforced. Sunday last was the test. The bookstores, news and cigar stands were closed. Of the many saloons all remained closed except five. The proprietors were taken before a magistrate and fined $10. The prosecuting attorney states that heretofore the saloon-keepers will be indicted and prosecuted for every drink sold in violation of the Sunday law. The matter is attracting much attention and causing considerable comment. The saloon-keepers have just secured local license at the rate of $50 per year.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 10.—One of the most disastrous fires that has occurred in Nashville for years, involving a loss of $150,000, broke out at 8 o'clock to-night in the freight-department of Louisville and Nashville Railroad Depot and in a few seconds the flames enveloped the entire building, which was of brick and covered with papers in the freight and telegraph departments and Superintendent Geddes' office were lost, but the tickets were saved. A very large quantity of freight, which was of considerable value, was lost and the passenger train, which was just ready to start for Louisville, had to be pulled away to prevent its destruction. The depot was valued at $300,000 and was not insured. The cars and merchandise there, were worth $25,000. The freight and accounts were a very valuable. The total loss on the depot is $150,000.

DAYTON, O., Jan. 11.—There is great excitement about the Salvation Army. The army on Saturday night took the streets with tambourines, etc., in defiance of the law officers, were arrested and put in the stationhouse, but refused to go out on bail, saying Christ was in jail and the law will open the prison doors. Religious people are becoming interested and the end is not yet.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—The Madison Avenue Congregational Church, over which Dr. Parsons has presided, held its annual election of trustees to-night. Police were in attendance to keep the brethren in order, but for all that there was a very lively time and not the most Christian spirit displayed throughout. The meeting resulted in the election of five anti-Newman trustees out of ten, at the passage of a resolution declaring that Dr. Newman is no longer pastor of that church.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 12.—A heavy rain storm, accompanied by lightning, passed over this section last night eastward. At 11 p. m., ten miles south of Calera, it turned into a genuine cyclone, with such force as to make the houses shake for miles around, while a habitation is left. The extent and amount of the damage will not be definitely known for a day or two. The cyclone took subsequently a southeasterly course, sweeping through Chilton into Macon county, Alabama, uprooting trees, blowing down buildings and killing several men at the Texas Camp Ground, near Tuskegee, diminishing its force eastward into Chambers county on the Georgia line.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 12.—A diabolical attempt to wreck a train on the Georgia division of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad, failed only by a miracle, near Loudon, Ga., last night. The engine and tender, several cars of the truck and drove pieces of rails into the cattle guards. They then piled crosses between the rails, making an obstruction which would dash the train down a frightful abyss. Just before the train reached there, the engine broke down, became hot and the engine stopped. The train to cool it, and it struck the pile just as it slackened up. The pilot was torn off, but no other damage was done.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Jan. 8.—Another sharp shock of earthquake was felt in the south at day-break this morning. The greatest force was experienced at Laja, where 300 houses were damaged and seven persons were injured. Most of the inhabitants had lost or were sleeping in tents. But a strong start today for escape of the disaster. Three hundred thousand dollars has already been subscribed. King Alfonso will take with him $100,000, which he will in person distribute for the relief of the sufferers. The church, convent and fifty houses were destroyed at Motril by the earthquake Monday evening. There was a great procession at Granada to-day. Twelve thousand people, headed by priests, bearing the image of the Virgin, marched through the streets, chanting and praying for deliverance from further earthquakes.

A Clear Head and a Strong Heart. If you hold your brains with any sort of the "whiskey" or "bitters," and which toppers depend for their stimulation, you do your system irreparable mischief. Brown's Iron Bitters is not one of these. It promotes healthy action of the heart, liver and stomach, and cleanses and enriches the blood. The best physicians prescribe it, and it is well worthy of a trial by all.

accounts for a large portion of the pride, worldliness, fashion following, craving for popular amusements, distaste for religious services, which is characteristic of many members of the church. They have the same old unregenerate nature in the church that they had out of it. Having no inward grace, there can be no outward and visible sign of it. I know some will say that our church does not require conversion as a condition of being admitted to her membership. If she did not, then I would reply, So much the worse for her. But I do not so understand her teaching. I do not believe that "a desire to flee from the wrath to come" is the sole condition for admission to the church. The book of discipline says something about the pastor ascertaining the spiritual fitness of candidates for church membership. During my ministry it has been my practice to get from the candidate at least a verbal testimony that he has repented of sin and believed in Christ to the saving of his soul. If any person talks to me about joining the church, and admits he is not converted, I give him all the pastoral oversight possible, pray with and for him, and bring him to decision for Christ first—then receive him into the church. To receive unconverted persons into the church is, in many instances, to do great injury to them and the church also. Whatever earthly organizations may be, the church of God is exclusively composed of regenerate souls. God could do more with Gideon's three hundred, because they were of the right quality, than with thirty-two thousand made up of inferior material. So God could do far more for the world's salvation with two hundred thousand converted, consecrated Southern Methodists than he can with one million, if a very large proportion of them are unregenerate souls. If the second century of Methodism in this country is to be more glorious and spiritually successful than the first, we must sift the material we receive into the church.

II. Family and secret worship must be far more general than it has been among our members, or spiritual disaster will overtake us in the second century of organized Methodism.

It is humiliating that this point needs emphasizing. It would be unpardonable in me not to believe that the spiritual instincts of every Christian suggest at the very commencement of this spiritual life the imperative necessity of both these things being attended to. Secret prayer for personal and family prayer for relative benefits. The Holy Spirit operates on the soul and suggests the righteousness as well as the duty of these things. And at the risk of being accused of uttering a truism, I will say that the neglect of family and private prayer accounts for the large number of backsliders among us. I have talked with persons who professed to have been converted and had joined the church. On asking if they had read the word of God and prayed in secret daily since their conversion, they were surprised at such a question. The body gets three meals a day; but many professing Christians do not even give the soul one meal. They quietly starve the soul; and while angels weep at the soul revolting and treatment, Satan to close by chuckling over the near prospect of the death-rattle in its throat. I have attended a good many District and other Conferences within the last few years, and have been pained to hear brethren in the ministry confess that a very small percentage of the members of the church held family worship. In some churches at least seventy-five per cent. of the members habitually neglected this. No wonder that our church, considering its numbers and wealth, exerts so little influence for good. Without family and secret worship, the church, as a whole, and Christians individually are like Samson's locks—"weak, and like other men." By strict attention to both of these duties we receive power for holy living and are enabled to do genuine work for God on the souls of men. This brings down the motive power that propels the whole spiritual machinery. In all past history the men and women who have been efficient in the service of God and roused the wrath of the devil have been devoted to secret and family worship. It was not a lapis linguae on the part of Jesus when he said: "And thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou has shut the door pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." This was the laying down of a fundamental principle which observance is imperatively necessary in order to the sustenance of a spiritual life. Not I, but the Holy Spirit of God places prayerless families in the same category as the heathen: "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen, and upon the families that call not upon thy name." I beseech you, my dear brethren, if you would be of any service to God and humanity in the second century of Methodism in America, begin this day (if you have been neglecting them), and in the strength of God continue to your dying hour both secret and family worship.

III. If Methodism in the second century of its organized existence in America is not to be a failure, the consciences of our members must be kept in a healthy condition, and then attendance at church services must be made a matter of conscience.

It is astonishing to find how many, even among professing Christian people, regard it as optional to worship in God's house on the Sabbath day. But is it optional? I give an emphatic negative to this question. To worship God in his house on the Sabbath day is an more optional on the part of a righteous man than it is optional for him to be governed by the Ten Commandments. God has given one day in seven for spiritual purposes. He has demanded and received worship from his creatures from the beginning of time till now. He has established a church in the earth. She has had her regular times and places for assembling to publicly worship Almighty God. Jesus Christ showed the example by going himself to these places both as a worshiper and teacher. We read of the apostles and primitive Christians going to the synagogue on the Sabbath day to worship. We are also exhorted "not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is." The fact of the matter is, if it be right for one member without good and sufficient reasons to absent himself from the services of God's house, it is right for all, and if all exercise that right, then we shall have the wonderful spectacle of men and women claiming to be the people of God doing all they can to kill God's church. That is really what it means. Every time that your conscience tells you there is really nothing to hinder you from going to public worship on the Sabbath day, and you do not go, you are stabbing your soul to death and helping (as far as you can) by your example to destroy the church of God. It is pitiable to listen to the frivolous, trifling and lying excuses given by church members for not being present in God's house on his day. "Sunday sickness" has become proverbial. Many are well enough up to Saturday night, take sick Sunday morning and are in good health for business on Monday morning. I have the deepest sympathy with and often pray for those who crave to attend public worship on Sabbath, but are prevented by bodily affliction; but I fear there is a large number in all the churches playing effectively into the hands of the devil and deceiving their own souls by lying on this point. They know well enough that if it were a dance, a social or a theatrical entertainment, they would not dream of allowing either weather or trifling sickness to keep them away. It is hard enough to stay away from worship, but far worse to lie about it. Others neglect worship because they do not like the minister. Well, that is a good reason—to all who go to worship the minister. But if I love God and want to engage in publicly worshipping him, the consideration as to who and what the minister is will not influence me much. Others neglect public worship "because they had company." Of all the flimsy and shallow excuses I ever heard this is the worst. As if a man's obligation to attend the public worship of Almighty God was contingent on his being free of company! Do you prefer to entertain your company rather than be blessed by the great God in his house? Would you rather disappoint your God than infringe on earthly etiquette by leaving your company? If company comes to my house, then when class meeting, prayer meeting or preaching time comes I invite my company to go with me. If they can not or will not go, I go alone. It hurts far less to offend your company by going to God's house than it does to offend God by pleasing your company and remaining with them. And I will add, unless your company be destitute of good breeding it will hurt them greatly if you stay away from worship on their account. Do not go to worship merely because it is your duty. Go because you love God and would worship him and want your soul blessed. So shall the church be a blessing to you, and you to it.

IV. If Methodism is to be a power for good in the second century, superior to what she has been in the first century of her organized existence in America, then there will have to be forces at work educating her conscience on the subject of "contributing to the support of the gospel."

This is a delicate point. A minister is likely to have his motives impeded when he touches on it. Let this should be the case with me, let me say that during my ministry of about twelve years I have got all I have been promised every year and more too. I do not need to speak for myself; but there are hundreds of ministers in our church who are continually embarrassed on account of the meagre support they receive. They can not get a support, are driven to engage in secular business and become involved in ministerial duty. I believe in a Divine call to the ministry; but I also believe in a Divine "call to the laity." For every man God calls to the ministry he truly calls twenty or one hundred men, more or less, to support him. And the responsibility will not be all his, for lack of the support he is entitled to expect, he abandons the work of the ministry. He may come to be a gospel minister and still be a Christian. But if he remains in the ministry and fails to "provide for them of his own house," he becomes (even in the ministry) "worse than an unbeliever." Do you say, "That indicates small faith in God." I say no. I trust I have great faith in God; but I have small faith in some men who possess God's money, and spend it lavishly for their own selfish purposes and give with begrudging hand for the cause of God and humanity. In days of old God commanded the ravens to feed his servant, the prophet. They implicitly obeyed, and showed their superiority to those men who know that the silver and the gold is the Lord's, and that "they who preach the gospel should live by the gospel," but do not contribute to it. I do not know what the average support given to ministers in the Memphis Conference during 1884 was; but in 1883 it was $368.61—a small fraction over one dollar a day! Less than unskilled negro labor can command! And cultured Christian gentlemen are expected to give all their time and faithful service for a year for a support like that! The North Alabama Conference is worse than the Memphis. In the South-Western Methodist, of December 27, last, it is stated that the average support given to ministers in that Conference is $275—a fraction over seventy-five cents a day! I say that this is simply a standing disgrace to the church. It is no use complaining about the quality of the ministers. It is repugnant alike to reason and justice to tie a man hand and foot, throw him into the river, and then complain that he does not swim. If the ministers are not up to the mark as regards quality, who is to blame? If they get barely enough to procure clothes, cornbread and butter-milk, where is their mental food to come from? Books worth reading, cost money. The church keeps that money from them, and they remain in mental darkness. It is simply a slander to say that "the ministers who do not get a comfortable support neglect their duty and are inefficient." Ministers, being human, are not perfect; but a large majority of them are faithful and earnest in the discharge of their duty and get nothing like an adequate support. Do you ask me how the evil is to be remedied? If I could, I would remedy it thus. I would turn the last man out of church who is able to contribute to its support and does not. I would not turn him out for not giving his money to the church, but for failing. When he became a member he solemnly promised before God and the congregation to "support the institutions of the church," and (though able) he has not done it; therefore, he has lied. I will lift my hat and do honor to the man who pays five cents a year to the church, if that is all he is able to do. I will honor the man who pays nothing, if God has denied him the ability to pay. But the man who is able to pay and does not is only a hindrance. After being remonstrated with he should be expelled if he persists in his course. I do not think there need be much trouble in finding out who are able and who are not. There are thousands of men and women in the church who have at least the comforts and many of them the luxuries of life, and it is simply not true for such to plead inability to support their church. Why is it so difficult to raise money for the support of the ministry at home and send missionaries to convert the heathen abroad, to support the widows and orphans of deceased ministers and superannuated ministers and, indeed, for all church purposes? It is because one-half the members (this is a modest estimate) ignore their obligations to the church. The time will come when the one-half who at present pay all church expenses will demand a law requiring payment of church dues by all who are able, and membership shall be held conditional on payment. I expect that legislation of this kind will have to come long before the second century of organized Methodism in America shall have closed.

V. If Methodism is to fulfill her high destiny and spread spiritual holiness over these lands, then we must be consistent in our opposition to Sabbath desecration.

I believe the church of God (or organizations calling themselves so) is responsible for fifty per cent. of the Sabbath desecration prevalent among us. All the churches have given formal deliverance in favor of the preservation of the Sabbath. Our religious newspapers contain pungent articles in favor of the preservation of the Sabbath. But little good effect is perceptible, for hundreds of members in all the churches habitually break the Fourth Commandment by making their railroad journeys on that day. It is bad enough for private members of the church to do this, but worse when officials do so. Indeed, I am by no means sure that all ministers are guiltless in this regard. I am persuaded they are not. When officers in the church by their influence and example help to break down the Christian Sabbath, what can the rank and file of the church be expected to do? I know that most of this desecration is thoughtlessly done. But it is less criminal on that account. If there is no thought, there ought to be. I protest against reading of political newspapers and business letters as a profanation of the Sabbath day. If a man do either or both of these, how can he be fitted for worship in the sanctuary? Works of necessity and urgency are admitted; but many consult their convenience and pleasure and ignore necessity and duty. How many professing Christians will "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" by traveling to or from the New Orleans Exposition on that day?

How long would the managers of the Exposition have taken to decide if the ministers in all the churches in this country had said: "Gentlemen, we can not prevent you opening on Sabbath if you want to; but when you do we withdraw our week-day patronage." Within five minutes the reply would have gone over the wires—

"The Exposition shall be closed from twelve, Saturday night, to twelve, Sabbath night." The question is not, Can engineers, clerks, street car men, postal officials, conductors, brakemen, etc., can he saved without the Sabbath? but will we be saved if we force them to break the Divine command? There is no debate as to the utility and benefit, intellectual, social, physical and religious, to be derived from Sabbath observance. Nine-tenths of the people whose opinions are worth respecting concede this. What I plead for is consistency in our opposition to Sabbath desecration. Do not pass resolutions in favor of, and then go out and act against the Sabbath. In the pastoral address of the Centennial Conference I find the following: "This precious gift of God (the Sabbath) is imperiled by the scurrilous claims of mammon and the no less imperious clamor of sensuality. It behooves the church of God to stand up in the firmness of her God-given might to withstand the aggression of evil men who would destroy this pillar of our Christian civilization. We ask, first of all, that in your own personal conduct you will honor the Divine command, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.'"

On all these points—receiving unconverted members into the church, neglect of family and private worship, neglect to attend church services, neglect to fulfill vows and support the gospel and neglect to practice what we preach on the question of Sabbath observance—there must be reformation, or there will be revolution. Neglect of these things means loss of power and usefulness for work. And then God will call others to do his work. Neglect of these and other things vital to the maintenance of practical Christianity by the Protestant Church in Great Britain brought Methodism into existence. And I here record my deliberate conviction that on account of Methodism having become too "respectable," aristocratic and worldly for her God-given work God has called the Salvation Army to do it. That army does now the work that Methodists did one hundred years ago. God help us to lay these things to heart and profit by them!

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Giants versus Dwarfs.

MR. EDITOR: The nation has been advanced by latter-day skeptics and others and circulated near and far, that the ancients were only flat skulls and really a race of ignoramus, while we moderns possess all the knowledge and all the wisdom. Now I am foolish enough to dare think otherwise, to think that the ancients were really the masters and the moderns only the scholars, and not very far ahead of their teachers, if any. I feel that "there were giants in those days," and little else but dwarfs in our times.

The human race may be compared to the horn of an ox; all its force comes from the direction of the big end. We might ask: "Do not our languages come from the ancients?" Our grammars, too, come from the same source, for they are merely rules deduced from the best writings of these early times. Our alphabets, too, come from the big end of the horn. It is equally so with our numbers, and what could we do without them? Is there any modern invention comparable to letters and numbers? Astronomy also was the work of the ancients. They grouped the stars together and called them all by their names. Prof. Dick traced in one of his scientific works on the heavens the importance of regrouping the stars and giving them new names and names, calling them triangles, squares, pentagons, etc. But no one but himself, perhaps, ever seriously thought about it. They prefer to keep Ursa Major, Draco, and all the other huge animals in the heavens where the first astronomers placed them. They were certainly grand men to give us all the constellations, the zodiac with its twelve signs and the solar system and its motions. And, although we have the telescope and other appliances, yet we have not gone much beyond these great minds. They could not tell the distance to any planet or star. Neither can we. No two astronomers of our day will make the same estimation as to distance and size. They could not tell whether the heavenly bodies were populated or not. And we are just as ignorant. But let us hasten.

The ancients gave us the best masters of the sublime art of guiding, of sculpture, too, while they seem to have exchanged the flowery field of poetry. Have we any modern poets equal to Homer, Milton and Shakespeare? Music, too, falls from the big end of the horn as a part of the rich inheritance. So, also, all the orders of architecture, and we have not only failed to lay out a new one, but even to improve on any of the old orders. They also gave us the steam engine, for the Egyptians used it long before Christ, and we have simply improved upon the first one. They gave us the world's only great law giver, and what shall we say of a world's Redeemer, and such men as Noah, Abraham, Elijah, Job, Daniel, Paul, St. Augustine, Calvin, the Wesleyes and others? And then they added the sublime religion that earth ever saw, and the only one which is thoroughly adapted to man in every place in every condition and in every age. May we not, then, repeat the great fact that "there were giants in those days?" Not I fear we have no dwarfs in our age of Lilliputians. Our Intellects are dwarfed by the system of cramming in schools and colleges; our muscles are dwarfed by neglect; our religion is dwarfed, by indifference; our faith has not the size and force of "a grain of mustard seed;" our progress also. One prayer from Elijah was worth a planet load of ours. Our morals, too, and also our so-called liberality, are stunted and made pygmy; which fact is, perhaps, best seen, by the lean way we care for our preachers. "Good Lord, how long!"

JAMES W. BRADLEY.

OPELUSAS, LA., Jan. 18, 1884.

December 18, 1855: I returned yesterday from Entw, the seat of the Annual Conference. We had one of the most laborious and important sessions I have ever attended. The college question produced a discussion which lasted nearly three days, and resulted in the location of a college at Gretna, with an endowment of $168,750. We stationed one hundred and seventy preachers. Our Conference is very prosperous, and contains a number of promising young men who bid fair for great usefulness. The prospects of the Conference have never been so good. The missionary collections were over $23,000, and we have resolved to try to raise them to $30,000 next year. Columbus district still bears the banner. I have been reappointed to Columbus district after an absence of one year. I pray God to be with me and that I may be more diligent and faithful than ever before.

Bishop Paine was our presiding officer at this Conference. He appears to be very spiritual minded, and frequently in the midst of the anxiety of settling difficult appointments he would give vent to the pure effusions of his heart in dwelling upon the glorious rewards that await the faithful laborer at the end of his course, contrasting the privations and sacrifices of this world with the joys and glories of the world to come. He on such occasions reminded me of a father in the midst of a large family, giving them his affectionate advice and counsel, and I felt it a privilege to be associated with so good and great a man. May he long be spared to bless the church with his influence and example, and oh, may I find worthy to be associated with him in that land where all our troubles will be over, and joy and peace and rest shall be our portion forever.

August 29: We had a most gracious revival at Mount Zion quarterly meeting. On Monday night we had twenty-five penitents at the altar and six were converted, two of them married men. There were four conversions previous. We had a revival from the commencement of the meeting, and the church was generally blessed. I have rarely seen so much religious excitement as we had on Monday night; the females were prostrated on the floor; in different parts of the house lying motionless, while others were shouting and violently exercised in body. The whole congregation was on their feet for about two hours, and the cries and prayers of penitents mingled with the shouts and songs of believers made a sound like the noise of many waters. On Monday after the congregation was dismissed, I received a message from a gentleman who had left the meeting sick, requesting me to call, and see him at a house near the church; he was a backslider. I went and found him lying in a bed, his daughter fanning him. He commenced telling me about his sickness, and being compelled to leave the church. I immediately asked him if he enjoyed religion. As soon as I asked the question he became almost convulsed and broke out into passionate exclamations, confessing his backslidings and asked me to pray for him. I told him if he would pray for himself I would pray for him. He immediately turned over on his face and commenced crying for mercy at the top of his voice. We all knelt around his bed, and I prayed for him some time. When I ceased he continued to pray, and soon was comforted and blessed. I then asked him if he believed he would be willing to die; he replied he thought he should if he felt like he did then.

January 6, 1857: The Annual Conference was held at Tuskegee, Ala. Bishop Peirce presided. He is a most thorough itinerant, and has the most unqualified confidence in the Methodist system. He is not only itinerant in theory, but carries it fully out in practice. He is remarkable for his character, and requires full consecration of all the preachers. I was reappointed to the Columbus district. I feel deeply conscious of my insufficiency and want of qualifications for this work, but I came to it determined to seek the glory of God alone and not my own honor and exaltation. I feel very thankful to God for the success which has attended my labors the past year. We have had conversions in almost every circuit, station and mission in my district. We raised $1,400 for missions, and over raised the assessment for Conference collections. Myself and family have been blessed with health. One of my children has been converted and joined the church. I have enjoyed many pleasant and happy hours; but I am not as spiritual as I could wish. I have been too formal in my devotions and not sufficiently heavenly minded. I feel like trying to do better.

April 23: The first quarterly meeting in Columbus, which commenced on the eleventh instant, resulted in a very glorious revival which has been in progress ever since, and increases in interest and power; upwards of twenty have been converted. This morning, in prayer meeting, there were three youths happily converted, who came to the altar together, and there was a time of great rejoicing among the people of God. I have rarely seen such a time in this place. I am very glad to see the formality and stiffness of the church giving place to greater simplicity and spirituality.

In Memoriam.

"Death loves a shining mark." This was exemplified in the death of Miss Maggie Lake, who, for several years, was a member of the faculty of Whitworth College. After a pleasant summer vacation spent mostly in the North-west, she returned at the opening of the term to resume her duties as matron, one of the most responsible positions in the college. Her service had been sought by another school; but she came back to Whitworth, for her heart was here, and entered cheerfully upon another term. She was never very strong in body, and it was soon apparent that her health was not so good as usual. She had contracted cold during the summer on the upper Mississippi, which gave her at times much suffering and some uneasiness, and which doubtless hastened her death. She got excited from her duties for a few days to visit her mother and the family at Oxford, Miss., hoping to report for duty the Monday following in better health. In this there was a sad disappointment, for in three days after her arrival home she was prostrated and suffered very greatly for more than a month, and on one day in December sweetly fell on sleep in the hope of a blessed immortality.

During her sickness she was patient, resigned, courageous. The day before her death a surgical operation, a very painful one, was performed the second time. She refused to take an opiate, but said to her mother: "Let me put my hand in yours," which she did and endured with heroic fortitude. The operating surgeon was surprised and moved to admiration and said that he had never seen such heroism before.

She desired to live for two reasons: one was that she might stay with her mother, care for her and make her happy in declining years; the other was that she might show more than she ever had, her love for her Savior and his cause; but said she: "If it be God's will that I die, then all is well, and I am resigned."

During her sickness one thing was deeply impressed upon my mind, that the faithful and conscientious discharge of duty with the right spirit, by a self-officer, will gain the admiration and love of pupils. Every morning during her sickness the question was asked: "Have you heard from Miss Maggie, and how is she?" A favorable answer was received with joy, an unfavorable one with sadness and sighs. When the Christmas holidays are announced joy is usually manifested by clapping of hands and expressions of delight; but not so this time, for the vacant seat and the room to be left in black and white told that one we loved and honored had fallen asleep, and the announcement of the Christmas holidays this time was received in silence.

Miss Maggie was dignified without stiffness. She was natural, easy and graceful in her movements. She was a born body. She was firm in governing, but not obstinate. She was cool, dispassionate and governed herself well, which enabled her to govern others. She was devoted to the college. When ground was broken for the Institute, or soon after, to encourage me she said that she wanted to pay towards it one hundred dollars in monthly installments of two dollars each, and she paid half out of her salary. I once objected to receiving it, which gave her sorrow.

She joined the Methodist Church after she came to the college, and continued a consistent and active member till her death. Pupils and teachers loved and honored her, we were her men and our own loss. We sympathize with her parents and mingle our tears with theirs. We would have availed the stroke, but it came, and we bow submissively, for God's will be done.

Christmas at Monroe, La.

Mr. Editor: It is not too late, I hope, to wish you a glad New Year. This has been a merry Christmas for me. The hearts of our dear Sabbath-school children, and as well as many of the teachers, were gladdened by the presents received from the Christmas tree. We had good music and several appropriate recitations by children from the school. My class presented me with a lovely Bible, which I do appreciate so much. Old Santa Claus did not forget our pastor and his wife. He received thirty dollars in gold, and also a silver cake basket and pickle stand. While we rejoice over the Christmas festival, we are so glad to think we were able to say good-bye to our dear pastor. He certainly has been faithful. Our prayers go with him. Our school is about the same. I pray God to direct the right men to this place. I would be so happy to have another one of your excellent sermons.

Respectfully,

M. E. RICHMOND.

Christmas at the Enterprise Parsonage.

Mr. Editor: Another Christmas has come, and gone, and to us it was the happiest we have known during our itinerant life. These good people did not forget their pastor and his family when preparing gifts for the loved ones in their own homes. A wagon was driven to the parsonage early Christmas morning with everything good and substantial we could want. The bright faces of the gentlemen who came to our door proved how truly they felt. "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

We enter upon the duties of the new year with bright hopes of success. Our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met on Tuesday last, and quite a large number were present, and a most delightful meeting was held. Our officers are faithful and our members interested in every effort we make. We made a missionary quilt of crazy patchwork, each member made one square, and our president put it together and finished it. We sold this quilt several days ago for twenty dollars, and with this amount made Mrs. L. Cray Sadler, of Louisiana, a life member of the Enterprise Missionary Society of Women. I believe we have the best society in the Mississippi Conference. Others have more members, perhaps, and raise more money, but from month to month the officers and members come together with unabated zeal and ready for whatever work is imposed upon them; there seems no flagging of interest. Much of this is attributable to our beloved president, who, though young in years, sets an example of faithfulness to duty that has made her a power in the church. And this work of love has so endeared her to the hearts of each member of the society that she wields an influence she little dreams of. I hope those who are engaged in this "woman's work for woman" will think of this and not plead youth and inexperience as an excuse for neglect of duty.

Our Conference president, Miss Jennie Petty, who for so long hovered on the brink of the grave, has been given back to us, and is now rapidly improving and will soon be able to enter the Lord's vineyard and work. I think she will come up out of this ordeal, through which she has passed, as gold refined and fit for the Master's use.

Bishop Pierce Memorial Quilt.

Mr. Editor: We will be greatly obliged if you will call the attention of the Western Methodist to our "Bishop Pierce Memorial Quilt." It is a gem of beauty. The design bilateral, the object two-fold, to honor our sainted Bishop and assist Miss Laura Haygood's school, and the Indian Mission. The latter always enlisted the great heart of our beloved Bishop. The central star is dedicated to the Bishops. On the crimson plush border will be embroidered the names, leaving a star for each State, and our Christian papers. We earnestly solicit the officers of Woman's Missionary Societies, Ministers and all who would like to assist in this good work to send names and dime until May 1 to Temperance Reform.

For a few weeks the active friends of temperance who had no sympathy with the St. John movement and regret the injury done to the temperance cause by the campaign have been busy in organizing an organization to fight the reform over its present critical stage. The movement culminated yesterday in this city. "The National League (non-partisan and non-sectarian) for the suppression of the liquor traffic" has been formed. Good temperance men and women have been enlisted, and it is feared this league has been formed to counteract the effect of the election. The movement has been kept from the press until now. November 28 was the date of the first meeting; but Rev. Dr. Edwards Everett Hale, Daniel Rochester and others were present, and it was decided to open correspondence widely over the country, to see what support could be obtained. A platform of principles and object was prepared and circulated. Numerous favorable answers came, and many elegant men, members of Congress, Judges and women are committed to the support of the movement. Arranged by States, some of the names of these supporters are as follows:

New Hampshire—Rev. Dr. James Pike, Senator H. W. Blair.

The next step was a meeting held Thursday afternoon in Room No. 6, in the Wesleyan Building on Bromfield street. Rev. Dr. Rochester presided, and explained the origin and object of the movement, and speeches were made by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster and others. A constitution was adopted as follows:

Art. I. The name of this organization shall be "The National League (non-partisan and non-sectarian) for the suppression of the liquor traffic."

Art. II, Sec. 1. We believe the evils of intemperance to be manifold and virulent alike destructive of individual character, social welfare and national progress.

Sec. 2. We believe the common instincts of humanity, the deeper claims of patriotism and the broader demands of Christian philanthropy imperatively call upon all men everywhere to make common cause against these evils.

Sec. 3. We believe that the Church of God, temperance organizations and the circulation of a wide temperance literature to be chief of these moral agencies.

Sec. 4. We believe that moral reforms depend primarily upon intelligent convictions in the hearts of the people.

Sec. 5. We believe it is the right and duty of the State to legislate against the traffic in alcoholic beverages, and to enforce laws duly enacted, and that good results have always followed wise legislation when faithfully enforced.

Sec. 6. We believe that any proposition, so broadly and widely affecting society in its physical, social, moral, economic and commercial interests as the suppression of the traffic in alcoholic beverages, involving so many questions of natural rights, ultimately to be submitted to the popular vote, actuated by the verdict of the people and thus lifted above the passions and fluctuations of partisan legislation.

Sec. 7. We believe that the temperance cause should avail itself of the advantages of legislative and civil action, secured by legitimate political effort; but we nevertheless believe that the political action should be avoided, and that the cause should be advanced by moral and educational means.

Art. III. Objects: First, the enforcement of laws against the liquor traffic; second, the withdrawal of local sales from the liquor traffic; third, the suppression of the liquor traffic; fourth, and ultimate purpose is by constitutional and statutory provisions, to banish the liquor traffic from the land.

Art. IV. Methods: Discarding partisan entanglements, we announce our sole purpose to be the suppression of the liquor traffic; and for this we propose to create and intensify public sentiment, by the pulpit, the platform and the press; second, to educate the young in the public schools and elsewhere, as to the nature and effects of alcoholic liquors; third, to use all legitimate means for final decision, to refer the question for final decision, to the constitutional verdict of the people.

We invite persons of all classes, creeds, parties and States to unite on this platform, and work and vote against the liquor traffic without regard to religious, political and party interests.

Art. V. To-N. relate to officers, meetings and business details.

A list of officers was elected who will hold till the first annual meeting, and will occur Jan. 1, 1886, unless the time is changed by the Directors. The officers are these: President, Rev. Dr. Rochester of Natick; General Secretary, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster; Recording Secretary, Rev. A. H. Plumb, D. D., of Boston; Treasurer, Hon. Joseph D. W. White of Pittsburgh; Corresponding Secretary, Hon. Oliver Hoyt of Connecticut; Lewis Miller of Ohio, Hon. J. H. Burwell of Illinois, Rev. E. E. Hale, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Mrs. C. S. Prescott of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Annie Whittemore of Pennsylvania.

A few Vice Presidents were chosen, and some complaints of the worst kind. In November, 1884, she wrote: "I have not seen a sick day since I began Warner's Safe Cure and never felt better; have gained eighteen pounds."

FRANCIS L. DOW, assistant marshal, Taunton, Mass., two years ago was cured of stone in the kidney and bladder by Warner's Safe Cure and in June, 1884, he wrote: "I have not seen a sick day since I began Warner's Safe Cure and never felt better; have gained eighteen pounds."

JOHN N. A. PLUMPTON, of Worcester, Mass., in May, 1880, was prostrated by kidney trouble, caused by the passage of gravel from the kidneys to the bladder. He then began using Warner's Safe Cure and in a short time passed a large calculus and a number of smaller ones. Dec. 10th, 1884, Mr. Plampton wrote: "I have had no recurrence of my old trouble since Warner's Safe Cure perfectly cured me four years ago, and I am more than willing to say a good word for it."

Mrs. CARREL WALLIS, Beverly, Mass., was utterly broken down in 1871, with complicated female disorders and was unable to obtain any relief from the best physicians. Dec. 5th, 1884, she writes: "I owe my recovery to the use of Warner's very valuable Safe Remedies."

L. DOW, Esq., 254 Columbia Ave., Boston, Mass., used Warner's Safe Cure in a case of kidney disorder, and Nov. 28th, 1884, he wrote: "I have had no reason to doubt the permanency of my cure."

Rev. S. P. SMITH, (Universalist) of Marshfield, Mass., suffered for years from bilious attacks and general debility. In Jan., 1884, he was cured by Warner's Safe Cure. Writing June and 1884, he says: "There has been no return of the bilious trouble; and I have not experienced the least pain or suffering since the restoration by Warner's Safe Cure."

Mrs. S. A. C. ARK, East Croydon, Conn., in 1867 was utterly broken up with constant and severe complaints of the worst kind. In November, 1884, she wrote: "Warner's Safe Cure cured me four years ago, and has kept me well to this day."

FIFTH.—It is no small satisfaction to us to know that very many thousands of people owe their life and health to Warner's Safe Remedies.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1885.

(EDITORIAL NOTE: The above is, we believe, the first fac-simile type-written letter which has been used in public print, and it is certainly very striking.)

TO THE PUBLIC, GREETING:

Boards of Health are now everywhere correcting the faults of sewerage and advising the people how to prevent future epidemics.

But other precautions are necessary, without which no amount of Sanitation can avail. Dr. Koch says that cholera has but little chance among those who keep the digestive organs and the liver, skin and kidneys (the sewers of the body) in healthful operation.

Warner's SAFE Remedies are the best scientific Curatives and Preventives, and we cannot too much emphasize the importance of using them now, as a safeguard against any future scourge.

Much of the common ailments are caused, not primarily by bad blood, but by IMPAIRED LIVER AND KIDNEYS. This results in blood corruption and injury to the entire system. Remove this impaired action, and most ordinary ailments will disappear. Other practitioners have held that extreme liver and kidney disorders are incurable. We, however, by the severest tests, have unanswerably proved the contrary. Please note:

FIRST.—WE DO NOT CURE EVERY KNOWN DISEASE FROM ONE BOTTLE. Warner's Safe Remedies are specifics, which have been successively put upon the market ONLY IN OBEEDIENCE TO STRONG PUBLIC DEMAND. These remedies are: Warner's SAFE Cure, for kidney, liver, bladder and blood disorders, General debility, Impotency, gravel, female irregularities; Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, for Diabetes—the only known specific; Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia; Warner's Safe Pills for Constipation, diarrhoea, biliousness; Warner's Safe Nerve for nervous disorders; Warner's Safe Throatine for Asthma, catarrh; Warner's Tippecanoe for all stomach derangements.

SECOND.—Warner's Safe Remedies, spite of all opposition, have won the victory and are everywhere recognized as leading STANDARDS.

THIRD.—After six years of unequalled experience, we give these unqualified guarantees:

GUARANTEE I.—That Warner's Safe Remedies are pure, harmless, effective.

GUARANTEE II.—That the Testimonials used by us, so far as we know, are bona fide, with a forfeit of $5,000 for proof to the contrary.

GUARANTEE III.—That Warner's Safe Remedies are NOT MERELY TEMPORARY, BUT PERMANENT, IN THEIR CURATIVE EFFECTS AND WILL SUSTAIN EVERY CLAIM, IF USED SUFFICIENTLY AND PRECISELY AS DIRECTED.

FOURTH.—Special inquiry among hundreds of our oldest patients results in unequivocal testimony that the cures wrought six, five, four and three years ago, were PERMANENT. And most of these Patients were pronounced INCURABLE when they began Warner's Safe Remedies. Read a few of Thousands of examples:

B. D. DIXIE, Marblehead, Mass., (aged 76), had for many years been seriously ill of complicated liver, stomach and spleen disorders. His kidneys were also affected. In 1884 he used Warner's Safe Cure, and June, 1884, wrote: "I had no return of old troubles; health never better."

JOHN N. A. PLUMPTON, of Worcester, Mass., in May, 1880, was prostrated by kidney trouble, caused by the passage of gravel from the kidneys to the bladder. ## Notice.

The preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, residing in this city, are hereby requested to meet in the pastor's office at Carondelet Street Church, next Monday, 26 inst., at 10 A. M. All brethren who may be visiting our city are cordially invited to be present.

On our second page will be found an admirable sermon from Rev. David Leith, of Memphis, Tenn. It will do to read, reread and file away for yet another reading. The subject discussed is all important to our Methodism, and the manner of treatment is fresh and suggestive. Don't fail to carefully examine it.

The City Item attempts to ridicule Dr. R. A. Holland for his sermon, last Sunday, against Sabbath desecration in this city and at the Exposition. In that matter Dr. Holland is right, and his brave words will find an echo over the country. The management had as well recognize the fact that this Sunday opening is an outrage upon the moral sense of the nation and will be rebuked.

On our first page will be found a heart tribute to the memory of Rev. J. T. Heard, by the Rev. C. C. Williams, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Braudon, Miss. They were co-laborers in the same community and brethren beloved. In a private note accompanying his communication, he says:

Bro. Heard and myself came here about the same time, and ever since we met a strong friendship has existed between us. We worked together, visited together, prayed together and preached together; and now since God has called him away I feel it my duty to speak to all your readers of that brotherhood that existed between a Methodist and a Presbyterian.

The great Exposition is now in full blast. With the exception of the art gallery, which will be thrown open in a few days, and a few minor exhibits, everything is in readiness and the display is magnificent. Those who have delayed their coming under an apprehension that preparations were incomplete can pack their trunks and take the next train. Of course alterations and additions will be made during its entire continuance; but there is more here and now than the most diligent student can master in months. Notes from the Exposition we will give our readers from time to time. A column or more was intended for this issue, but lack of space would not allow its appearance.

Benevolent and beneficent gifts have varied effects upon the people. Some are stimulated to like acts of Christiana liberality and to a higher and nobler appreciation of the true value of money. But others, alas! have only begotten within them an intense selfish craving after somebody's charity. A magnificent offering awakens a hope that the same liberal gentleman will help them when their real condition and wants are made known. So they proceed to ply him with all sorts of petitions and appeals for assistance. One wants to gain a church door, another to paint a parsonage fence and yet another to buy a book-mark for the pulpit Bible. Nor do they stop at these. Personal wants and necessities are made known with more importunity than modesty. After Mr. George I. Sney, of New York, made his generous gifts to Emory College, among other appeals was one from a man asking for a watch and chain for his daughter. Our neighbor and friend, Dr. H. F. Johnson, has a like experience.

Since his grand Centenary offering of $20,000 to Whitworth College his mail has greatly increased. Letters soliciting aid for schools, colleges, churches and parsonages, also personal donations, loans, etc., have been numerous and urgent. The idea was irresistible that one who could do so large a charity was amply able to grant small favors when, as a matter of fact, that generous donation involved personal and pecuniary sacrifice and embarrassment that several years will not relieve.

A Retroactive Conscience.

This phase of development is of common observation in every analysis of the spiritual inquirer. The types of conscience are as varied as the phases of religious character. To say that a man is conscientious conveys a very inadequate idea. All consciences are not alike either in the stage or line of their development. They are often radically at variance in their relation to the same subject. The Mexican highwayman who robbed the passengers on a stage-coach of their watches, money and other valuables, was too conscientious to eat the meat of a stolen lunch because it happened to be Friday. He had a churchy conscience for canonical times and seasons, but had no compunctions about robbing or killing a heretic. And again, men are not always alike scrupulous about the same thing. Unless carefully and prayerfully nurtured, conscience becomes hardened and deadened. It gives a feeble note of warning after each disregard of its admonitions, until at length not even a whisper or a distant echo can be heard.

But the retroactive conscience is of all abnormal developments the most unhappy and dangerous, though it is alive and strong. When one is aroused from a long spiritual torpor and discovers that the divine monitor of the soul has been silent and dead, the very fact excites alarm and becomes a potent factor of reform. This more he is conscious of, the peril of all those years grows in vividness and power, and intensifies present concern. But the retroactive conscience is not dead or asleep. It is sensitive and sorrowful. Its upbraidings are bitter and perpetual, but never lead to reform. By the retroactive conscience we mean the habit of constant distress over the irreparable past. Instead of watching and warning against possible perils in the present and future—causing one to stop and start back at the thought of a certain act—it is perpetually mourning over offenses past and beyond recall. A man with such a conscience is always on trial and under condemnation for the sins of other years. He never forgets, but lives in a sorrowful, ceaseless retrospection. Against such a morbid spiritual state the psalmist prayed when he said, "Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions." And for the same purpose the apostle declared: "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark, etc." This is not indifference to wrong-doing or a light appreciation of sin's iniquity and enormity, but such a disregard of the past as will prevent a morbid brooding over the irreparable and a chill to the aspirations of faith. One who idly broods over the things that are behind, never has a peaceful present or a hopeful future.

The retroactive conscience is by no means exceptional. It is the common and painful observation of every discriminating pastor. He sees it in the brother whose periodical failings sometimes grossly offend ordinary decency. He loathes most sincerely and profoundly his grievous transgression, but strangely repeats the same offense. In love-feast and class-meeting he dwells only upon his short-comings. There is no joyful, hopeful note in his testimony. It is all and always on the lowest and most solemn key. But this lamentation and bitter judgment against himself never prevent a repetition of the act. And in less offensive manifestations the same disposition is encountered in every pastoral experience. There is a strange recklessness of future conduct, though morbidly sensitive to past transgressions. We have known many a person to sincerely grieve over a rash speech and yet never bridle the tongue; to mourn a foolish act and the next day yield to the same temptation. The past is frequently recalled to be condemned, but a conscience that testifies is never cultivated.

The danger of such a spiritual condition is its deceptiveness. A keen regret for wrong is mistaken for a true and pure love for the right. Virtue is found in condemning sin, but there is no avowal of it. And this condemnation is at length rebuffed upon for divine commendation. A man argues that a conscience which is pained at wrong-doing must be a good conscience. So his lamentations become a ground of hope, though they never lead to reformation. Sin is a wound for weeping over it. Such a conscience is a snare. It weeps but never fully repents. It sorrow for sin, but never destroys the love for it or the bent to commit it. And so we conclude that an unhealthy conscience is as dangerous as a dead one. It had as well be voiceless as only retrospective.

On to Rome.

There was an old saying that "all roads lead to Rome." This is not quite true of the Protestant Episcopal Church; but it may with emphasis be said that the main road leads to Rome. We have long thought that the evangelical, or low-church, party should become Methodists and the ritualistic, or high-church, party go on to Romanism, and let that earthly house known as the Protestant Episcopal Church be dissolved. That the two parties are irreconcilable is self-evident. Between them there is a ceaseless strife, and the conflict is irrepressible. They formally dwell together in one outward organization, but within there is no peace. Another fact, however, is patent—that the ritualistic party is in the ascendant. The administration of the church is largely in their hands. When a new Bishop of a diocese is to be elected, and each party has a candidate, the ritualists usually triumph. The contest was long and bitter in the recent election for the diocese of Maryland; but at length the high-church party scored a victory, and Dr. Paret, of Washington, was tendered the mitre.

The drift toward Rome is seen in a more elaborate display of service in the cities especially—in costly altar cloths, candles, incensing the prayers, specific directions for taking the sacrament, multitudinous bowing and genuflections and in the multiplication of various orders. We have now a little book before us which was used by a zealous rector in a Mississippi parish, in which is taught the Romish doctrines of the real presence, priestly absolution and the virtue of prayers for the dead. The bread of the sacrament was to be received in the upturned palm of the right hand, supported by the left, and thus it was to be borne to the mouth without the polluting touch of the fingers.

But the latest development of this Romanizing tendency is in the city of New York, the parties to which are the Rev. Mr. Huntington, a son of Bishop Huntington, of Central New York, and Rt. Rev. H. C. Potter, Assistant Bishop of New York. It seems that this young clergyman conceived the idea of being an Episcopal monk after the order of the "Begging Friars" in the time of Wycliffe. So, with great pomp and ceremony he was admitted to the "Order of the Holy Cross" and assumed the vows of perpetual poverty, chastity and obedience.

Here is the account of it as given in the daily papers:

On Tuesday last a most impressive service was held in the chapel of the Sisterhood of St. John Baptist, on the occasion of the profession of the Rev. James O. S. Huntington as a member of the Order of the Holy Cross. Bishop Henry C. Potter, Bishop Huntington, the father of the novice to be professed; Bishop Quilley, and many prominent clergymen of the city were present. After the Gospel, Bishop Potter took the copy of the Rule of Life of the Order with the cross and the girdle, blessed them and laid them on the altar. Then turning to the novice he demanded, "My son, what do you desire?"

The novice answered, "I desire, for love of Jesus, to devote myself, body, soul and spirit, to the service of Almighty God, in the religious life, as a member of the Order of the Holy Cross; and to that end, to take upon me, of my own free will, the vows of religious poverty, chastity and obedience." After some further questions, the Bishop demanded his assent to each of the three vows. The novice then knelt, and the Bishop said, "Almighty God, who hath given you this will to do all these things, grant you also strength and power to fulfill the same; that he may accomplish the work which he hath begun in you." The hymn Veni Creator Spiritus was then sung, after which the Bishop took the novice by the right hand, and admitted him to the Order. The Bishop then presented him with the cross as the symbol of his vow of poverty, with the girdle as the symbol of his vow of chastity, and with the Rule of Life in token of his vow of obedience. The communion service was then proceeded with, while the professed remained kneeling until after the blessing. All then rose and sang the Te Deum.

By what authority Bishop Potter performed his part in exacting such vows and investing the candidate with the cross and the girdle, has not transpired. Without claiming a very intimate knowledge of their ecclesiastical laws, we are quite sure it is extra-canonical. If the young man wanted to live a bachelor in order to a more undivided devotion to his ministerial work, it is all right. And if that was the controlling motive, his course was worthy of the highest praise. As examples of like single-mindedness, he could point to such historic Methodist names as Bishops Asbury and McKendree. But why this parade of a public and formal assumption of such vows? It could not be an ordination or consecration to an order or office in the ministry, for he had already become a presbyter. The Bishop has as much right to episcopally celebrate a promise to wear a straight-breasted coat or eat omelette for breakfast, as a vow to be poor and never marry. It is all a concession to Romish folly and superstition, and if the evangelical party is powerless to stay this drift, disintegration and absorption will soon ensue. When the Episcopal Church attains unto unmarried "fathers" and hooded sisters, the time for departure is at hand. Father Huntington is the first of a large company who have taken up the line of march toward Rome. There is no middle ground between Methodism and the Papacy.

The following are the statistics of church membership in the United States as published in the Methodist Year-Book for 1885, just received:

Death of President Rush.

A telegram was received by Dr. C. W. Carter from his son, a student at Centenary College, Jackson, La., on Monday, stating that President D. M. Rush had died that morning at seven o'clock. We had just read a note from him about the death of his beloved young friend and pastor, Rev. M. C. Callaway, when the sad news came announcing his own departure to the better land. Thus thrice has the Mississippi Conference been bereaved since its recent session just four weeks ago. Bro. Rush was present at Yazoo City in usual health, and addressed the Conference in the interest of Centenary College. He died suddenly of apoplexy after an illness of only about twenty-four hours. Alas! how rapidly our brethren are gathering home! In the very morning of life, thoroughly educated, passionately fond of the work of an educator, of a well-balanced character and with a genius for administration, he was doing a great work for the church and promised a career of the highest distinction. During several months last summer and fall we traveled and preached together, visiting camp meetings and District Conferences. Not till then did we learn to appreciate his real ability and admire his rare virtues. He had a mind of singular clearness and large grasp, a moral courage and a firmness of purpose that fitted him for leadership, a calmness of judgment and readiness of discrimination that always commanded respect, and a broad, generous sympathy that attracted friends with looks of steel. The many otherwise tedious hours of travel enlivened by his genial, instructive companionship linger among the most pleasant experiences of the year. And in all those days of constant association we never noted an undignified act nor an unsanctified expression. With all his accurate scholarship and clear discernment, his purity of character was its conspicuous adornment.

Bro. Rush was born in North Alabama, not far from the Mississippi line, and was about forty years of age at his death. He was educated at the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., and that ancient and honored institution of learning never had a more faithful student nor conferred her degree upon a more worthy son. Entering college at the age of twenty-two, and prosecuting his education with means of his own earning, he ate no idle bread and was a model to the whole student body of conscientious diligence and manly propriety. So distinguished was his course as a student that immediately after graduation he was tendered a position in the faculty. Shortly after he was elected professor of mathematics in Centenary College, and filled that chair with marked ability until two years ago when he was called to succeed Dr. C. G. Andrews in the presidency. The responsibilities of this latter position he strung from, but, at the unanimous request of the Board of Trustees, were assumed with as pure consecration and lofty a purpose as ever dominated the soul of a Christy pastor. His success in the presidency demonstrated the wisdom of his election. The resignation and simple endowment of the college was the supreme purpose of life. Last year he secured nearly ten thousand dollars on the endowment, and had full hope of the most gratifying results.

We have sustained a sad loss. A scriptural, earnest preacher; an accomplished, commanding educator and a noble, spotless character has been called to his reward. Words fail to express our profound sorrow and sense of loneliness. To his beloved young wife, who was the pride of his manly heart, we tender a Christian sympathy that can not be translated into speech.

Rev. M. C. Callaway—A Life That Speaks.

A brief announcement of the death of this estimable and eminently useful, popular young minister, was made last week. Some more extended mention of his virtues and labors is demanded by his brethren and is due to a life as pure and a career so conspicuously successful. He was one of the rising young men of the Mississippi Conference, and if length of days had been granted, he would have become a star of the first magnitude. His death makes a sad vacancy in our ranks, and wherever he was known the news will be heard with sorrow and tears. We cannot realize that the bright, joyous, genial, noble young soldier of the Cross, whom we met so recently in pleasant Conference session, has gone. His words had scarcely ceased to echo in our ears, when we were summoned to his bier.

Born of Methodist parents, and of a family of preachers, his father being an earnest, zealous member of our local ministry, he was nurtured in the church and early felt a call of God to preach the gospel. That call was unmistakable, and seemed to have been reauthenticated every day during his pastoral career. To prepare himself for its sacred responsibilities he contended successfully against all embarrassments to obtain a thorough education. No sacrifice was too great, no labor too hard, in order to gain an adequate equipment for his high and holy calling. To him the call to preparation was equally authoritative and clear with the call to duty.

And with royal, loyal heroism did he obey his Lord's command. Laying aside all other plans, purposes and ambitions, he devoted himself with unwearied diligence to the close of his bright young life to this one work. He thought and talked only of the great cause in which he was engaged. All his hopes in life were interwoven with the pastoral office. Every plan formed was with direct reference to the best interests of his ministerial work. When the voice of the Master was obeyed and he enlisted in His service, it was with the whole heart and for life. This aspect of his character and career we want to commend as worthy of all emulation. And in that fact may be discovered the secret of his uniform success. He was never embarrassed or handicapped by distracting cares and ambitions. From his first pastoral to the last beloved charge, in the midst of which he sweetly fell on sleep, he labored with such fidelity and acceptability, that his return for another year was urgently requested. He was in demand. Every church he served gave him up with regret, and to every new appointment he found a cordial welcome.

Again, his was a cheerful ministry. He carried a bright, winning smile and cheery voice into every home. While preserving the dignity and gravity of his high calling, he was radiant and glad. He made the despondent hopeful, the cynical cheerful, and the misanthropic more brotherly and kind. His parishioners said, "We always love for Brother Callaway to visit us. He makes us feel better." The children loved him, and the old people were fond of him as of their own sons. But while thus far removed from asceticism, he was never frivolous or foolish. His dignity of character commanded respect, while his cheerful, sympathetic nature won the affection—often the devotion—of his friends.

Again, his was a loyal ministry. To him the call of his church was the voice of God. He accepted his appointments cheerfully, and went with a glad heart, determined to do his very best work. Without criticism or complaint against the constituted authorities, and never feeling himself discounted and afflicted, he loyally labored to build up our beloved Methodism.

Other virtues, as we saw them adorning the life of our dear young brother, will not be portrayed. Passing away at the early age of twenty-nine, he has left a memorial of apostolic zeal and devotedness to duty that will be a heritage of joy to the church. To his aged father and bereaved young wife—in six short months a bride and widow—we extend sincere condolence. He died, of pneumonia, at Jackson, La., after an illness of two weeks, and was buried at Jackson, Miss., the funeral ceremonies being conducted by Dr. C. G. Andrews and the writer.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Hinton, editor of the Quarterly Review, writes us as follows:

"Mr. Editor: Please announce that the January issue of the Quarterly Review is delayed to give no returns from the Conferences before mailing. It will soon appear and be none the worse for the delay. Let all who wish to begin with the year send their names and payments. Terms, $2.50 cash in advance."

National Aid to Public Education.

At a meeting of friends of temporary national aid to common schools, held at the residence of Dexter A. Hawkins, in the City of New York, December 17, 1884, addresses were made by Mr. H. H. Boddy, Dr. Mayo, Dr. Prime, Dr. Browne, Mr. Hawkins and Gen. Palmer. Rev. Dr. Dexter A. Hawkins were appointed a committee to go to Washington and urge the matter in every practical way. The following statement and resolution prepared by Mr. Hawkins was ordered printed and a copy sent to each member of Congress. That the "Blair Bill," or some such measure, should be passed is the earnest desire of most thoughtful men in this latitude:

It appears by the census of 1880 that there are in the United States 6,239,958 persons above the age of ten who can not read and write; that of these 1,908,818 are voters, and that the number of illiterate voters in nearly every State is larger than the majority in the said State for either political party at the Presidential elections. In some of the States it is from forty to fifty per cent. of the whole number of voters; hence the decision of the Presidency is always in the hands of those who can not read the ballots they cast. Through ignorance they do not perform their political duties at all, or do it imperfectly and under the direction of some designing leader. This is a constant menace to free institutions. The productivity of the labor of illiterates is from twenty-five to fifty per cent. less than it would be if they were educated to the extent of the common school course; hence illiteracy is a great hindrance to the growth of national wealth. The ignorant in the United States produce twenty-two times their pro rata proportion of paupers, and ten times their pro rata proportion of criminals; hence, as a consequence of illiteracy, they impose a heavy burden upon the rest of the community. The States north-west of the Ohio have magnificent school funds from public lands granted by the national government; but the States now oppressed with illiteracy have not been thus favored.

All parts of the country are so intimately bound together that disease and injury in one part affects the whole, and its cure is equally for the benefit of the whole.

In the localities where illiteracy is most abundant, the greatest lack of means to remedy it. If they undertook the expense unaided it would, for some years, require a heavier burden of taxation than any community can stand.

This condition of affairs was a great extent brought about by the nation, and the nation should aid in relieving it. The question in various forms has been before Congress for eleven years, and has been fully discussed in all its bearings. The bill that passed the Senate last session seems to provide the needed national aid, and, if the House of Representatives is so disposed, it can be readily substituted for the House bill, and passed this session, thus enabling the illiterate States, by another year, to provide schools for all their children.

Resolved, That the members of the House be most earnestly requested to take up and pass the Senate bill. To aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools at the earliest day practicable.

An Argument for An Advocate.

The demand for a religious paper in every home increases with the enterprise and growth of modern journalism. In an eager desire to gather all the news and give it sensational display there is such prominence given to the evil and immoral that a carefully edited religious periodical becomes a necessity. It is not so much the bad facts recorded as their attractive embellishment that poisons and brutalizes. The following from the Northern Christian Advocate is so well said that we give it entire. For all our readers we will gladly serve as that "lady-in-waiting."

Of one feature of her royal life Queen Victoria is to be envied. It is said that she never reads a newspaper at first hand, but a lady-in-waiting first examines all the papers that come into the castle and circles with a red line such items as her majesty ought to see. These selected parts—only these—the queen reads, and she scrupulously restrains her vision from seeing anything else in the paper. It might be a benefit to us all to have our news sifted for us by a lady-in-waiting, seeing that our news columns for us are so special in their use of the torch. The suppression of news for any purpose seems to be considered inconsistent with the functions of publishing. One can hardly ever look through a column of the news of the day without finding something that one may, and that one would greatly prefer not to have read. Said a lady the other day, who is suffering with nervous affection, "I have been trying to read the newspapers for a week. My physician advised me to do it for the diversion of my mind from my own suffering. But I shall have to stop, for I have not looked in a single paper without finding from one to twenty matters reported that shock my nerves and make me sick for the rest of the day." Are there not enough persons with sensitive nervous systems, tortured with those who have a conscience against the reading of that which shocks, to warrant the publication of an expurgated edition of the newspaper? If one large class of readers demand a full and explicit account of all that occurs in the day's history, there is another class that would prefer cleanness to fullness. Why not satisfy both classes by issuing separate editions? Until the gentlemen of the press will take under consideration the demands of the conscientious and the nervous among their patrons we ought to have a large force of ladies waiting with red pencils in hand, or, better still, with brushes and black paint to blot out that which it were better for us not to see in print.

Irreverence in Church.

In many places in Mississippi irreverence in the house of God during the hour for Divine worship is one of the crying evils among the young people. The place and service is as much profaned by their thoughtless conduct as was the temple by the sale of oxen and doves in the time of our blessed Lord. In many places there is a buzz of conversation and a constant titter of laughter up to the moment service begins. This destroys the feeling of solemnity so essential to the sanctuary, and it is exceedingly painful to those who go to church to worship God. Doubtless this kind of irreverence comes more from thoughtlessness than from viciousness; but in either case it is exceedingly sinful and deserving of the severest rebuke. If these things were done in a corner in the backwoods, where people knew no better, then cultivation and training would be the cure for it; but it more frequently occurs in town than in the country, and among those who, to all appearance, belong to good families and have been accustomed to good society. In some places the young people whisper and talk during the whole time of service—during the singing, the prayers, and the sermon. Such conduct would be highly unbecoming, impolite, undignified and ungentlemanly in a heathen temple during idol worship, to say nothing of the house of God, and during the worship of God. In some places young gentlemen (pardon that word) pass notes to young ladies (pardon that word, too) during the delivery of the sermon and in time of prayer. In many places, particularly in towns, the young people—at least many of them—sit bolt upright during prayer, gazing all over the house with a stare of utter indifference as to what is going on. There is nothing—absolutely nothing—in their looks or manners that indicates anything like reverence for what is going on for the Lord that made them. These are facts, Doctor—painful facts. If you don't what I say, come up and go around with me and I will show you. Ask the pastors and they will confirm my statements. I am not a cranker or growler. I have too much high blood in me for that.

What is the matter with our young folks, Doctor? Do you know? For our part, our home life in many places has been nearly or quite destroyed, and the children grow up in the streets. Many parents have thrown down the reins of family government, and their children, like the "heathen," are a law unto themselves. They think of nothing but frolic and fun. Our family altars have been thrown down, and the children are not taught at home to respect the hour of devotion. In many places the silly boys and foolish girls sit together in our churches, and in this way they fall into bad habits. Some of our Sunday-schools—I am sorry to say it—are so conducted as to destroy in the minds of the children and young people all ideas of solemnity in the church and all respect for the house and worship of God. They are really Sunday frolics—regular pic-nics—made up to make them attractive. This thing deserves serious, prayerful consideration on the part of all who have the welfare of the young at heart. An irreverent Sunday-school will make an irreverent congregation. In many places, Sunday afternoon singings, in the absence of the pastor or older persons, help to destroy in the minds of the young all respect for the church. It is to them a place for hilarity, gossip and courting.

In some places churches are turned into town halls for lectures, for stereopticon shows and for Christmas trees, and the like, and pretty soon the church is no more than a hall or ball room. These evils are not peculiar to any one denomination of Christians, though I believe Methodist and Baptist churches are often profaned by unholy uses that are the churches of Episcopalians and Presbyterians. There are more of them, and this may account for the apparent difference. We are a liberal people; but in many places we are entirely too liberal in the matter of turning everything and everybody into our houses of worship. We have made them common and unclean places.

Now, do not pool! pool! at these utterances; but think and pray over them, and let us have a reformation in these matters. Plenty of grace and a good backbone will soon work wonders. Yours, GILBERT.

—We have heard that Rev. F. M. Featherston has been appointed to Brandon station, made vacant by the death of Rev. Joshua T. Heard.

—Rev. R. N. Price, Professor of Mathematics in Emory and Henry College and editor of the Holston Methodist, has resigned his professorship to devote his entire time to the editorship.

—Rev. Sam Jones, of Georgia, is in Brooklyn, N. Y., conducting a revival meeting in the Tabernacle, Dr. Talmage, pastor. As everywhere else great crowds attend his ministry and are led to Christ.

—A new Methodist Church is being built at Heidelberg, on the New Orleans and North-Eastern Railroad, under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Carley, and will be ready for dedication on the second Sabbath in next month.

—Rev. Dr. W. M. Rush, of the Missouri Conference, who went to California some months ago, for his health, has returned to his home by no means improved. His friends have the saddest apprehensions of his condition.

—Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Kosciusko, writes us that Rev. G. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference, is critically ill and the gravest fears are entertained of the issue. We pray for the speedy recovery of that true and stalwart itinerant.

—The Southern Churchman calls attention to the fact that "modern Baptists disagree with their own fathers, who did not practice immersion for thirty years after they began to baptize adults only." A history of that good people will have to be written.

—In 1784, at the organization of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, there were only sixty Methodist churches in America. Of these, forty-seven were in the States of Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina—twenty-one in Maryland, seventeen in Virginia and nine in North Carolina.

—Gen. Grant, in his article on "The Battle of Shiloh," in the forthcoming number of The Century, relates how gentlemen regarding Gen. Buell were attributed to him—which were never expressed, and how he tried to correct the misunderstanding which grew up between him and Buell after the battle.

—Bro. M. Leuhart, a member of our church in Trinidad, Colorado, and one of the "pillars" of our cause in the West, is spending some days in the city. As he joined the church first in New Orleans under the pastorate of Dr. Walker, he is pleasantly renewing old associations. We had much counsel with him about the Western work, and the brethren in that distant field.

—A private note from Dr. J. W. Lambuth, our veteran China missionary, brings unfavorable tidings of his own health and his wife's also. She is quite a sufferer from asthma and must have a change of climate. Dr. Lambuth himself has been feeble for some time. It is possible that they will ask relief from mission work at the next meeting of the Board of Missions, and may return to the United States.

—We are sorry to learn that Rev. R. D. Norworthy was summoned to Jackson, La., on Sunday last, by the death of his venerable mother. Whatever the responsibilities of life and the cares of our own households, a mother holds the same sacred place in our hearts as in the days of innocent childhood. And when called to see her die the child-like feeling of loneliness and helplessness comes back with strange power. No doubt this Methodist matron rejoiced that she had been given a son to become one of the Lord's prophets.

—We notice in the papers the death of Rev. Dr. C. W. Miller, of the Kentucky Conference, who died at Lexington, Ky., on the 18th instant. For several years his health has been failing, but hopes were entertained of his complete recovery. Dr. Miller was a fine scholar, a vigorous writer and independent thinker. The orthodoxy of some of his writings have been questioned and much discussed, but his great ability and Methodist loyalty have commanded universal recognition. A strong man in our Israel has fallen.

—We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Werlein, wife of the venerable and widely-known Canal street merchant, Bro. Philip Werlein, and mother of our brother, Rev. S. Halsey Werlein, pastor of Fellowship Street Church. She passed away in great peace on Saturday last at a ripe age and in the full maturity of a rich Christian experience. The funeral service was conducted by Bishop Parker on Sunday afternoon and was attended by a large concourse of friends. Our brother commences the new conference year in sorrow, but with a chastened spirit sustained by divine grace, he is better able to preach a gospel of comfort.

Our government can no longer be said to be an experiment. One hundred years of successful existence have established it as a permanent institution. The magnificent conduct of the people during the late election proves their patriotic and wise selection of our countrymen. Our financial commercial resources and financial confidence are proof. We know of no better illustration of a successful government than the United States. From small beginnings, thirty years ago, they have built up their magnificent structure by strict adherence to their duty and by the exercise of the best and wisest judgment. They are to stand as a model to all other governments. They are to stand as a model to all other governments.

A GOOD REPUTATION.—That, unfortunately, piano manufacturer, F. W. Stein, is justly proud of the leading musical instrument for which he is agent, and especially so of the Mathushek piano. The appreciation of the public for this particular instrument has been so great that it has increased his business most materially. It is the reputation of the Mathushek Piano Manufacturing Company to furnish all their pianos in a most complete and perfect manner, using the best materials obtainable, and their efforts to keep this piano ahead of all others in every respect is a commendable effort which the public has evidently appreciated by their extensive patronage. Judges of musical instruments say that the Mathushek piano, instead of being old at eight years, like many others, is as good as new at ten years, and at a quarter less expense than any other make.

Our Young People.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE CENTENARY BISHOP.

BY MR. L. CHARTER.

From California's golden coast,

Came unto me, as he must have

A Centenary fame.

For sure his advent marked the year

We chose to celebrate—

Our Methodist Centennial—

God bless his little pale.

God bless his little pale as broad,

So high, so full of brains,

If some day he a Bishop is,

He'll thank me for the pains.

I took to prophesy, for he

A son of Malachi.

Should surely "sing the prophetic,"

Or a false prophet, I.

May his young life this year begin,

In wisdom, love and bloom;

The grace of God be in his heart,

From cradle to the tomb.

You'll ask, How e'er the Bishop came

So far? and then you'll laugh

When I tell you the Bishop is Frank E. Hart's photograph.

Mr. Editor: A happy New Year!

And as I have not seen a letter from this part of the country, I thought,

I would write a few lines to your highly appreciated paper. We welcome its weekly visits. I was much pleased last week to read letters from my little cousins, Patti and Barney Lewis.

I have never seen them, yet I love them, for my mother's father and their father's father are brothers, and they taught us to "love one another." We are glad they are pleasantly situated cousins.

I am not going to school, but I belong to the "try class." I wish to read the

New Testament through this year.

How many of the little folks will join me in that class? Write again, dear cousins.

MANY HICKMAN.

WASHINGTON PARK, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I wrote to your paper

a short time since, and seeing my letter in print I thought I would write again.

We live three miles from the Vicksburg, Shreveport &amp; Pacific Railroad.

My oldest brother married about a month ago, and had quite a nice wedding. My father takes the Advocate, and we like it very much. I want to answer some of the little friends' questions. Lois E. Manning, "sorecrown" is found in Isaiah xxxiv, 15. Lucy

Wood, "meal" is first mentioned in Numbers v, 15. It is a common word in the Bible. I will close by asking one question: When "God said, Let there be light, and there was light," what was that light? It could not have been the sun, as the sun was not made till the fourth day. Your little friend,

BOBBIE KIMBALL.

TAYLOR, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: At the commencement of last year I set aside my old yellow hon, to be strictly a "missionary hen," and I think you will agree with me, when I say, "She hath done what she could." She raised two nice broods of chickens, and I sold them for three dollars. And now I send the money to you, to use just where you think best.

I am a red headed boy, nine years old. I go to school, but I don't like it. I go to Sunday-school too, and I don't like that either. I believe I enjoy a good play more than anything else. I will sign my name in full; it is a long one.

I am named for my grandpa, Dr.

A. A. Williams. With many good wishes for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, I am,

Your little friend,

MARSHALL WILLIAMS BROWNE.

AMERSON, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I have written several letters to your paper, and you were kind enough to publish them all, so it gave me courage to write again. I have a very pretty missionary hen. I raised two dollars from her chickens last year. I hope to raise more this year. In last week's paper some one asked where the word "lain" was found in the Bible. It is found in Gen.

xxv, 10; Judges xxi, 11; Job vi, 13;

Psalms lxxviii, 13; John xx, 12. I will close by asking a question: How many letters are there in the Old Testament?

Your little friend,

WILLIE BECK.

SALEM, Mississippi.

Barbara Flynn.

Barbara Flynn lived in a low hut, just outside a large town, with her husband. "I do not know," she said,

"what a lot of money," then she would have a nice house and fine clothes.

Every Sunday she went across the meadow to church, and when she came home, she would tell her husband all she had seen and heard. She was a very good woman, and she was very kind to her husband. She was a very good woman, and she was very kind to her husband. She was a very good woman, and she was very kind to her husband. She was a very good woman, and she was very kind to her husband. She was a very good woman, and she was very kind to her husband. She was a the wrong place, that you can't say, "I do not know," Barbara," said grand-mother. "Put them where Paul kept his, and you will be a happy and contented girl. Paul had a nice home, much more than any he saw on earth, all ready for him, a 'mansion' Jesus had gone to prepare in heaven; in it would be every thing he needed. Thinking of this and of Jesus, made him forget earth's misery."

Barbara thought it very hard to wait what she never saw.

"That is faith," said grandmother; "believing and waiting what we can see, but what Jesus has promised. Now, instead of looking at other's nice things with longing eyes, keep your mind on the things Jesus has promised."

The storm increased; so they lighted the lamp early, and had a pleasant evening finding out what Jesus has promised to those who love him. If you will read the seventh lesson in your first Quarterly, you will find out some of them for yourself. They are for Paul, for Barbara, and her grandmother, and for you.

"O sweet and blessed country, The home of God's elect! O sweet and blessed country, That e'er has been the seat of Jesus, in mercy bring us To that dear land of rest; Who art, with God the Father, And Spirit, ever blest. Amen."

REMEMBERS. Mr. F., a passenger on one of our ocean steamers lately, found an old college friend of his, and they talked over some of their former time in discussing their former classmates and their fate.

"I never could understand," said Mr. F., "why Will Pettit did not succeed. He left college equipped with every qualification for the struggle of life. He had sound, a vigorous intellect, warm affections, and a competence."

"He proposed to enter the ministry, but just before leaving college, fell in with some freethinking fellows and gave up that idea. He studied law and was admitted; but after a year's practice he became dissatisfied with the law, and he met him now and then. He had become a sceptic, but talked little of his religious doubts."

"Then he left the farm and his wife, and went to California, gold-hunting."

"In 1876 I was in Idaho, and there I met Will. He had lost everything, and was penniless. He had been driven out of his property by gold-hunters, and was now a wanderer. He was a good man, but he was a wanderer."

"He was now almost insane in his opposition to the church, and he was a wanderer. He was a good man, but he was a wanderer."

A boy's RELIGION.—If a boy is a lover of the Lord Jesus Christ he can't lead a prayer-meeting or be a church officer, or a preacher, but he can be a godly boy, in a boy's way and in a boy's place. He ought not to be too solemn or too quiet for a boy. He need not censure his boy because he is a Christian. He ought to run, jump, play, climb, and yell like a boy. But in all he ought to show the spirit of Christ. He ought to be free from vulgarly and profanity. He ought to eschew tobacco in any form, and have a horror of intoxicating drinks. He ought to be peaceable, gentle, merciful, generous. He ought to take the part of small boys against large boys. He ought to discourage fighting. He ought to refuse to be in a party to mischief, to persecution, to deceit. And above all things, he ought now and then to show his contempt for a game to say that he is a Christian; but he ought not to be ashamed to say that he refused to do something because it is wrong and wicked, or because he fears God or is a Christian. He ought to take no part in the ridicule of sacred things, but meet the ridicule of others with a bold statement that for the things of God he feels the deepest reverence.

"It's very cold this morning," said a little Christmas-tree out in the forest, one windy December day; "though I sit from head to foot, I am all in a shiver."

"You'll be warm enough before long," said the Old Oak; "I've seen the woodman looking at you several times lately."

"I know I've branched out a good deal for myself the past year," said the little tree proudly; "and I should not wonder if Santa Claus were very well satisfied with me, when I come to be dressed up for a Christmas party."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SHREVEPORT, La., Jan. 13.—Mrs. Houston, a very estimable lady, living two miles from Arcadia, and her small child, were run over by an east-bound freight on the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific, near her residence, this evening about dusk. Both were instantly killed. The special was running at a very rapid rate, and could not check up quick enough to avert the calamity. It is supposed the unfortunate lady was so paralyzed by fear that she could not move, as it would have been an easy matter to have jumped down the slight embankment and have saved her life. She leaves a husband and several children. Mrs. Houston's maiden name was Smith, and her family live near Trenton.

KANSAS, Jan. 16.—Snow has fallen for three days and heavily drifted. The trains are filled. The Washburn and Great Northern are abandoned. Other roads experience great difficulty in getting trains through. The North road has abandoned all trains. Business here today is at a complete standstill. To-night the temperature is turning severely cold.

MOBILE, Ala., Jan. 17.—A fire originated through a defective fuse in the house of Mrs. Train, north of Railroad avenue, occupied by a colored family, at 8 o'clock this morning. Seven buildings were consumed. The fire engines had not sufficient time and water to save them. A small lot of goods in the great portion of the town would be burned. The firemen, citizens and even the ladies worked faithfully.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 17.—A fire in Frasier's store, Howard Black, Henry county, Tenn., destroyed property valued at $15,000. Mr. Vossman and two negroes were burned to death.

MOBILE, Jan. 17.—At 2 o'clock this morning an alarm was sounded from the fire engine at the corner of Broad and Charleston streets, which resulted in the destruction of the two-story frame dwelling and store situated at the northeast corner of Charles and Christown streets, owned and occupied by Mr. Geo. Phillips. The fire was the work of an incendiary. Mrs. Phillips and her adopted daughter, Miss Amy, a young lady about seventeen years of age, perished in the flames.

KANSAS, Jan. 18.—The South Infirmary of the Illinois Eastern Hospital for Insane, burned this morning at 4:50 o'clock. The fire originated in the furnace room, and had secured a strong headway before it was discovered. The woodwork of the building being of Southern pine, it burned very rapidly. The building was occupied by forty-five patients, six attendants and one night watchman. Seventeen patients are missing. Thirteen bodies have been recovered, and are being buried by the coroner. All the patients were insane and incurable. The bed-ridden ones were rescued first, and those who were able to help themselves did not realize the danger, and they were the ones who perished. The attendants lost their personal effects, and many of them having to the bed-clothes to escape. There were no facilities for putting out the fire, the State not having made any appropriation. The building was a new one and cost about $75,000. It is a total wreck.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 19.—The Cumberland river is 53 feet 10 inches at this point and rising nearly an inch an hour. The danger here will probably be reached to-morrow night. Reports from upper counties state that in the low-lying land considerable damage has been done by the washing away of fences and other material. The back waters are steadily rising, and a greater part of Sulphur Spring bottom is covered.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—At a session this evening of Jewish ministers Rabbi D. P. Desola Mendasapokobon "Higher Charity" and paid a feeling tribute to the charitable Hebrews of this city. "The Difficult Modern Thought" was the subject taken up by Rev. Dr. Nathan. He said that the Jewish world was no longer the world of the Jews. We live in too close communion with our Christian friends not to become interested in their religion, and Christian ministers hardly ever speak of the Trinity or the original Saviour. Christians are becoming more and more Jewish, and we are to find anything to contradict in their sermons.

BALTIMORE, Tex., Jan. 19.—One of the coldest spells ever known is now prevailing here. Snow has lain on the ground four days—a thing never before. To-day it has been sleeting and it is bitter cold, causing great suffering among stock. The lower part reached by the thermometer is 8° above zero.

CORNOGANA, Tex. 19.—The continued wet and cold weather has proven very disastrous to stock and sheep. Interest in this county, many having died from the effects. A northerly with a rainy rain which freezes as it falls, is prevailing, and will make matters worse.

According to the official record the number of persons killed by earthquakes in Granada was 685, the number injured 1189.

PARIS, Jan. 15.—A terrible collision explosion occurred to-day in the great coal mine at Lezard, in Patis Cabris, France. At the time of the calamity there were in the mine 140 men were employed. The explosion was of fire origin. It caused 800 metres of galleries to fall. Twenty-eight men were killed. They mainly lost their lives by debris falling on them.

BY G. W. ADAMS.

Soon may our land exultant
 With Jesus' praises ring,
 And thousand Christian voices
 Make her waste places sing!
 Till all our land, rejoicing,
 From east to western shore,
 Shall join the song triumphant,
 Christ, Jesus to adore!

We continued our journey on foot through the country, stopping occasionally to converse with farmers at work in the field until we came to the sight of a large village called Tanzug. We at once determined to enter and explore. When we were yet quite distant, the people began to collect from all directions and soon surrounded us, calling us "white devils," "thorbarians," "red-haired men," "monkeys," and we did not know how many other unpleasant names. However, we took it all in good humor, which no doubt was the best policy, and pressed on through the dense crowd into the bushua part of the village. The streets being very narrow, we were soon blocked before and behind; but, knowing it was better not to stand still, we made for the crowd, and they fortunately gave way, fearing no doubt, if they came in contact with us, they would be brought under some evil influence which the all supposed foreigners possessed.

NTL Editor: The short caption suggested this article. Several Sundays in the summer, for want of teachers, and by request, the writer took charge of a small class. Physically and spiritually incapacitated for the work, I thought I ought to be taught rather than teach, but a kind word of encouragement from my good pastor, saying, "In teaching others we learn ourselves," aided me wonderfully. Yea, we can all gain information from even a child. The Lord sent grace and strength, and my soul was blessed in this short labor of love, and from these profitable hours spent in the beloved Sunday-school, I carried back to my little "bethel" bright pictures to hang among many others in memory's gallery, which have served to comfort and smooth rough passages through invalidism. Just as I was getting acquainted and learning to love these bright, interesting little children through badly suffering I was reluctantly compelled to consign them to more capable hands. All the names were placed on the roll, and I hope that they may all be written in heaven. As I glanced at the lively, happy-looking teachers and pupils, I felt it was "good to be there," and thought, if their hearts' devotion to the Master's cause could be attested in such outward activity, it was great. Indeed, of these faithful workers at worthy of wider enlistment. Surely they verify the promise that "the small walk, and not faint," for Sabbath after Sabbath, through the cold winter and the heat of summer, the devoted laborers are seldom absent from their post, notwithstanding seasonal have-holds a mile to walk. Many of their crowns are gemmed with masters! One young secretary is worthy of honorable mention, though not a church member, by his fidelity to duty, putting to shame some of the old members who are too much at ease. Zion. The lady superintendent, stars and sexton are all loyal to the trust. They have been "faithful of many things." God bless them! And when they "reach the heavenly shore" may they receive the welcome, "Well done!" In our Sunday-school there are eighty names registered; but with the roll is called many are "absent only 30 or, perhaps, 35 in regular attendance. Who is to blame? We say ye, parents? Nevertheless I kept as warmed up by the few zealous teachers that it never seeks winter quarters, but is "at it, and always at it." Our present work is more worthy and a gentleman superintendent. We will come forth to relieve the household friend who is now bearing a double portion—that of teacher and superintendent? Out of a membership of hundred communicants are there not competent (?) or willing to put their heart and hand to this work of love?

Why is it that those who are so qualified by education and personal influence when asked to fill this office refuse with an indifferent shrug their hand, as if doubtful of their ability, or excuse themselves by saying, "I have no talent for that kind of work," without making the least effort? And yet these same individuals to have no difficulty (?) in exhorting their various glitzy to the utmost of political canvass or their social vocations regardless of the most inclement weather! Brothers, is there more of your faculties in God's hands? The Ladies' Aid, Woman's and Men's Missionary Societies are all awake; but there is more old than new and there—more old, sympathy and encouragement from the brethren and sisters belonging to the same home and can't get away clogs to the machinery in perfect working order in the Lord's workshop. An inquiry was made of one of my stars whether she knew her lesson, answered, while a shade of sadness passed over her usually cheerful face, "I believe I know it. I had to tell it all by myself, for mamma would show me and she wouldn't come into Sunday-school." This dear girl wanted to learn, and was determined with her paper and to be number one of the school. My heart yearned over her inability, and I wondered there were not others who, if I could not give the same answer, would echo answered, Maury. Dear pupils, if you will not enter in your hearts you are not by your unwillingness. "Show" your children their lessons, not only setting them a good example, but hindering them from world gladly learn if you would give them your spare moments in properly instructing them? I have known a sister to sit up until long after the night hour, though their eyes were weary and their brain grew dizzy, in folding garments of the latest fashion to adorn the bodies of their little ones that they may be considered "dressed" in the Sunday congregation, or not termed by their most fastidious friends, "old fashioned," "entirely out of date," etc. A husband has seen parents devoting hours in weeding, watering and tending the garden, and in the hardest solitude their vegetable and flowers, so that they may be perfect, in the admiration of others and called the "finest in the neighborhood," and yet evince so little of any at all, in the spiritual of the tender little blossom that has entrusted to their care, compelling them to bring them up in December 25, 1857: Our Annual Conference was held at Selma, commencing on the second instant. Bishops Sente, Andrew and Early were present. We had an interesting session. I was honored by the Conference in electing me a delegate to the General Conference, to be held at Nashville, Tenn., May 1. My field of labor the coming year is the Columbus city mission and colored charge, a new field, but one that promises usefulness if properly occupied. I shall endeavor to bring a many souls to Christ; as I can, I shall impart much wisdom and grace to enable them to fill this station successfully. I rely upon Him who has said, "Let us work with you." I have great reason to thank God for the success of my labor on the district. I entered upon the work with fear and trembling, but God has been with me and I have seen pleasure prospering in my hands. The district has greatly improved in every respect. It now takes the lead in missionary collections, and we have revivals throughout the district the past year. I feel the need of a revival in my own soul to qualify me to labor successfully for the salvation of others. Oh, for a closer walk with God! Lord, help me, and make me a blessing to my fellow-citizens this year.

"Old Uncle Charlie was a practical philosopher," said the young man, "and he was right. He had a crop of corn and cotton; he had noticed an invulnerable spot on the rhubarb, natural with the soil, careless cultivation, and incursions of the squirrels; the side row yielded little. He had not time to waste in the search for necessity during the summer, finding himself at last soverely tired, and his mind slightly, if at all, enlisted, by consequence, to that of a reaper in the side row, and very philosophically he had sown the seeds in the outside row, and he was right to recompense the outside row."

"How far do you support the man's philosophy? Reflect, my friend, reader, and let your own observation decide. There are no excuses for Uncle Charlie in that row, and from choice. When he had time to devote to his church, did we do with the subject of becoming Interested in the subject of religion? I imagine the reverse of this was our condition, the motive of our selection, and grace had made us heirs of salvation, and we had avoided the bank seats, unless, unconsciously, the principle that "there is no rest in the outside row."

Further he made use of it.

An editorial note in the Christian Daily says: "Dr. Milroy's essay is, most likely, framed upon some antequated occasion, as indeed for a moment the day it fell in, a strongly put proof of Dr. Edwards." Again, the editor marks the same day: "Happily apart and aims of the great but dangerous phases have thus been avoided," which is a confession of this particular subject was into the part of that body who made arrangements for the Conference; so, why?

Dr. Milroy's fallacy in his use of the title "Methodist, Superintendent of the Church" is, as the proper title of the Superintendent of the Church is a reflection upon Wesley, who the title superintendent; with the title superintendent, and yet the new organization the Methodist Episcopal Church, and also in Methodist Episcopal and in the term of this day. Declaring, style his his bishops "superintendents."

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1885.

We exceedingly dislike to part with old friends; but, unless renewals come in promptly, some with whom we have had pleasant companionship will cease to receive our weekly visits. Write at once to the publishers and do not miss a single number. If not convenient to forward the two dollars by next mail, send a postal and follow it with a postal order before another issue.

In a Christmas address the Pope spoke very bitterly about the growth of Protestantism in Rome. It rent his heart to see that, under the protection of public laws, heterodox churches were multiplied. So we conclude that, if his "temporal power" could be restored, he would drive every Protestant from the city. And in what respects does Romanism in America differ from Romanism in Italy? It is a dangerous, insidious, aggressive, unrepentant organization that only lacks the power to renege the tyranny of other years in Spain, Italy and the Netherlands.

The question of non-resident land ownership and landlordism is already overshadowing itself in this country. So imminent is the interest in the matter that a bill is under discussion in Congress to prohibit aliens and foreigners from acquiring or owning lands within the United States. It is ascertained that certain noblemen in Europe, principally Englishmen, have acquired and now own about 21,000,000 acres of land in the bounds of this government. The argument is that the increase of alien land ownership will in time lead to a system of landlordism incompatible with the best interests and free institutions of the United States.

The Congregational Year-book, for 1885, just published, reveals some significant facts as to vacant churches and unemployed ministers. There are 4,092 churches—937 with pastors, 2,155 with acting pastors and 1,012 vacant. There are, contrariwise, 3,889 ministers, of whom 2,763 are in pastoral work and 1,126 out of it. Now, to supply these vacant pulpits and employ these idle preachers is the problem Congregationalism fails to solve. It is indicative of a new order of things, even to an endorsement of our Methodist limited pastorate, that so few churches have settled pastors—only 937 out of 4,092. There are 2,153 with acting pastors or, as our Presbyterian brethren call them, "stated supplies." This arrangement, which is temporary and limited, is preferred to the installation of a permanent pastor, with all the embarrassing difficulties of effecting a sometimes needed change. By comparison we always think of our Methodist system of ministerial supply to admire its superior efficiency over any other known to ecclesiastical history. We have no vacant churches or unemployed preachers. Every pulpit is occupied and every minister has a field of labor.

The following are the questions propounded by Bishop Potter to young "father" Huntington, reference to which we made last week. The Bishop gave him a black crucifix on the occasion which was blessed on the altar after the custom of the Romanists. So the Episcopalians have endorsed the monastic system:

Bishop—Do you solemnly and forever surrender all you possess, or of which you may hereafter become possessed, even to the least article of personal use or enjoyment in accordance with the vow of religious poverty?

Noise—I do.
Bishop—Will you diligently serve God for the remainder of your life in a virgin state, striving to follow the example of perfect purity of our virgin Lord in all your thoughts, words, and deeds, as the vow of religious chastity demands?

Noise—I will, the Lord being my help.
Bishop—Will you shape your life in accordance with the rule of the life of the Order of the Holy Cross, and will you give respectful obedience to all lawful commands of your superior and all deacons of the chapter, submitting your will to their godly directions and administrations, under the vow of religious obedience?

Noise—I will, by the help of God.

Preachers in Politics.

In the current number of the North American Review there is a symposium on the question, "Shall Clergymen Be Politicians?" with articles by Rev. Dr. H. J. VanDyke, Jr., and Henry Ward Beecher. Following so recently after the presidential campaign, in which some clergymen bore a conspicuous part, the discussion is timely. Dr. VanDyke takes high ground against preachers in anywise intermeddling with partisan contests. On the other hand, as his well-known history would suggest, Henry Ward Beecher ardently advocates the propriety and duty of pastors becoming leaders in political thought as well as instructors in abstract theology and religious philosophy. We have read the papers with eager interest and fall to entirely agree with either. Dr. VanDyke slightly overstates his case, while Mr. Beecher underestimates and cheapens the sacred functions of the pulpit. The former is the view rigidly held and consistently practiced in the South. Our pulpit has been entirely removed from political issues or discussions, scarcely even referring to current party history by way of illustration. Rarely can any hearer discover a clergyman's political affiliations and convictions by any statement he may make in the pulpit. The principle on which we have thus proceeded is undoubtedly correct; but in its application we may sometimes have been strict constructionists—excessively conservative.

Certain facts are self-evident:

1. Preachers are citizens, and, as such, have rights that can not be abridged and duties that must be performed. They should form opinions on public issues as other citizens and express them openly and faithfully at the ballot-box. The sentiment that would exile a clergyman from all the responsibilities of private citizenship is pernicious and unrepentant.

2. Preachers are spiritual counselors and teachers, and, as such, must be watchful against everything hurtful to the moral and religious interest of the people. Therefore anything that affects the moral life and eternal destiny of a human soul is a legitimate theme of pulpit discourse. It is evident, however, that under this conception of pastoral duty the claims of rival candidates, governmental policy—foreign and domestic, the tariff, the tenure of office, the "Monroe doctrine" and all other like questions that distinguish political parties, are alien and improper.

Now, in the application of these principles facts may and do occur in the political history of a people that demand pulpit discussion and denunciation. Not the issues that involve party ascendancy—the defeat of one and the election of another candidate; but moral truths that rise far above the plane of sectional or partisan contests, and involve the integrity of true manhood and the life of a nation. For instance, the sins of bribery, injustice, slander, vituperation, theft and falsehood as discovered among officials and as developed in the fierce heat of political strife must be rebuked with boldness and unsparing severity. These are often condoned under that false idea that "the end justifies the means" and that "everything is fair in war and politics." In the turmoil and contentions of parties breaches of the moral law are committed unrebuked that would consign private citizen to infamy. To correct these evil tendencies and give faithful warning is the solemn duty of every divinely commissioned watchman on the walls of Zion. Slander is as sinful and offensive proclaimed and repeated against a political candidate as against an individual. Making sacred oath to false election returns is as dreadful perjury as lying on the witness stand in a court of justice. It is as devilish to steal a ballot as to steal a horse or a hog. And the pulpit that remains silent in face of such wrongs is unfaithful to its divine imperative. The preacher who for fear, favor, sentiment or possible party triumph or defeat refuses to speak out against it is unworthy of his high calling.

The foolish complaint of "meddling with politics" can not satisfy his conscience. He must speak in the name of his Lord, and as one burdened with the care and cure of souls.

The evils of the liquor traffic—a business legalized and endorsed by State Legislatures—must be presented to the people, and their moral sense aroused against it. It poisons too many homes, commits too many crimes and destroys too many precious souls to be passed by, albeit somebody will cry out against "carrying politics into the pulpit." Carry, if the principle above be adhered to, we need never offend against ministerial propriety nor be charged with degrading the functions of the pulpit, but rather exalt its divine influence and sacred sphere. The preacher who follows Mr. Beecher upon the hustings, and tells questionable anecdotes after the style of the average stump orator, is justly chargeable, as Dr. VanDyke says, with "blending the notes of the gospel trumpet with the blare of political brass bands" and of "ranging the royal, blood-stained banner of Christ among the flags and ensigns of a political procession."

"A Delicate Question."

This is the title of a non-committal editorial in the Times-Democrat, of one day last week, on the Sabbath and the Exposition. The article was suggested by the report of the Sunday League, which appeared in the same issue. It was evident that the League had not been idle, but had secured the positive expressions of various religious bodies representing a majority of the American people, besides the direct order of Secretary Frelinghuysen, endorsed by President Arthur, to the Board of Management concerning the closing of the Government Building at the Exposition. In response to testimony so strong something had to be said. In violation of the order of the Secretary of State the Government Building is wide open every Sabbath, and some employees, we know, who desire to have a day of rest are compelled to be present. Desiring most earnestly the success of the Exposition, which is indeed the grandest exhibit ever seen on this continent, we do hope this matter will receive prompt attention.

The article referred to attempts to state the Protestant and Roman positions on the question, and leaves it as too delicate for secular tampering. But just here our contemporary makes the common mistake. The Sabbath in its relation to the State should be discussed and the great underlying principle clearly understood. It is not a question for preachers alone, but for all good and patriotic citizens. The State has nothing to do with its religious significance or authority. It can not compel attendance upon religious worship or in anywise interfere with one's devotions. But the Sabbath in its civil relation, and as a factor in public morals and the civilization of a people, demands the care and guardianship of the State.

Our contemporary makes two mistakes in the editorial: First, in stating that the Roman Catholic Church has a majority of the working people, and, secondly, in arguing that the question of Sunday closing should be determined by the majority sentiment of New Orleans. Statistics do not warrant the first assertion, and the history, character and purpose of the Exposition expose the fallacy of the second. The Exposition is national, having been authorized by congressional legislation and its Board of Management are appointees of the President of the United States. Now, to allow a supposed provincial sentiment to control it on any question of administration is to debauch and localize it. Then it becomes a New Orleans and not a National Exposition. We hope the order of Secretary Frelinghuysen will be obeyed or cause shown why it is disregarded.

A Two-Edged Sword.

The following, which we find in an exchange, is good enough to pass around. Ecclesiastical snobs need occasional set-backs to make them endureable. The Bishop is not likely to encounter that "dinky dude" again, and he will be apt to measure his man before enterprising another little homily on church government.

It is said on one occasion, as Bishop McTear was going to and fro in the earth, a "dinky dude" of a fellow, who had left the Methodist for the Episcopal Church, approached him in the ear and made the following speech: "Bishop, I was brought up in your church. My father lived and died in its communion. I myself desired to do so, but I could not do so. It was too narrow. Why don't you who are cultured and broad-minded in the Methodist Church so amend its regulations as to divest it of this obvious objection?" The Bishop, as you know, is not one to allow an indignity to his church because it comes coated with personal compliment to himself, and it was now his turn. You can imagine the expression that rested upon his judicial countenance as he said, with great gravity: "My young friend, Methodism found your father very low down as to property and position. As you know, he was one of the common people who heard his message gladly. He lifted him up, and by the habits of diligence and frugality which she prescribed he amassed the fortune you enjoy. We have thought it well to keep her to the simplicity through which she was able to save him, if for no other reason, at least as a monument to his memory. And I fear, at the rate you are living, it is quite likely his grandchildren will need the same sort of a church to save them; and we will keep her ready for the future." It strikes me that reply was like the old negro's two-edged sword, which cut "gwine, and comin'."

Proselyting in Mission Fields.

The Christian Index copies the following items from the Texas Baptist, with the prefatory statement that "the Mexican Mission is one of the grandest successes the Lord has ever permitted Baptists to achieve."

Just before Bro. Powell left Mexico he received a very gratifying young Presbyterian into the church, who had been studying the subject of baptism for two years. He will be a tower of strength to the work there.

Bro. Powell says he constantly fears that some second-rate Baptist will visit Mexico and tell the church members that it is not fashionable to go to prayer meetings in the United States. The Mexicans do not know but that it is proper to attend all the services; hence are always on hand.

The Presbyterian Church at Patos, Mexico, sent an official call to Bro. Powell to come up and baptize them. He went up and baptized enough to organize a church, and there are about twenty-five of them now ready for baptism.

The Presbyterian minister located at Saltillo, Mexico, has left, declaring that he was going to hunt a place where there were no Baptists; stating that as soon as the Baptists came to a place the people began to investigate whether much or little water was required. Pro. Powell told him it was not so much a question of water as it was one of obedience or disobedience.

Exactly. But their "grandest success," as we happen to know, is not in winning souls from sin and death, but in stealing members from the other missions. The schemes resorted to in order to disaffect and disintegrate that Presbyterian congregation in Saltillo are only worthy of the Jesuits themselves. In the City of Mexico their agents attend the missions of the Methodists and Presbyterians, and manage to slip into the hand of each member a tract on immorality. Just how these brethren of the "grandest success" reconcile this ecclesiastical misadventure with a missionary call to preach, Christ to the heathen is beyond our ken. They call the missionaries "brethren," admit that they have been converted and are doing a good work in punishing sinners to the cross; but, instead of assisting, they are busily engaged in robbing them of the fruits of their labors. While these men of God by private counsel and public preaching, with prayer and exhortation, are trying to save souls from death, others are laboring, with a zeal worthy of a better cause, to proselyte them to their faith. They would distract a soul inquiring after salvation with the mode of administering an ordinance. The hangings of the heart are forgotten in the question of "much water." This is the "martyr spirit" and the "grandest success" so lustily applauded at home. These facts have been communicated to us by entirely competent and reliable witnesses on the ground.

Scalpers and Scalping.

The modern development known as "scalpers" are not "red men of the forest," nor is theirs a bloody mission. They have no designs upon human life nor do they, like the Indian braves, dangle at their belts bleeding scalps as trophies of ferocious courage and prowess. The modern "scalper" is a railroad ticket vender, and his business is to make all he can out of the plethoric pockets and easy consciences of "innocents abroad." Just now they are legion in New Orleans, and their industry would shame the "lousy bee." Not every branch of their business do we condemn; but against some "scalping" that is being done a word of warning is demanded.

To encourage attendance at the Exposition the various railroad lines converging here have made great reduction in regular rates of travel. But for their own protection visitors to New Orleans are sold limited, non-transferable tickets, and these conditions are accepted by the purchaser, he being required to endorse his name on the ticket in the agent's presence. Before returning he has to get this ticket stamped at railroad headquarters on the Exposition Grounds, and he there must testify that he was the purchaser of said ticket and again affix his signature and otherwise satisfy the agent as to his identity. If these conditions are not complied with, conductors of trains will refuse them return passage. Now, for persons to sell to or purchase from "scalpers," in violation of the accepted conditions, is a moral wrong and a fraud upon the railroad companies. We do not arraign any individual for willful iniquity in this matter; but this is its true moral significance, as the slightest investigation will prove.

Some consciences are always obdurate in dealing with railroads because, they say, "corporations have no souls." But they strangely forget that right-doing is not merely reciprocal in spirit. We must do right if all the world goes wrong. The Scriptures warn us against "following the multitude to do evil." The exactions and extortions of other ers do not justify us in fraudulent dealing. It may be very shrewd to "beat a railroad" out of a few dollars, but not very creditable to Christian character or comforting to an enlightened conscience.

"And Go to Mill Besides."

Dr. William A. Smith was fond of advising young men. But in this he was not singular. As in autumn leaves put on various hues, which while they are splendid, so in the first stages of mental decadence many bright and taking thoughts and sayings shine out, and the superficial might think them evidences of expounding and vigorous intellect. These aphorisms generally take the form of a universal capped off with a most insignificant particular, as the above when completely stands: "One man can't do everything; and go to mill besides." But lest some one may think the above remarks uncalculated for criticism of Dr. Smith, I here disclaim any application to him.

1. The aphorism is the statement of a sound practical truth. One man can do very few things. It is a weakness of strong minds to desire that the world should believe them competent to any task. Such is generally true. The really successful man in one calling might have been quite as much so in another. The natural prodigy is, as a rule, a monstrous fraud—as much true intellect as a mushroom is a tree. Blind Tom is a specimen. A million Blind Toms would kill the science of music and discount hopelessly the trade in seraphic lyres. But a real man can do anything—even go to mill. Yet no man can do everything. The folly of most men has not been in choosing wrong things, but in undertaking too many.

2. Yet there is a working limit to the rule. Men are so prone to interpret on extremes that we must remind them that in media tutillime ibunt. For example, when it is said that man can do anything, and that no man can do everything, the result in the working rule would reduce to something like this: One should know something of everything and everything of something. The last clause includes the first, but men generally are not aware of it. For since everything relates to something our knowledge of that something is not complete until we know something of everything.

3. Jack-of-all-trades has been snubbed as a sort of necessity that the world would outgrow before millennium. Some think that he was made of the mud seraphs after Adam, and the Almighty would have published him as the Missing Link if Eve had not brought the fall. Still a man should be Jack-of-all-trades except one. He ought to be a pioneer in all territories except his own. He ought to furnish his quota to the vast consensus of the world as it finds its highest expression through some one of the departments of the industries or sciences. It is no mark of nobility not to know how to do a plebeian's part. Cincinnati was a good plebeian no doubt, and Alfred the Great was no greater as king for letting the old woman's cakes burn. What would have degraded him would have been his offering to hire out as a cook to some Danish noble. Adam Clarke said the reason why men got their iron burnt was not by having too many in the fire, but by letting one stay in too long. Most men with but one iron burnt that up without making a respectable fire.

But does "going to mill besides" have any meaning of itself? This probably. Man as a master should not do a boy's work. The generation growing up around us can do something now. We should not lay backward on the work of the past. Today has its calls. He who went on Christmas frolic last week enters this week upon a year whose Christmas is at the other end. Let the boy enjoy the Christmas of his boyhood; but let your manhood meet the demands of your own day and the powers and opportunities granted.

One of the most unpardonable crimes of latter day civilization is the abolition of the mill-boy. Patrick Henry never would have composed "Sink or Swim" if it had not been for mill-ponds on Pamunkey. The mill of today means gloom, monotony, imprisonment. The old mill meant cheer, variety, liberty. The goddess of liberty smiled from the top of mill-sacks, and liberty's cock crew louder there than from Dalrymple's barn-loft. Going to mill then meant expansion, enlargement, liberty. Whoever heard of a strike among mill-boys? Yet whenever heard of low wages and long work? The average mill-boy never owned a nickel, and twelve hours a day going to mill was not long enough. The water was frequently too low or too high; there was a crowd ahead and his turn would not come till the next day; the miller was picking the rocks of the dam was out of order. Yet the mill-boy never struck. Dynamite was not thought of. With the utmost philosophy the mill-boy mounted his bareheaded horse at dusk and rode home to announce what the telegraph would tell us of St. Louis before breakfast—No meal to-day. The father's philosophy might fall and the mother's patience explode like a sky rocket; but the mill-boy's placid face would show no sign of a break in practiced possession of the art of happy living. O, the mill-boy's memories! Some hour in the evening of life, ere the sun is yet forever gone down, may the cares and tolls of life grow quiet enough to permit me to recall them all over to the dewdrop on the thistles and thorns by the way?

"To mill besides" has an inkling of holiday expectation. It comes in at the door with a sly wink and a covert smile, trying to screw itself up to the hard, cold expression of duty; but the sham does not last longer than Santa Claus on the imagination of the three-year-old whose realistic eyes will not confirm the state hoax of Greenland and sooty chimney. All the days of our life, as a hireling, we toil waiting for the shadow. But before the shadow we look for the mill whose rumbling, tumbling waters leap from the pent enclosure and on the chase for eternity; but ere they are gone their bounding feet have struck the wheel that turned the stones that ground the corn that furnished the daily bread for the jade of toll and care and the dupe and sport of glory and the fates. But it is a "letting-off" before the last thing is done. A gate is shut, a bar down, a row unfinished—work that posterity must look after and complete in the history of him who quit before everything was done "to go to mill," and is not yet come home with the grist.

Schools and School Property.

In nearly everything the Methodist Church and people in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference are gaining ground and holding on to it, except in the matter of schools and school property. In the past fifteen years thousands of dollars worth of valuable property have come into our possession and then passed away from us. In this matter we have not been wise. We have not shown ordinary worldly wisdom. Business men would not have been so careless about, or wasteful of, such valuable property. In some instances it has been willful waste that may yet bring woeful want. It is about time we had quit throwing away our advantages and our property. This course, if persisted in, will put us in the rear of other denominations not near our equals in numbers and in wealth. At one time we owned and controlled valuable school property at Verona, at Booneville, at Ryhalia, at Sardis and at other points, and we have allowed this property to pass away from us, and it is now in other hands and controlled by other parties. We have not properly estimated the value of good school property, and we do not seem to have considered the position and power good schools and good school property would give us in any community and in the country at large. A good school is a power for good in any community, and it insures a degree of denominational influence and success that can be gained in no other way. If other people own the schools and educate the children there our children will join other churches. The school at Verona, of which I know more than I do of others, while under the control of the church, gave tone and influence to Methodism in a large circuit of country lying adjacent to the place. This property has passed out of the hands of the church, but it is still controlled and managed by members of the church, so that the influence of the school is not wholly lost to Methodism. This influence might have been, and doubtless would be, ten fold greater than it is if the church had retained the title to the property and continued its supervision over it. Individual members of the church have, persistently, in the midst of many difficulties, kept the front of the school facing Methodism, so that the Methodist Church still, to some extent, enjoys the advantages of its influence. When this personal effort ceases, if it ever should, then the full force of our loss will be felt.

We still own other valuable property at Grenada and Aberdeen and other points, which we should cling to with a death grip. We ought to bend our energies to make this property valuable to us, that we, as a church, may reap from it the largest returns. We have been prodigal with property long enough. We ought to get all the property we can, and we ought to hold to all we get. When we give up valuable school

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

EVERETT, Ala., Jan. 21.—The temperance people are determined to continue their efforts in this section until they make Concord a prohibition county. They are now only two bars in the entire county, while at this time last year there were thirteen.

SALM, Va., Jan. 22.—Dr. J. J. Morman, president of the Board of Trustees of Roanoke College for forty-five years, author of several works on the mineral springs of North America, died this morning aged eighty-four years.

New York, Jan. 23.—Forty men, women and children boarded the steamer City of Montreal yesterday, missionaries who are going to join Bishop William Taylor and go into Central Africa, under the direction of the Methodist Church. Several members of the party have gone on to advance, among them Bishop Taylor. They expect to get to the Portuguese seaport, Louisa, 200 miles south of the Congo, in five weeks. Thence they will go by boat 120 miles up the Cuanza river. They expect to travel the rest of the 1000 miles in the heart of Africa on foot.

KANSAS, Ill., Jan. 23.—A. H. Butts, secretary of the Chicago Lumber Company, has just returned from the logging camp near Metropolitan, Mich., a plant in the pines, forty miles north of Escanaba. He says the night before he left camp the mercury had dropped to 43° below zero. This was the climax of four days of very cold weather. This night, an old trapper and Indian hunter, named Tom Duging, returning from hunting, was killed and eaten by wolves within two miles of the camp. The wolves there are more numerous and bold than ever, on account of the scarcity of small game. His friends searching for him, the next morning found his closely guarded bones; thirteen dead wolves were lying near him, pierced by his rifle balls, and his Winchester rifle was by his side with one chamber still loaded.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 21.—The travel to New Orleans is very heavy. Two through-trains from the North passing here to-day had to be run in five sections.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Rev. Dr. Patton, President of Howard University, preached a sermon in the Congressional church of this city to-day on "Woman and Skepticism," in the course of which he spoke of the woman's suffrage convention held here recently, and expressed the opinion that when women are given too much liberty they branch off into skepticism and immorality. He said, among other things, that the lives of such women as George Eliot, Miss Roland and Harriet Martineau exemplified the truth of this assertion, and he referred to Victoria Woodhull as the representative of the woman's suffrage movement. Among his auditors were Miss Susan B. Anthony and Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and on the conclusion of the services they walked to the platform and upbraided Dr. Patton for his utterances. Miss Anthony said to him if his mother were living she should be a cross her knees and speak him out. Mrs. Stanton, interrupting her said: "On the contrary, let me congratulate Dr. Patton. I have been trying for years to make women understand that the enemies they have are in the pulpit, and now he has illustrated it beyond question." With great aplomb Dr. Patton then replied the women had left the church.</

STRENGTH ENOUGH.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

The morning mist that lies
About the day, that comes so softly in,
Ride all its secrets from the searching eye,
And none may tell what wait, or join, or sin
Shall break, new, from the enfolding shroud,
Nor what is in the cloud.

Before the busy feet,
In the hot noontide, with the blaring sun,
Shall with their rapid step-sounds fill the street,
Before the willing hands their work have done,
There may be burst some great and new surprise
Before our starting eyes.

It may be ours to stand,
Zoraken, single-handed, in a night
With a determined and hostile band,
For the dear cause we honor as the right,
And either to overcome or win a crown
Before the sun goes down.

We may be called to take
Some noble work that needs the wife and strong,
And do it faithfully for Jesus' sake,
Though no great talents may be ours to bring;
Hurry to our feet to stand alone
Before the Master's throne.

Or we may have to-day
To lay our work aside, and in the gloom
That suddenly creeps up around the way
Take the short journey that shall find the tomb,
And see the earth-home fade before our face
In some strange place.

But however it be,
We dare go forth to meet the dim unseen, Trepidant and patient; God is near, and he Will be our Helper as he yet has been;
And let the day for us be fair or rough,
We shall have strength enough.

St. Peter's Fall.

BY REV. ANGELO DOWLING.

That Simon Peter was a true believer in the Son of God is shown by his profession of faith. When Christ reached "the coasts of Caesarea Philippi" he asked his disciples "what the people thought of him as the 'Son of Man.'" By thus asking questions it was made known that the people among whom Christ had been "teaching and preaching" for some years had very indefinite views of him. Some said that "he was John the Baptist, some Elias, and others Jeremiah, or one of the prophets." These they did not know, notwithstanding the words and works of Christ. Then the Savior questioned the apostles themselves. Peter answered: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This was the true faith; but in order to its complete success it was required to be a growing, practical and working faith. Therefore Christ said, "Upon this foundation (rock) and faith I will build (continue to build) my church; and upon the power of this constant growing my church of individual believers and workers shall be so strong and mighty that the gates of hell shall not be able to prevail against her. Safety and success can be enjoyed only by growing faith and active living. Living faith takes hold of the living God, and imparts life to every work. 'Faith works by love.'"

This living faith in the Son of the living God is seen in its acceptance of the words of Revelation as of supreme authority. It does not dare to even suggest words or rules of right living and working in the presence of the usefulness of revealed truth. "Thy word is truth." "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God; and him only shalt thou serve." Had Peter gone on in the living word he would have gone on in the way of safety and glory. But he began to doubt and stumble when Christ announced the purpose of his coming into the flesh and becoming the God-man. Peter had accepted him as the Christ the Son of the living God; but could not accept him as the humiliated and crucified Son of God. Then Christ told him that he was Satan, and to get out of his way and get behind him; for he savored not the things of God, but those of men. His thoughts and affections were taking the wrong direction. There was an outcropping of faith that showed worldly policy—there was the beginning of the fall. When accepted in the love thereof the words of Christ are spirit and life; but when rejected they are death unto death. The acceptance or rejection of his words is seen as clearly in the lives of the people as a tree is known by its fruits—it is seen in the lives of church members and preachers. When they savor not the things that be of God, but those that be of men, there is a lack of relish for spiritual food and fellowship. Worldliness is manifest.

Peter's spirit was seen in his conduct. He was inclined to be overruling. He rebuked Christ for his strange utterance and doctrine, and said it should not be—Christ should not be killed. He would keep and defend the Master. Hence he armed himself with a sword. While he was too weak in spirit to watch and pray with Christ in Gethsemane he was held to draw his sword and fight. Doubtless he intended to kill Malchus, the servant of the high priest. He cut off his ear. For this wicked act Christ chided him. Put up thy sword. He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword. Now he began to cower. He follows Christ the prisoner far behind. When Christ was carried under arrest into the palace of the high priest for church trial, Peter went in and sat with the servants to see the end. His course of falling becomes more and more rapid. Now he tells a falsehood! He curses! He swears by the solemn sanction of an oath that he knows not the man! This completes the fall of Peter. But memory revives as the cock crows and Jesus looks at him. Now he is doaded with grief and goes away into shame and privacy that he may weep himself away. Poor man! How he is cast down from that lofty faith and hope which he enjoyed only a few months before! As he went by steps in faith to Christ, so by reversal he goes away to the fall.

OZARK, ALA., Jan. 23, 1885.

The Traveler—Home Again.

MR. EDITOR: The old melody, "Home Again," always was a beautiful sentiment set to a true air. Its charm is doubly captivating under conditions pertinent and apposite. Experience and sentiment make up much of the fabric of our inner life. Would one travel the journey of life without them? Nay, a thousand times nay! The faces, forms, attitudes, gestures, hearty handshakes, smiles of recognition so expressive of the sentiment hidden in the heart for many years, but unquestionably recognized through those in the spiritual realm; but more than all the spirit which identifies our being and improves itself upon others—these are all and singular, but unmistakable tokens of kinship and love. A happy experience in this line of things makes the remark true. "The shining face is oft the reflex light of the concentrated rays from other happy faces."

The missionary traveler has stood and wandered on the beach of the mighty Pacific and beheld with amazement and awful silence and adoring awe, its mighty pulsations as the thrabblings of nature and the voice of God, and, as with the pent-up, but involuntary adoration of the soul, said:

"This awful God is ours,
Yet still shall I love him on;
Through the desert rain around me,
Through the deeps that may surround me,
It hath springs that may be won."

He has taken in the majestic Columbia; its cascades; its unique monumental rocks; its surging waters forcing their way through parapets of adamantine rock hundreds of feet above the head; its wild and weird scenery; its beautiful bridal veil and Multauidah water falls.

He has taken in the vast expanse of desert tract as it seemed to lie out in wasteless profligacy, with its mounds and barren bosom stretching as far as the eye could reach; its monotony broken by the leaping antelope and singular castle-like formations.

He has taken in the towering mountains of the far West lifting their snow-capped summits far into the heavens. He has taken in the great city of the lakes, with its colossal structures ten-stories high, and lesser cities, but more beautiful. He has taken in rushing Niagara, that world's wonder and God's masterpiece. He has taken in and witnessed at the White House the almost wonder of wonders, how the great President of the great republic, as with the magic wand of his touch, set the machinery of the world's greatest exposition agog, although more than twelve hundred miles away.

He has taken in several beautiful cities of the South and mingled with their happy denizens and partook of their generous and noble hospitalities. Been regaled at several Annual Conferences. He has visited halls and schools of science and scholastic renown, and galleries of sculpture and the arts. He has been present at that great and celebrated convocation of the representative talent of the Methodists. He has grasped the hand and felt the throbs of the heart of friends new formed and laid in the bosom of old and tried friends and kindred. He has mingled with co-laborers of former years, heard their voices in prayer and song and their rich testimonies of redeeming and saving grace and their sermons as the anointed of God—this is the delightful culmination.

That picture gallery through which I was led yesterday by the heaven-appointed limner, our dear good Bishop, as line after line was drawn, and shade after shade was given, in the delineation of Lazarus and the rich man, was to me more beautiful and ravishing than those like creations that hang upon the walls or stood in attitude so speaking in Powers' and Peabody's galleries. The Centennial Conference, with its fine, eloquent and elaborate essays was equalled, and in some passages surpassed, by our own gifted and silver-tongued preacher, who delighted the large audience with his centennial sermon.

The sixty "players on instruments," with Emerson, the great cornetist—one of the charming features of the exposition—while to me their music was ravishing, yet the songs and choruses and spirit of the preachers far surpassed that, "proving there are no songs like the songs of Zion."

Affectionately, THOS. H. WHITE.

MINNER, LA., Jan. 12, 1885.

Old Preachers.

This is my birthday. Now fifty years in the account of time is registered against me. I have had a half century of varied experience. I have been a teacher, a doctor, a soldier, a farmer and a preacher. My life has been smooth in the main; yet I have passed over many ragged places. I have known sore bereavements, fierce temptations, some disappointments and persecutions. I have been shaken in Salau's sieve until the fibres of my moral nature seemed to be at their utmost tension. Again I have rested quietly at the foot of the cross feeling that the powers of darkness could not shake me. Taking all in all, I think more light than shadow has fallen across my pathway.

I feel this morning that the mercy of God to me has been abundant, yea amazing. My plan has been to mourn, pray over, and then bury my bitter experiences with other rubbish of the past. I do not pack them along with me, I have no room for them, besides each year furnishes sufficient quantities of this sort of material for all needs. I am not much in the habit of combating monsters before I meet them; but I confess to some apprehension now. You see, I am just at the point where C. H. Spurgeon says, the minister usually reaches the climax of his usefulness and begins to recede. He says as a general thing men in other professions, as law, medicine or statesmen, are more in demand after they pass fifty than they have been before. While ministers of this age are less sought after, ruddy enthusiastic youth seems more desirable. There is some evidence on this side of the Atlantic in agreement with Mr. Spurgeon's observations. For some years I have noticed that some of our older preachers, those that helped to clear away the brush in the morning of their ministry, that had borne the burdens in the noonday's heat, now in the evening of their ministry, are thrust off in the corners and on the rugged edges while younger men fill the most desirable places. I have thought on this subject, talked upon it, tried to find out why it was so. I used to suspect that the Bishops and their advisers were somewhat to blame in this matter. Some time since I was for a few years in the Bishops' council; my eyes were opened. I discovered it was difficult to get suitable places for several of the older preachers and for some not so old. Instead of providing men for the work, it seemed that the men had to be provided for. This idea was humiliating to me in the extreme. I had always thought of works seeking preachers and not preachers seeking works. A man giving himself wholly to a cause and then to have to be provided for seemed strange to me, and yet that sort of case appeared to be presented.

Here is an example, a cabinet scene, that I witnessed: Presiding Elder Belfry asked the other presiding elder, in the Bishop's presence, if they could find a place for Bro. Card in either of their districts. Card was a cultured man, about sixty, and vigorous. He had been in the ministry since a beardless boy; had filled several of the most prominent stations in the Conference; he had been successful; he had no irregularities or peculiarities; he was very popular among the preachers; twenty-five years ago I heard him called one of the finest preachers in the Conference. Now to Bro. Belfry's question no affirmative response came. Bro. Belfry said that Bro. Card must be provided for. One presiding elder said he could give him a place. Belfry said it would never do in the world to put such a man as Card on a place circuit. Some one asked if he would not suit Troy station; the presiding elder on that district said, No. Troy was a little station that paid about $300. Under protest of the presiding elder the Bishop put down Card at Troy station. I was near Bro. Card when the appointments were read out. A tear stood in his eye. He was mortified to think his brethren were so regardless of his interests as to send him and his family to such a poor appointment. That year Troy paid Card a little over $300, and asked the presiding elder not to send him back. "We want a young man," was their request.

That case may stand alone; but I think it has some parallels. Seeing what has befallen my betters I feel I have some reason to be apprehensive as I pass into the fifties. But why are our older ministers less acceptable? Some say they live in the past and are out of sympathy with the rising generation, and our successful efforts are chiefly among the young. Some say the stewards and other leading men of the church are young men and men in middle life, and that they are in deeper sympathy with men of their own age, and hence they ask for the younger ministers. Others say the pulpit keeps abreast with the progressive age, and what was fine preaching forty years ago would only be medium now. Still others say that the wear and tear on the heart, mind and body of the minister is so severe that he prematurely fails. Others, several others, say want of study is the cause, relying upon old stock, arguments and expressions worn smooth by use; he fails to move the audience; he offers dry minims instead of living sermons, and is surprised they have no effect. There is, no doubt, much truth in the last supposition. In young or old the mind must be kept bright and the heart warm, the hand active, or success will be slight. I start in with some trepidation upon the next

JANUARY 14, 1885.

HALF CENTURY.

Cosset Christians.

Every New England farmer knows what a "cosset" is. It is some pet creature, lamb or calf, which, without a mother, has been taken in hand to be raised by artificial means. The result is that it becomes subject to an amount of fondling and cossetting which takes away from it any natural character for sturdiness which it might otherwise have had. Now there are a goodly number of Christians who answer to this idea. They are cossets. They seem to be unable to live without an amount of fondling and petting which proclaims them to be weaklings, and keeps them so. We are constantly running across them, and they give us no little care and anxiety, and upon the whole lead us to the conclusion that they are not worth the trouble. If they can not live and get on without the cossetting they demand, they might as well die at once. There are several varieties of them.

1. They are a class who move into a new neighborhood, and for awhile "go around" and "hear different preachers" and try different churches. You see them and welcome them, it may be; or, perhaps you only see them in your congregation. Presently you hear of or from them, and are told that they left off coming to your church because you did not pay any attention to them. It is true that they never made themselves known to you. They did not call upon you, or even wait at the conclusion of some Sabbath or week evening service, and tell you who they were, or that they were thinking of uniting with your church. On the contrary, they waited a few Sabbaths to see if they were to be noticed and made much of, and finding that they were not (and mainly because of their own neglect in letting any one know that they belong to the household of faith,) they took their departure for some other church, settling forth that yours was a cold and formal one, which "paid no attention to strangers."

Now the question arises in our minds whether they ever thought of coming to church or among a people for the purpose of worship or work. Upon the whole, we must conclude that they came only to be petted and made much of. They were thinking of themselves, and not of the Lord and his work. If they may be petted and made much of, they will come among you; but if they can not be put on the list of "cossets" they will go elsewhere. The fact is they are weaklings, and "think more highly of themselves than they ought to think." Our conviction is that downright, out-and-out Christians, especially if they are strangers, will at once make themselves known when they come into a strange city and church, and put themselves in the way of fellowship, work and acquaintance. There are such; and they never find any trouble in making acquaintance or being noticed. What right, either on grounds of fellowship or reason, has a stranger to suppose that a pastor and a whole church will at once recognize him as the Lord's and run after him when he has taken not the least pains to make himself known as such? Nay, what right, on any principle of consecration or recognized obligation, has any Christian to make his or her active participation in the work or worship of God dependent upon any amount of petting or cossetting? And yet there are a multitude who can only be kept at even a moderate participation in church fellowship or work by an amount of petting and attention that scarce any busy pastor or people can give, or cares to give.

2. The cosset Christian is found in the flock. They seem to have been born weaklings, and they are only kept alive by the most assiduous petting and coaxing. Of course, they were known at the time of their entering the church, either by confession or by letter. For awhile they came to church and prayer meeting; but presently you missed them, and went and looked them up. You found that they had lost their interest, because "nobody seemed to care anything for them." The members had not called upon them; everybody did not rush up to them and shake hands with them every time they entered church or prayer room. Indeed, they tell you that the pastor even passed them on the street, and did not speak to them. Of course, they never offered to shake hands with, or speak to any one themselves; and if the pastor failed to recognize them on the street, it was not their place to recognize the pastor. That is not what they came into the church for. They came in to be cosseted and made much of, and, not being so treated, they have now taken to staying at home, and putting like spoiled children. That they have any covenant obligations to serve the Lord, whether others do or not, never has entered into their heads, much less their hearts. Perhaps you find out that they have been ill for a few days or weeks, and neither the pastor nor any of the members have called to inquire how they were. Of course they never sent word to the pastor that they were ill and would like to see him, nor did any one else have word of that fact but the doctor; nevertheless, they quietly assumed that it was the pastor's business to know when people are sick, and go and pet them awhile. The truth is, they are cossets, and can only live by being petted, and, as to speak, "raised by hand." Then they have discovered that the pastor has visited some family oftener than he has visited them. It is not that they want any spiritual help, but only they do not want the pastor to pay more attention to somebody else than he does to them. They are cossets, and nothing more. Year in and year out they are no help to the pastor, and of no use to the church. They are but a burden, a vexation, a clog and a hindrance, taking up the pastor's time by their unreasonable complaints and fault-finding to no purpose. It is a question whether they are Christians at all. The probability is, that they are only sentimentalists and selfish lovers of themselves, looking out for a place or church in which they may be made much of. May the Lord convert them!—New York Independent.

Our notice of this charming volume has been unavoidably delayed. An earlier reading was impossible, and a notice without examination we would not make. And now what of it? Much every way. Dr. Fitzgerald has the literary gift, and this is the richest, choicest production of his brilliant pen. He makes the grand "old Doctor" appear as real and great to his readers as he was to those who knew and loved him best. As a biography it is a gem, and will live in the literature of the church. Great as was Dr. Johnson, his distinguished place in English letters is largely due to Boswell, his admiring biographer. Maugham pronounced him the model of biographical writers. And so, however unworldly as was the learning of Dr. Summers, unwearied his labors, orthodox his writings, loyal his ecclesiastical convictions and stainless his life, his memory in the church will much depend upon this beautiful and skillful portraiture. If any thing this an extravagant estimate let them send for a copy. A brother rather complained that we injured his eyes by loaning him the book. He read it when he should have been asleep. Well-written biographies are the most helpful of books. But those strange, either out of disjointed facts, without any rhyme or reason, are an affliction to the flesh and a grievance to the mind. We will not enter into an analysis of this "Life Study" or extract specimen gems, but simply give our cordial commendation.

The Methodist Year-book for 1885, edited by W. H. DaPry, D. D., is our table. Though not so large as the Centennial Year-book issued for 1884, it is fuller than the ordinary Methodist Almanac, and is sold for 25 cents. Methodists in the South as well as North would do well to get this valuable annual. It is full of facts and figures—just the things to corroborate the faith and courage of all Methodists. Sold in Phillips & Hunt, 805 Broadway, New York.

Le Franc & Co., 254 Roxbury Street, Boston, have our thanks for several of their fine art publications. "A Valentine to My Lady" is beautiful indeed. Their "Christmas, New Year and other festive cards, notices, books, etc., are in the highest style of the art. Prices are moderate and the work is a marvel of beauty.

Dorcas is a monthly magazine published by Howard Brothers, 572 Broadway, New York, and edited by Laura B. Starr. We thank the publishers for several numbers. The ladies of our household pronounce it most excellent.

The Quiver, by Cassell & Co., of New York, is a valuable religious monthly published at $1.50 per annum. Some of the best English writers contribute to its columns. We have read several articles with unusual interest.

REV. MARY C. COLLAMAY.

BY J. G. JONES.

In the ideal world of thought
The conflict of the soul
From bloodless battles fought,
Which save the immortal soul.Against the hosts of sin
The child in night divine,
And that the soul and sin,
Still wage the fight sublime.But, alas! in morning's hour,
With the dew upon his brow,
A leader full of power
Is taken from us now.A tender, young and gifted,
With the love of souls at heart,
His love the warfare fought
To the slayer who he came.That his lips are sealed forever,
They yet for Christ shall speak:
His spirit shall ever hover
To guard the frail and weak.And the weapons of his warfare, Bright with the recent fight,
Shall on the foe be terrify
By a comrade's strength and might.The buds on his grave be springing From Nature's choicest hand,
His soul be joyfully singing
In a brighter, sweeter land.His memory in the future years,
With a fragrance sweet and rare,
Shall ever be enshrined in tears
Till we meet him "over there."

Infantile Religion.

DEAR BROTHER: I read your letter of December 11, 1884, addressed to me in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, on the subject of infantile religion, with more than usual interest. This is a subject that ought to be written about and honestly discussed by intelligent and conscientious Christian men. It is a fact hard to be accounted for that Christian parents so much neglect the early religious instruction and training of their children. But I am not writing just what I started to write. I owe you an apology for not noticing your valuable letter sooner. But I have been drifting about away from home on necessary business and, withal, have been quite indisposed with a six weeks' cold and cough. But I am myself again, so far as writing a short paragraph is concerned, and will commence with you. In my various short letters addressed last year to "Our Boys" and "Our Children," in the ADVOCATE, of course you recognize the fact that I was writing to children old enough to read and understand what I was writing about. It is an alarming fact that many of our children of larger growth have become wicked and grossly given to be converted. But, back of such infants, I have a theory about infants which, it seems to me, I was compelled to adopt in early manhood for the repose of my own mind. Without attempting at present to elaborate any point, I will give it to you in few words, and, if you see anything unsentimental in it, I hope you will do me the kindness to point it out.

1. I believe in what our theologians call "original sin"—that is, that all children derive from our fallen parents a corrupt nature with a strong sinward tendency. But, as they did not produce this corrupt nature and could not avoid having it, they are not held accountable for it.

2. Nevertheless this corruption of nature needed to be atoned for and taken away in order for them to be fully acceptable to God and prepared for heaven.

3. All this has been done for them by our all-atoning Saviour who, as a "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," died to put away all this original sin from innocent, unoffending infants. In St. John 1, 29, there is an important passage, which, I think, has direct, if not exclusive, reference to this subject—"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Not the sins in the plural, as so often quoted, but the sin—singular number—of the world. Why is sin put here in the singular number where it is so often put in the plural elsewhere? Because John the Baptist, who was well informed as to the office and work of Christ, knew that, as the Lamb of God, he had made a full and final atonement for what we call the original sin of the whole world, so that every infant is born in a state of purity from sin and in a state of preparation for heaven. Jesus, in regard to the religious capabilities of children—"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise," and of little children in general—"Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." So that, by the simple provision made for them by the "Lamb of God," which taketh away the sin of the world, they are born in the church and in a state of purity from sin which qualifies them for membership.

4. My sainted wife and I were permitted to bring up five children to man and womanhood. So far as I know, they are all alive to-day and all in the church of their parents, and, though they may not always have been as good Christians as they should have been, according to my understanding of their church relations as fixed by the Holy Scriptures, they have never breathed out of the church. They were born in the church, and we had them baptized in infancy—not to get them into the church, for they were already in; but as a public acknowledgment that they belonged to the church and had a right to the sealing ordinance of their church membership, and also as a public acknowledgment of an obligation and determination to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." These are about the substance of my views about the religious condition of little children. I have a few additional thoughts, which I will reserve for another article.

My Trip to Conference—Reminiscences.

MR. EDITOR: Wednesday, the seventh instant, we left Mansfield for Minden, the site of the Louisiana Conference. The train falling to make close connection at Shreveport, we were an hour late getting to Minden. The Conference was in session when we arrived, Bishop Hargrove in the chair.

This occasion calls for a review of scenes and incidents of by-gone days. Thirty-six years ago we attended a session of the Louisiana Conference at this place. What marvelous changes have been wrought since that day! What grand developments have been made in the material improvements of the country and in the progress of the church! Thirty-six years ago the preachers in the city of New Orleans left the city on Wednesday or Thursday on a small Red River steamer for Minden. Our company consisted of Bishop Paine and some twelve or fifteen preachers. Others were taken on at different landings on the way, so that when we got to Campiti, on Red River, we numbered some twenty-five in all. Red River being at low tide, here we had to embark, now seventy-five miles by land to Minden. The good people of Minden had anticipated our trouble and had met us with a drove of ponies and horses. Landing early in the morning, we were soon mounted and on our journey. Before we started, however, Bishop Paine suggested the propriety of getting wrappers to protect our pants and to secure from the mud. We followed him to the store, where he took pleasure in showing how to adjust our leggings so as to secure the greatest benefit. This was not his first adventure on horseback. We traveled some thirty miles the first day, and stopped in a neighborhood where preparations had been made for us to stay. Several of the German brethren from the city were with us, and who had never been on horseback before. The ride was too much for them—one of them was so completely overcome from fatigue that he had to be carried from his horse to the house. The next day being Sunday, we laid over till Monday. The Bishop preached on Sunday, in a little log school-house, from Romans xii, 1. Monday evening we got to Minden; Tuesday we rested—Wednesday the Conference convened at the appointed hour, Bishop Paine in the chair, and I think Rev. W. H. Crenshaw was elected secretary.

How different now! I learned that the preachers left New Orleans on the train and in less than twenty-four hours were in Minden without mud, fatigue and comparatively without expense. Some of us were born too early in the history of progress to have a vividly remembered. Like individuals, the Conference retains its individuality, though made up of other materials. I now only remember three preachers at this Conference who were there in 1849. Dr. Henkle, from Nashville, and Judge D. O. Shattuck, president of Centenary College, were distinguished visitors at that Conference. The former has long since passed over the river; the latter still lives in the far West, an old man full of days and full of faith. When he was with us he was the preacher's friend and defense. Some incidents occurred at that Conference which are still fresh in my memory. After the Bishop had preached, on Sunday, it became apparent that he did not come up to his highest style of pulpit effort. A Scotch brother—one of us at the time—desires to compliment the sermon, said, in his peculiar Scotch brogue: "Bishop, I liked your sermon very much. You preached just like you made it as you went along." The Bishop replied: "Pretty much that way, Bro. Sutherland." Another thing occurred in that Conference, which was complained of, that has since that day almost become a universal habit and is considered all right. A brother, for the first one, appeared in the Conference wearing mustaches and goatee. The brethren passed their criticisms and expressed their disapprobation. Then the Bishop gave the brother a blinding cut by relating a ludicrous anecdote. I learned that the brother resolved to leave off the habit; but he met his sad fate and died on a burning steamer before he reached New Orleans. He was a devoted Christian minister. Since that day razors have well nigh been emancipated.

Dr. Henkle described the craft furnished him to get away from Conference as having four feet, two long ears and a blind lid for a steering ear. Unaccustomed to such a rudder, he ran his craft over a stream and threw the ladies overboard; but style has changed. At the late Conference we had the pleasure of being entertained and of enjoying the hospitalities of Mr. and Mrs. Crichton, in company with Dr. Grace and Bishop Hargrove.

The Conference was voted for its harmony and the facility with which it transacted its business. I am inclined to think, however, that there was some friction in the councils of the cabinet. This I would not have known if I had not occupied a room adjacent to the Conference Sanhedrum. The preaching was "uniformly good"; the love feast on Sunday morning was a time of spiritual enjoyment; the sacrament of the Lord's Supper at three P. M. was a time of deep religious feeling, which pervaded every heart. Then to cap the climax the Centenary sermon of Dr. C. W. Carter was delivered at night to an immense crowd of people, and was the occasion of the Conference. Only a few times in life are we permitted to hear a discourse so grand; but we attempt no description of it. I never attended a Conference where the reports of the preachers showed such a meagre support; yet I never saw a Conference more cheerful and happy, and never saw preachers receive their appointments more willingly. And now I do hope, as the preachers have been on short rations during the past year, that the church and stewards will meet them on the half-way ground and do something handsome for them in the beginning of the year. Help them keep their good cheer and they will do you better service.

We noticed quite a number of educated young men in the Conference, strong in body and mind, and with all the facilities of this improved age. What is to hinder an improved progress in the church during the next generation in proportion to these facilities and advantages? With a proportionate degree of piety and spirituality, there is not opposition enough in the universe to prevent it. Hence we hope and pray, and expect happy results for the church in the coming future.

Here, at Minden, thirty-six years ago, having passed an approved examination on the four years' course of study, I was advanced to elder's orders and went out with no other intention than to spend my life as an itinerant Methodist preacher, which, by the grace of God, I have done up to the present time. After forty consecutive years of this sort of labor I hesitatingly asked to be placed on the superannuated list—not to rest, but to do what I can in a more circumscribed limit. I would be the most ungrateful of all were I not to give my remaining days to the service of God and to the interests of his church.

Rev. J. T. Heard.

FACTS ABOUT HIS LAST ILLNESS AND DEATH.

BRO. J. T. HEARD has for thirty years found a welcome in our home. He called on us on the night of December 20, 1884. He ate a hearty supper. We had early prayers, when he sent up an earnest petition for my wife, myself and all our children, and especially for J. M. DuBose, whom he dedicated in childhood to God by baptism. After prayer he said, "Do you all wish to retire early?" We answered, "No." He said he felt refreshed and was willing to sit up, as the night was long. He spoke of rheumatism in his shoulder. He, my wife, daughter and myself sat around the centre-table and talked over matters of the church for the past thirty years, with few words about business. He spoke of receiving four of our children into the church and baptizing three others. I never saw Bro. Heard in a happier state of mind. I spoke of it to my wife after we retired. The next morning about sunrise my youngest son entered the room to start a fire. Bro. Heard greeted him with "Good morning!" My second son followed with wood. To him he spoke, and asked, "Is it time to get up?" On being told he need not be in a hurry, he asked, "It's not very cold this morning?" My son replied, "No," and went from the room. The first son returned with pine to burn the fire. Bro. Heard said to him, "You are a good boy, I can not think more than five minutes elapsed till he called for my wife and myself to come to him. Within a half minute my wife was by him. "I am dying," said Bro. Heard, and called for warm water, salt and mustard. When I reached him, being a few steps behind my wife, he said, "Cramp in the stomach." "Shall I send for the doctor?" "No; I will be dead before the doctor can reach me." I sent in haste for the doctor; but it was as he said. But few words were exchanged. He lay down a half dozen times, perhaps, but would not more than straighten himself before reaching his hands to me to raise him up. He said a few times, "Lord have mercy on me!" and once, "O my God, have mercy!" I whispered in prayer. He heard me once say, "Lord, save thy servant!" when he looked and groaned as though he felt it. As he could not rest on the bed, he said, "I will sit by the fire." My son and I bore him up to the fire. He then threw back his head, drew his breath through his lips a few times, and died as a child goes to sleep—not moving hand or foot—in the chair by the fire. Bro. Heard passed from labor to rest in his Father's kingdom.

The time for making the fire to his death was not more than fifteen minutes. He never complained in the least. I have every reason to believe that he knew he was dying; but the time proved to be so short, and every hand was reached out to help, there was no time to ask questions.

Servants of Christ.

BY REV. W. SPILLMAN.

In St. Paul's first letter to the Corinthians vi, 19, 20, he says: "And you are not your own; for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Ignorance of law can not be placed as a valid excuse for a violation of it; consequently what a man had the means of knowing can not be urged as an excuse for his ignorance. Therefore a man who has formed his ideas of God, of the Scriptures, without using the means within his power to understand what the Scriptures teach, is liable to fall into great errors, such as infidelity, atheism, Antinomianism, universalism and finally into condemnation.

Much may be known of God by the "things that are made;" but to understand our relation to him and the duties growing out of that relation we must study the Old and New Testament Scriptures. Christ said: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." John Locke was a great lover of the Scriptures. He was once inquired of as to how a young man might in the surest way attain a true knowledge of the Christian religion? His reply was: "Let him study the Holy Scriptures, therein is contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its end, truth without any mixture of error for its matter."

There are some passages of the Holy Scriptures that are dark and hard to be understood. Others, however, which relate to our relation to God and our duty growing out of that relation, are plain and easy to be understood. Others again seem to snarl up and constitute as in a nut-shell the whole truth of the gospel, embodying when properly understood all that is needful as to our duty and essential to our salvation and final felicity. Two words of St. Paul: "Ye are not your own," etc., are of this character. It contains: 1. An assertion of our relation to God, namely: "Ye are not your own." 2. The reason or foundation of this: "For ye are bought with a price." 3. The consequence, or duties, growing out of this: "Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Nothing can be more plain and comprehensive than these words of St. Paul.

The existence of a God is the primordial idea, the first great and starting point of true religion; for he that "cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." This, as expressed by Chalmers, "is the most important knowledge a man can have. It is a height and pitch of intelligence" when a man can say: "I know there is a God." The man then who knows there is a God is prepared to understand his relation to him—the nature of that relation and the duties growing out of it. "Ye are not your own." Ye belong to God. As it respects God's right to man and his service it is absolute, boundless and sacred, including all his power and faculties. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." How important it is that this great truth of God's ownership of man and all things should be deeply impressed upon the human family! The carnally minded say: We are our own, therefore we will live as we list; our tongues are our own, therefore we shall utter such words as we choose and will act as best suit us. Our lands, goods, equities, money and all this world we command belongs to us and us only. It was just such a character of whom Christ said: "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee." Oh, fatal error! Alas! impious and destructive delusion! How senseless and regardless of God's title to man! 1. By creation. 2. The great and inestimable price Jesus Christ paid for his redemption from the bondage of sin and Satan. "Ye are bought with a price." Oh, what a glorious price! None but he who paid that price can give its full estimate.

Our relation then to God, and a consideration of the great price paid by Jesus Christ for our redemption should lead us to a prayerful and close study of our duty growing out of God's claim on us. St. Paul sums it all up in a few words: "Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." With the body—the body, with all its various functions and appetites, has a very important relation and influence upon our moral and intellectual operations. In order then that the moral and intellectual faculties should have a truly normal development, that all the physical laws of the body, as far as they can be understood, should be carefully observed. All physiologists teach that there is a mutual action and reaction between the body and the spirit. The body, therefore, should be kept under subjection—its appetites and passions should be subdued within healthy bounds. The laws of its welfare are temperance, chastity and cleanliness—a due amount of exercise and sleep. Without the observance of these laws we can not be prepared for the performance of the moral and religious duties devolving on us—to fight the grand spiritual battles which must be encountered in the experience of every one laboring to glorify God. Therefore, to glorify God we must maintain a healthy correspondence between our bodily and spiritual natures. The great object of the creation of man was that he might glorify God for the accomplishment of this great object he disqualified himself by violating the law of God and placed himself and all his posterity into captivity to the law of sin and Satan. Man was under a strong obligation to glorify God because of his creation; but in consequence of the price paid for his redemption by Jesus Christ, he is now placed under a ten-fold obligation to glorify him. Here we may observe that it is the authoritative and sovereign command of God that we glorify him in our bodies, as they were created in that image or form in which Christ was willing to appear in this world, and in which dwell all the fullness of the Godhead and will continue to dwell throughout the ceaseless cycles of eternity. When, therefore, we consider the high origin of our bodies and their final destiny when they shall be resurrected and fashioned like the glorified body of Jesus Christ, certainly we should labor to glorify God in our bodies and render them fit temples not only for our never-dying souls, but also for the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. When our bodies are in a normal condition, and under subjection to the law of God, we can then glorify him in our spirits. God requires those that worship him to "worship him in spirit and truth," or, as expressed by St. Paul, "whether, or therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

December 6, 1838: Our annual session of the Alabama Conference commenced at Marion, Miss., on Wednesday, November 21, and closed on Friday night, December 3. We had a very harmonious session, and the Conference is in a prosperous condition. There has been an increase of lay membership of over 6,000 during the year. The missionary collections amounted to about $33,000, and during the session $16,000 was subscribed for the endowment of the Publishing House and establishment of a Conference depository at Mobile. Our Conference is composed mostly of young men and middle aged; very few can be called aged persons. It is a perfect embodiment of energy, a powerful body, who are making themselves felt in all that pertains to the moral and intellectual interests of the country within their bounds. We have one university with a capital of $800,000. Four female colleges and high schools of the highest grade in the State. The East Alabama Female College at Auburn is also a Methodist institution, although not properly a Conference college. We have a fund of about $10,000, the interest of which is devoted to the relief of indigent and necessitous traveling preachers, their widows and orphans. There are one hundred and ninety-two preachers in connection with the Conference in all.

Bishop Paine presided at this session with his usual dignity and amity of manner. His manifested great patience, and his general bearing was kind and paternal towards the preachers, and he enjoys their affections and confidence in the highest degree. I have been reappointed to the Columbus mission. May the Lord help me and strengthen me for the work and sanctify my labors and influence abundantly!

I had the privilege of attending several interesting revivals during the year 1884 and my own charge prospered and we had a number of conversions among the colored people. The Annual Conference for this year met at Eufaula, November 30. Bishop Kavanaugh presided, and I was appointed to the Columbus mission in connection with the Lowndes county mission. Bro. Hargrove was appointed to Columbus station. A gracious revival commenced at his first quarterly meeting during which he had fifty-five accessions to the church.

During this meeting Rev. John Hersey, of Virginia, visited us and preached several times. He is one of the most holy men I ever knew. He is seventy-four years of age and yet is active and vigorous, walks all over town, reproves sin wherever he sees it. He literally goes about doing good. He has traveled all over the United States. He has been to Africa, and is now visiting this country, preaching and distributing good books, visiting and praying with the people. He dresses in a plain grey suit, his coat is of the old style, he will not wear anything superfluous, he has no buttons on his coat behind, no cravat, and yet he looks neat and genteel. He loves little children, and gave the Sabbath-school an interesting address. He recently preached on a circuit in Virginia. He walked round the circuit, and the first round he visited two hundred and thirty families, preached thirteen extra discourses and attended two camp meetings. He is truly an apostolic man, and a light to the Methodist ministry. God grant that I may profit by his example and preaching and that we may have a revival of scriptural holiness in Columbus through his instrumentality.

Sunday, April 1: I think the Methodist Church in Columbus is in a very flourishing condition. There is much Christian union. The Sabbath-school is doing finely. There has been an accession of eighty members since the last quarterly meeting. The young men of the church have a prayer meeting every Saturday night, which is conducted with great spirit. The congregation is fine, and we are about to erect a large church. I feel very thankful for what God has done for me and my family. I ascribe all to God and give him all the glory.

June 18, 1880: I heard Bro. Hargrove preach on infant baptism last night—a most masterly effort. He proved infant church membership from the identity of the Jewish and Christian churches. He said if we could not show the place where the right of infant church membership had been annulled then, as a matter of course, it stood in full force, and the fact that it was not commanded in the New Testament was a strong argument in favor of its retention. There was no necessity for a re-annulment, it would have been more troubling to do so. He is an extraordinary young man, and will make a great man in the church if he lives and remains faithful.

On the March.

MR. EDITOR: After a long delay we are at home again safe, if not well. My little boy had a hard spell of sickness after I left the family for my distant home and work to which I was appointed. My family remained at Newton in the care of kind friends who did all they could to relieve the distressed mother and wife. Their kindness has made engravings upon the tablet of our memory that will be read with pleasure for all time to come. May God ever abundantly bless them!

"For seven days I was on the road in cold, rain and heat, gratefully receiving the hospitality of stranger-friends from night to night, and spending a pleasant Sunday in the hospitable home of Capt. Eaton, of Williamsburg, and the following night with Bro. Ball, of Columbia. On January 7, after having made 170 miles, I arrived at the pleasant town of Greensburg, La., and found a kind reception in the house of that estimable gentleman, Dr. C. M. Sitman, where I had a good night's rest for a weary rider and his faithful horse.

Sickness delayed the onward move of the family to meet a distressed father, wishing and waiting for delayed tidings of the sick boy. At last, through the merciful providence of a gracious God, the family escaped an untimely death by the wreck of the train two miles west of Brandon, they arrived at Tangipahua, where stranger, but very kind friends received them January 13. On Wednesday I joined the anxiously looked-for family, humbly thanking God for his kind providence in bringing us together once more. Thursday we took up our march to our new home, where we met a number of Greensburg's fairest young people, with kind, cheerful and sweet faces, offering warm and kind greetings and a cordial welcome to the weary, but grateful family. In a cozy room we were seated to rest, when soon we were conducted to a neatly arranged table loaded with good things for appetites whetted and improved by travel. Though torn from a kind and appreciative people, we feel that we have fallen into the kind embrace of others who will love us still. May our kind Father abundantly bless us all during the new year!

My postoffice is Greensburg, St. Helena parish, La. Anyone wishing my pamphlet on baptism can address me at the above place. I will be grateful for the patronage of all wishing information on the long mooted subject. Get it, read and remove your doubts.

From An Itinerant's Wife.

MR. EDITOR: As it is only occasionally that I am seized with a desire to "scribble," I shall trust to your usual generosity to allow me to say, through the columns of the ADVOCATE something of my first impressions concerning the good people of Sharon and vicinity, and of the warm reception which we met. After a residence of eight years amongst the warm-hearted people of Louisiana, it was with keen regret that we parted with those dear to us by a thousand acts of kindness and by the tender associations of years.

Our Christmas cheer, partaken of with those we were so soon to leave was saddened by this thought: Memory lingers sadly around the last days, fondly recalling the many tokens of love and good wishes. To those special friends, Methodists and otherwise, one a member of the Episcopal Church, who contributed generously towards the purchase of a handsome and valuable parlor clock for the preacher's wife, she would say "God bless you, one and all." Yet names are can not record here, but they are written in her heart in characters which time can not easily efface. It is not without misgivings that the itinerant and his family part with friends tried and true to enter upon new and strange fields of labor. Sharon, circuit, however, and the old town of Sharon, historic in its associations with the eminent of our church in other days, have always been associated in my mind with the very best type of Methodism.

There have lived and labored in this who are prominent figures in the history of our church in this State. Noted for their piety, usefulness and consecrated talents. Many now unknown to fame, including our venerable father in Israel, Rev. John G. Jones, and, if I mistake not, our

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1885.

We publish in another column an earnest appeal signed by Drs. Young and Kelley. The case is urgent, and the demands imperative. Our missionaries should not suffer embarrassment for lack of cordial and liberal support. Nor should the missionary treasury endure the drain of an interest account. Brethren, please heed this call and send forward your missionary collections.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning last was a profitable and pleasant occasion. Besides the pastors, the two presiding elders, Bishop Keener and the editor, there were present Rev. R. S. Trippett, of the Louisiana Conference, Rev. D. C. Brown, of Sedalia, Missouri, Rev. W. Merritt, of Canada, and Rev. R. Abbey, of the Mississippi Conference. The pastors made cheering reports of large congregations, good prayer-meetings, and well-attended class-meetings and of accessions to the church. In response to invitation Rev. D. C. Brown gave a history of his labors on the border of our Southern Methodist. He had seen the Lord's work greatly prosper, his membership increased from fifty to three hundred, and our cause occupying a commanding position. Rev. Mr. Merritt also spoke briefly of his far northern labors in Manitoba. Rev. R. Abbey indulged in pleasing reminiscences. He attended a Methodist service in New Orleans first in 1822, in an humble frame structure made of cast-off flatboats. Now after sixty-two years he had come a second time to worship in the city, and what a change! The meeting grows in interest. Brethren from the States visiting the city will be welcomed at the Monday morning meeting.

The London Times celebrated on January 1, the one hundredth year of its existence. For the first three years it was known as "The Daily Universal Register." This title was changed Jan. 1, 1788, as follows: "The Times or Daily Universal Register, printed logographically." The "logographic" system of printing consisted in using whole words or parts of words in place of single letters. The first number under the new name was a folio sheet of which more than one-half was filled with advertisements. There was a half column of foreign intelligence, made up of four paragraphs. It was first printed by steam on the morning of Nov. 29, 1814. Its career has been an extraordinary success, and it to-day occupies a more influential position than any other newspaper in the world. Sir Bulwer Lytton said on the floor of the House of Commons thirty years ago: "If I desired to leave to remote posterity some memorial of existing British civilization, I would prefer, not our docks, not our railways, not our public buildings, not even the palaces in which we hold our sittings: I would prefer a file of the Times."

Moody as a Preacher.

The following pen picture of Mr. Moody and his style of preaching we find in the Richmond Christian Advocate, drawn by Dr. J. D. Blackwell. Those who have heard the great evangelist will testify to its accuracy, and others will get an idea of his real source of power. Such a conscious love of Christ is the need of the pulpit everywhere:

Mr. Moody is so direct and of such singleness of eye as to his aims, so unambitious in his style, as to disarm hostile criticism. Two classes only of professed Christians oppose him—the Pharisee, thinking God that he is not like other men, and those whose eastern taste or the ties above Christian zeal. Very few of these classes are seen. Mr. Moody is so good a general, that he brings the influences around him to further his ends. He is not anxious to count numbers—has no church to build up. He is a man of feeling and sympathy. His faith seems child-like and strong. There is no doubting in respect to God's word. He is in harmony with Christ. The love of Christ, consciously realized, is propelling him. His themes are usually such as tend to lead men to commit themselves at once to Christ. His preaching is of the plainest and most pointed kind. He speaks as one who literally believes what he teaches and who feels it to be of infinite importance to his brother. With a teacher of strong common sense, with good command of plain English, of profound knowledge of the essentials of salvation, with a heart of love for God and man and with a faith that now expects God to work and a large audience eager, expectant and many prayerful, the conditions of success are met and success follows.

"A Rather High Price."

This is the title of an editorial article in the Vicksburg Herald on the expense account of foreign missions. The editor's eye happened to fall upon a paragraph "without marks of paternity" in some exchange on the cost of converting Jews, and at once arraigned the expensiveness of foreign missions generally. It seems that a society for converting Jews had reported a gain of four converts at an expenditure of $83,427. Without stopping to inquire whether or not this statement had any foundation in fact, the Herald discourses as follows:

Compared to the money cost of converting the heathen in various quarters of the world, we regard $25,000 a head for the conversion of Jews as remarkably low.

Since the establishment of foreign missionary societies we should not like to hazard a guess as to the amount of money spent in that direction—to say nothing of the thousands of good men and women whose lives have been sacrificed in trying to Christianize the heathen of many lands. Untold millions of dollars have been expended and thousands of lives have been hopelessly wrecked—to say nothing of other thousands who have perished miserably in the jungles of India, Africa and the Isles of the sea in laboring to Christianize the benighted heathen, and for all this cost, for all the suffering and misery entailed upon the men and women engaged in foreign missionary work, the number of conversions from idolatry to the religion of our blessed Savior will be found to be wonderfully small. If correct statistics of the amount of money expended in foreign missions and the number of real conversions were accessible, we fancy that the price paid for converting "four Jews" from the faith of their fathers would be ridiculously cheap—in fact, would be regarded as a very low figure. In matters of this sort, however, we are taught that money is but dross, and life itself is unworthy of a thought when the work of the Master of the universe is to be performed.

With the special indictment of the above we have nothing to do, only in so far as it may represent a school of thought in our modern society. The number entertaining such views is not large, and those are confined to the uninformed. The sources of information are ample and readily accessible; but they are not needed or sought after by that class of critics. However, as the occasion offers an opportunity to restate some facts, it is gladly improved.

But first let us say that the objector who, in cold blood, makes a mathematical calculation as to the money cost of saving the soul of a heathen, and concludes that the price is too high, is incompetent to pass judgment on spiritual things. His mind is too materialistic to have any conceptions of the moral and spiritual. With such we have no argument. Our discussion is with those who believe in the soul's immortality and in the great doctrines of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Another fact must be remembered, which even the materialist ought to appreciate—the influence of mission work is not confined to the number converted or the statistics tabulated and reported. Their effect upon the moral, social and political life of a people—elevating them from the lowest depths of vice to a noble manhood, giving them educational systems, oftentimes formulating a written language for them, improving their methods of commerce and agriculture, suggesting wiser laws and infusing a more manly spirit of liberty—these and other things are never mentioned in mission statistics. The English "Palladium Blue Book," for 1873, contains some official statements which give eloquent support to this phase of the subject so strangely overlooked by materialistic mathematicians. Speaking of India, it says: "Taking them together, these rural and aboriginal populations of India, which have received a large share of the attention of the missionary societies, now contain among them a quarter of a million of native Christian converts. The principles they profess, the standard of morals at which they aim, the education and training which they receive, make them no unimportant element in the empire which the government of India has under its control." Lord Lawrence, viceroy and governor-general of India, said: "I believe, notwithstanding all that the English people have done to benefit India, the missionaries have done more than all other agencies combined." And even more emphatic is the testimony of Sir Bartle Frere, of Mr. Robert Mackenzie in an able article in the "Nineteenth Century," and of Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, a native convert and one of the most eloquent men in India. A like responsive voice comes up from every mission field in the world.

And their retroactive influence must be taken into the account. How these influences have worked to the commercial, industrial and political advantage of the Christian countries from which missionaries have gone forth! The United States has reaped large wealth from her commerce with the Sandwich Islands; but they were valueless until Christian missions taught them a higher civilization and led them to a nobler destiny. So much for the mere commerce of a missionary gospel.

Now for the facts as to the success of foreign missions. Is the number of converts "wonderfully small"? And is it true that $25,000 a head would be "ridiculously cheap" in estimating the expense of the world's conversion to Christ? A public teacher making such a declaration is supposed to know whereof he speaks. Let us see. In 1878 there were more than 60,000 converts gathered into the Protestant Mission Churches of the world. Now, at $25,000 a head—a "ridiculously cheap" estimate—they cost $15,000,000,000. But did they? As a matter of fact, as we learn from the greatest statistician of modern times, the aggregate receipts of the Protestant foreign missionary societies of Europe and America from their origin to the present time is not more than $270,000,000. So the cost of one year's work, according to the objector's estimate, exceeds the entire amount expended for foreign missions during all their history. Such dilapidation and flagrant statement only needs the clear light of fact turned on to expose its ridiculous cheapness.

But let us take a closer view and examine facts more in detail. The rate of numerical increase in the foreign missions for some years past has exceeded the growth of the home churches. The total Protestant foreign missions of Europe and America in 1830 showed a communicant membership of 79,259. In 1880 this number had advanced to 877,332—a few of the missions not reporting. These are enrolled members of the church, and do not include nominal converts from heathenism. The nominal adherents, or hearers, reported in about two-fifths of the missions are 1,813,356—from three to three and a half millions in all. The foreign missions of the Protestant Churches of the United States report an increase from 47,266 communicants in 1850 to 205,132 in 1880—more than three hundred per cent. in thirty years. And all this does not include the day-schools, colleges, theological seminaries, hospitals, papers, books, tracts, etc., that aid in the civilizing and Christianizing of heathen nations. Until 1860 Protestant missions in China were restricted to five specific ports. Since then the growth has been marvelous. The membership in 1872 was only 9,000; in 1880, 19,767, besides 4,962 pupils in day-schools. Said the Rev. Dr. Legge, in 1878, and he is high authority: "The converts have multiplied in thirty-five years two thousand-fold, the rate of increase being greater year after year. Suppose it to continue the same for another thirty-five years, and in A. D. 1913 there will be in China 26,000,000 communicants, and a professedly Christian population of 100,000,000." Less than fifty years ago the inhabitants of the Fiji Islands were cannibals and had no knowledge of the Christian religion. Now more than one hundred thousand attend the ministry of missionaries and twenty-five thousand are enrolled members. In 1820 there was not a native Christian in the Friendly Islands; now twenty thousand are adherents of the Wesleyan Churches, and about eight thousand are communicants. In 1860 there were a few persecuted Christians in Madagascar; now the Queen and her court and 253,000 of her subjects are pronounced adherents of Christianity. And thus the Lord's work is increasing in all lands. When these facts are contemplated, who would begrudge a few dollars to aid in the gospel's grand achievements? Or, rather, who can restrain the impulse to hasten the final triumph and the coronation of the Lord of all? To accomplish this our largest, richest offerings are "ridiculously cheap."

The following kindly and thoughtful reference to our Methodism is from the Baptist Record:

Our Methodist brethren, in their centennial, have made a fine showing. The lesson of their history may well be studied by other people. Their wonderful growth is attributable mainly to three things. 1st, Their intense earnestness. Chalmers called it Christianity in earnest. They have been intensive, just as all Christians ought to be. Their zeal has provoked very many outside their communion. 2d, They have been of the people, for the people. They have not patronized the starch factories much, but they have exhibited Christianity in its fatigue suit; they have honored God by preaching to the poor, and God has honored them. 3d, They have exhibited the power of unity. They wonderfully hold together, and work together. Thus have they become a great people. Let us hope that, in their prosperity, they will not lose their

Is Culture Declining?

About the most pessimistic article we have read for many a day is an elaborate and scholarly communication in the Nashville Advocate, entitled "A School-Teachers' Views Freely Spoken." His argument for better preparatory and high schools and fewer colleges, so called, is masterful and convincing. On that line there must be development or our educational progress will be downward. And we give him our hand in his eloquent advocacy of the old curriculum, stigmatized by Charles Francis Adams, Jr., as the "college feticus," as against the elective and over-scientific courses of study now becoming so popular. He says, and truly: "Experience has shown, if it has shown anything, that the studies which fit men for a public career are literary, and not scientific, just as it will as certainly show, and in a good deal less than three hundred years, that a crowded curriculum, elective study, base ball and boat racing will fit a man for nothing." But in comparing the former times with these he notes a sad declension in literary culture which we fail to perceive. In forming such a judgment we must remember the tendency of the human mind to magnify the past and minimize the present. Historic men are depicted, while living persons, however distinguished, are of like passions with ourselves. He asks: "Excepting, possibly, Sam Cox, Hoar and Lamar, is there a single member of either House capable of writing a piece of really good English on any subject whatever? Such a question, if asked with regard to the men in public life one or two generations ago, would have received a very different answer." That is a very extreme statement, and mars the force and freshness of a very readable discussion. The facts do not warrant such a sweeping condemnation. It is doubtful if the United States Congress ever contained so much general culture as within the past decade. In accurate scholarship and linguistic attainments neither Thomas Jefferson nor John Quincy Adams were hardly equal to James A. Garfield. As great constitutional lawyers, Lamar, Edmunds, Evans and Conkling are not a whit inferior to Daniel Webster and John C. Calhoun. In majestic eloquence Ben Hill was the peer of Henry Clay or Robert Y. Hayne. As masters of the intricate problems of national finance, Senators Sherman, Bayard and Beck and Representative Randall are far in advance of Alexander Hamilton and other distinguished secretaries of the treasury. The debates to-day are worthy of comparison with any other period of our national history. Indeed, there is a larger per cent. of college-bred, well-trained minds in Congress than ever before. The speeches printed in the Congressional Record evidence as broad culture and varied information as in the boasted days of our constitutional fathers. But for these excessively gloomy expressions the article would be one of unusual ability and suggestiveness.

And this leads us to point a moral. Glorifying the past at the expense of the present, unless guarded against, will become a mental and spiritual habit. What we see and hear are common and unclean in comparison with those read of in the enchanted distance of the far past. The farther we are removed from great names, the greater is their greatness. And so in spiritual matters. Remembering the impressions of other years more vividly than real facts, we conclude that we had more religion and the church was more zealous and consecrated than at present. Thus the Spirit's presence is not discerned and his work sadly discounted.

Bishop McTear on Charleston Methodism.

In a characteristic letter to the Nashville Advocate, Bishop McTear writes many things about the South Carolina Conference session. He was back on his native heath, and everything was suggestive of the experiences of other years. That was a charming story—that small boy from Barnwell accompanying the cotton wagon "to town." And a wide-awake boy he was. The following is about Methodism in Charleston:

No place on the continent is so rich in Methodist memories as Charleston, and I was in the mood to enjoy them. Here, in 1787, was printed and published the first Wesleyan hymn book in the world—a facsimile of which has lately been reproduced. Here, in 1790, Whitefield took up the first collection for his Orphan House, and always found the Carolinians generous. Here in St. Philip's he was expelled, not only from the pulpit, but from the sacrament for the irregularity of field-preaching and preaching in unconsecrated meeting-houses; and here the important ligot of a compulsory issued a sentence of suspension against the most eloquent and soul-saving ambassador of the Lord Jesus in the western hemisphere. Both the Wesleys preached in Charleston, and it was Coke's landing-place as he came from the West Indies. Late in February, 1785, Asbury and Lee and Willis entered the city to plant Methodism, much like Paul and Silas and Timothy entered Philippi. Their successors include a noble army—some of them martyrs—of whom the world was not worthy. *** What Wesleyan history has been achieved in Charleston since that day—persecutions, revivals, churches built, souls saved, laborers raised up, and from this central point the gospel according to Methodism sent out through all the Southwest! This work is not of man. "The best of all is, God is with us."

Is it well with Methodism in Charleston? In some respects, Yes; in one, No. They need some new church building in keeping with the prosperity that God has bestowed, and suitable, both for comfort and architectural designs, to the times they live in. Trinity is pretty much as it was a generation or two ago, and it is their best. Once the white membership had to carry a colored membership outnumbering them five to one. As the world goes, the effect was a social depression; but our people were faithful to their trust. Now, the blacks have drawn off; they have houses of their own, and worship apart. This wide galleries of Trinity and Bethel are empty, Spring Street is unfinished and historic Cumberland has found a humbler form and locality. The Protestant Episcopalians claimed by inheritance the two Colonial churches—St. Michael's and St. Philip's—grand old structures, whose towers cast their shadows half across the State, even to Columbia; and they have built other churches more modern. The Baptists have one quite equal to the surroundings—that on Citadel Square. The Presbyterians have two or three to which a ruling elder or pew-holder could take a visitor without feeling any need of making an apology.

Some of our people are wealthy, and live accordingly. They love their church. But the sad probability is that their children or their children's children will not hold membership in these nobly tabernacles.

Divine Retribution.

BY REV. J. P. A. ADAMS, D. D.

"O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, shew thyself."—Psalm xcvi. 1.

The supplicant does not pray that God should wreak vengeance after the manner of men—overcome by anger and devoid of compassion; but, rather, speedily to institute judgment, meting out to the wicked their just desert. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." Divine vengeance is Divine retribution.

The surface of the earth is not more uneven than the moral world. Hill and dale, virtue and vice alternate. Omnipotence only can make "the crooked straight and the rough places plain."

Since Calu's fratricide numberless crimes—crimes great and small—have cried aloud unto the Lord for vengeance. Often truth has been trampled under foot, and falsehood entrusted with the sceptre; virtue cast into a dungeon, and homage paid to vice; faithfulness exiled, and corruption made to feel at home. The actors and sufferers sank into the grave without due punishment to the wicked, without proper reward for the good.

Of limited knowledge and fallible judgment, we can not always correctly estimate the merits of our fellow-men. Often we deem and declare wrong an action which perchance militates against our prejudices and interests, and vice versa. Yet our interests may not be founded in truth, and our prejudices are, perhaps, only the outcome of animal instincts. Opposition to us and to our plans may be right. Many complain of wrongs because they forget that others, too, have rights. But viewed in the light of truth—truth in the abstract—there is much of great and greatest wickedness. From murder to fraud, from perjury to an untruth, from slander to remarks that engender a feeling of suspicion in regard to our associates—how ugly and long is the sad catalogue of sin and iniquity!

Some sins find their just punishment in themselves: The intemperance and voluptuous, in sickness; the liar, in that he can not believe others; the miser, in that he grows poor in proportion to the increase of his riches. Yet many, very many wrongs, great and small, find no punishment here either in part or whole. Those sins which are expiated on the gallows, in the penitentiary, in a dungeon, constitute but an insignificant fraction of the long list of human misdeeds.

It is so decidedly human when we think and speak of wrongs and wrong-doers parsimoniously to exclude ourselves from the number, whereas we, too, are not without guilt. The Psalmist laments: "If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand?" Yes, who shall stand? Says a quaint old preacher: "If all misdeeds of men were written on their brow, everybody would endeavor to bang his hair." That certainly is true of Mr. N., says the reader; but it is equally true of the reader as the writer.

God only can, and he certainly will give every man according to his works. No mistake made in the Divine record of human actions! Sometimes judgment is rendered and punishment is inflicted here below. Often we have witnessed sore visitations which were manifestly the punishment of sins. But here caution is necessary. It would, indeed, be silly to see between sin and affliction the same relation as that between cause and effect. Many afflictions are correctives, and not punishments. Nevertheless, the sufferings of very many are the punishment of their sins. God, to whom vengeance belongeth, shewed himself.

We durst not arrogate to ourselves the Divine prerogative of judgment. Avenge ourselves, we expose ourselves to the vengeance of God, for we sin in punishing sin. We do wrong in avenging wrong. We must commit our affairs, even our grievances, to God. He will hold all men to a strict account. None will escape him. If not sooner, in death all must meet him. When he exhorts us, being smitten on one cheek, to offer the other also, he does by no means indicate that he will not in due time avenge with multiplied interest the first stroke as well as the second. Not hats should we those who have wronged us, but rather pity them. They will not escape their punishment. Though their wickedness may not be known among men, their villainy not to be exposed here below, in due time judgment will be rendered and punishment be inflicted. On the great day of revelations the sword of Divine vengeance will be unsheathed to execute judgment against all evil-doers.

And we, dear reader, you and I—we will not avenge ourselves, and for our own wrongs seek forgiveness in the blood of the Lamb of God.

What the Editors Say.

A FEELING OF POLLY.

Under this title the Pittsburg Christian Advocate discourses the skating rink craze. We judge from this extract that the excitement farther north is as intense as down in this latitude. Pastors must give the people faithful warning:

It is scarcely possible to convey to those outside of its influence an idea of the extent and power of the roller-skating furor, which is sweeping over this country, carrying everything before it. It regards neither age nor sex, but manifests the most violence in its attacks on the young. We are not aware that it has as yet penetrated very far into the rural districts. Country people are a little cooler-headed, and are, therefore, less liable to be carried away with every foolish fashion that may come on the wings of the wind. But the villages, towns and cities are being literally carried off their feet, if not entirely away from their heads.

UNTIMELY SUPERANNUATION.

The Holston Methodist gives this prescription against early superannuation:

The church is not to be saved by mere culture; but our preachers ought to be intelligent men. With our present facilities for the acquisition of knowledge, ignorance in a preacher is a stigma on his character. The preacher who does not study will become unacceptable even to the masses as soon as he loses the vivacity of youth.

PULPIT AND PASTORAL SUCCESS.

The Arkansas Methodist gives the following practical hints to preachers on how to succeed:

Aim at something. Let your sermons be prepared at home, and do not rise in the pulpit and turn page after page in your Bible, as if you were hunting for a lost text or gathering your scattered thoughts. No firing blank cartridges or delivering crude undigested thoughts in a careless, awkward manner. Let serious solemnity mark your every movement in the pulpit, and impress everybody present that your great aim is to do good. Preach to the heart through and by intelligence. Do not imagine that preaching to the heart means to talk at random, and exhort without either sense or feeling. Avoid ranting, stir the emotions, move the passions, arouse the feelings, and then take time to call penitents and pray for sinners. Open the doors of the church every three or four weeks, and let the people feel that you expect to accomplish something. Try these hints, and, if you fail, let us know.

CHRIST ON TRIAL.

The importance and power of a clear personal testimony is forcibly set forth in the following from the Texas Advocate. Jesus is on trial and we are his witnesses:

Reader, Jesus of Nazareth is still on trial. The world is the jury, and wants to know the truth. Is he indeed a Savior clothed with almighty power? If so, the world wants to know it, for its deep yearning is for just such a Savior. Jesus calls his disciples to the stand and asks them to tell what they know. How shall we meet the challenge? By reciting the traditions that have come down from the fathers? That is only hearsay testimony, and the Jury there are nauseated with it. Shall we begin to reason along the lines of what are called the "evils of Christianity"? The jury does not want our reasoning; they are able to out-reason us. The demand is: What do we know? "Tell us," they cry, "has Jesus power to lift the burden of the guilty conscience; do you know as a fact that he has saved you?" O could everyone who confesses Christ return an unequivocal affirmation, sustained by a life corresponding to the experience, the world would soon be won to Christ.

RELIGION IN CITIES.

One of the serious questions in the administration of our city churches is thus stated, and not over-stated, in the Western Christian Advocate: "One of the problems of this age is to keep evangelical religion alive and aggressive in the centers of our large cities. The tendency of the Christian population is to move away from the centers of large towns toward the suburbs, and the result is a steady diminution of numbers and wealth in the downtown churches. This makes it difficult to pay the necessary expenses, and in Cincinnati and other cities there is a decided tendency toward the reduction of the number of churches in the hearts of the towns. The population in these cities are constantly increasing, however, and in the centers of them, where churches are diminishing, saloons and low theaters multiply, and sin abounds. What is to be done? The question is one of immense importance and magnitude, and must be answered soon, or our Christian civilization will be honey-combed with great ulcers in the hearts of our cities, and practical heathenism will spring up where there ought to be citadels of Christian power."

THE CENTENNIAL VOLUME.

The Central Christian Advocate calls attention to an important matter as follows: "The publishers of the Centennial volume are exceedingly anxious to have a large list of subscribers before the volume is ready for delivery. They would like the pastors to bring the matter before their congregations and receive orders, which should be forwarded immediately to Cranston & Stowe. The publication will be an octavo volume, of five or six hundred pages, probably containing the proceedings of one of the most notable gatherings of Methodism, including all the papers prepared for the occasion."

HINDERING THE PREACHERS.

Alas! how many hindrances are in the way of every faithful pastor! And the hardest to overcome are those in the house of his friends. To such hinderers the Richmond Christian Advocate thus earnestly and eloquently appeals: "Oh, brother beloved, be not the tool of the devil. Shut no open door in the face of an ambassador of Christ. Defend no ear against the voice of a herald of mercy. If he has intimacies of speech or manner or besetments from environments, make your kind words a mantle of charity to cover his misfortunes and a saprophyte to protect from the fiery darts of the common enemy. Bear one another's burdens. Support the weak. Abhor inter-people strife. Scorn trenchant speech. Withhold not favoring words in behalf of fellow-laborers. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem."

GOSPEL LUNCHEONS.

The Watchman, Boston, tells the following story of Father Swan and his cheap appreciation of short sermons when he had to preach: "The complaint sometimes made concerning sermons that, however rich and profitable the theme, they are not of the regulation length, reminds us of a characteristically saying of the late Elder Jabez Swan. Being engaged for a Sunday at a church which was without a pastor, the chairman of the pulpit committee, knowing Father Swan's proclivities, suggested that, as there was to be an important business meeting at the close of the morning service, it was desirable that the sermon should not be over long. After announcing his text the Elder said: 'Bro. S. has asked me to be brief this morning; I'll do my best, though I am not especially gifted in that line. The fact is, brethren, I have for so many years been accustomed to a good square gospel meal that I can't get used to these modern gospel lunches—ten minutes for refreshments!'"

The London Methodist Times, of January 8, contains a long interview with Bishop William Taylor on the state of religion in America and in missionary lands. Some of his utterances were eminently wise and others quite otherwise. But this in reply to the question: "What do you think is the general prospect of religion?" is well and truly said:

Brighter than ever. There is a quickened spiritual activity throughout the world. I am struck by the fact that nearly all the great work in all churches is on Methodist lines. Everybody is now borrowing our sharpest weapons. Everywhere success follows the plain, bold, reiterated assertion of universal redemption, and an urgent appeal to all men to declare themselves promptly and unambiguously on the side of Christ. Some of the evangelist teaching is very Antinomian. The old Methodist doctrine of the absolute necessity of genuine repentance is the great antidote to that."

Rev. Dr. J. W. Lewis, of St. Louis, is in the city on a short visit. He called at the office on Monday morning, but our attendance upon the preachers' meeting at that hour prevented a sight of his sunny face.

Rev. Alex. G. Brown, the accomplished editor of the Virginia Conference minutes, will please accept thanks for a copy of that stately and valuable annual. It is a portly pamphlet of 98 pages, and altogether about the best of the kind we have seen.

The city churches in Richmond, Va., are actively following up the Moody meetings. There seems to be a general spirit of awakening and saving power in all the city. Our Methodist pastors are in the front leading their flocks into good pastures.

The following are the appointments of Rev. Sam Jones. His services are everywhere in demand. Writing from Brooklyn to Bro. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference, he says: "I will not get away from here for two or three weeks yet. I go from here to Charleston, S. C., thence to Jacksonville, Fla., thence to Chattanooga, Tenn., thence to Huntsville, Ala., thence to Mississippi."

Gov. St. John, candidate for President on the prohibition ticket, has been completely and triumphantly vindicated of the charge that he proposed to sell out for $25,000 during the recent campaign. The foul falsehood seems to have been the base fabrication of one J. F. Legate. In the interest of truth and common honesty we rejoice at this exposure, and the falsifier needs to feel the strong arm of the law. If defamers of character could occasionally be made to look out on the world through the iron bars of a prison, some evil tongues would be bridled that now seem to be loose at both ends.

Old Carondelet.

Mr. Edmon: I am glad to report increasing and delighted congregations at Carondelet Street Church. The year opens auspiciously. Dr. C. W. Carter, our great pulpit orator, is showing himself to be a master. Methodists from abroad are cordially invited to worship with us when in the city.

CARONDELET STEWARD.

Minutes of the Louisiana Conference.

The manuscript goes to the printer to-day, and will be, I trust, rapidly set up. I need from the preachers for this large edition the postage, which will be about three cents a copy. Let every preacher send me one cent for every member reported, and this will save me from personal expense. Also send me post-offices where the appointment, as read out, does not indicate it.

CHAS. F. EVANS,
Sec. La. Conf.

We Urge You to Read.

The Conferences have all been held except Baltimore. Collections for Foreign Missions have not met our expectations—have not met our absolute necessities. Centenary offerings for this cause have been very small.

We therefore urge faithful presiding elders and pastors to take their collections for Foreign Missions at once and in full. Your Treasurer has no other means of meeting the daily expenses of missionaries in our foreign fields.

This appeal is urgent. Please read it to your congregations, and follow it with sermon, exhortation, and collection. Our treasury is empty. It must depend on you.
R. A. YOUNG,
D. C. KELLEY.

Conference Commendation.

The Mississippi Conference at its recent session adopted the report on publishing interests prepared by the able pen of Dr. Abbey. The following endorsement of the business and editorial conduct of this ADVOCATE we extract from the report, that brethren may remember what they have done and push the circulation in the beginning of the year. If the paper is now half so good as the report declares it ought to be into all our Methodist homes. Brethren, speak to the people about their ADVOCATE and send forward subscriptions:

The publishers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE represent that the number of subscribers to that paper in the bounds of this Conference is increasing. In addition to the current expenses of the paper, the publishers in the last year have expended two thousand dollars in improving and enlarging the machinery of the printing office.

The publishers are tired of furnishing the paper on credit; and therefore conclude that hereafter the cash system must be the rule. We agree with them that this will be found best and most convenient for both publishers and patrons when we once get used to it. This is the home paper of this Conference, edited by one of our body, and considering the character of the paper itself and its mechanical and editorial management, it is our belief that a fair and reasonable attention to this interest by our preachers and people would greatly enlarge its patronage. This paper is an eight page quarto, well printed on good paper and edited with ability and to our entire satisfaction. It is a first-class family newspaper, such as we would like to see in every family.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Alden & Co., Fifth & Vine sts., Cincinnati, O., and 140 Nassau St., New York, making them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. There can be no doubt that the universal use of the New La. Brand or Life Tonic would result in a great reduction of the mortality of that scourge of civilization—pulmonary consumption. What will they cure consumption? Yes, or Not

A GOOD REPUTATION.—That enterprising piano merchant, P. Weipert, may be justly proud of the leading musical instrument for which he is agent, and especially so of the Malbuch piano. The appreciation of the public for this particular instrument is limited to no other and increases his business most materially. It is the reputation of the Malbuch Piano Manufacturing Company to furnish all their pianos in a most complete and perfect manner, using the best materials obtainable and their efforts to keep the piano ahead of all others in every respect, is a commendable effort which the public has evidently appreciated by their extensive patronage. Judges of musical instruments may visit the Malbuch piano store and be convinced of the truth of the above statement. The piano is now on hand at 112 Camp Street, New Orleans, and is kept in line at a quarter less expense than any other make.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, changes cannot be made.

"WOULD YE BRING THEM BACK AGAIN?"

Go to the land of life and light.
Those whom we loved—this fatal year!
Risen to mansions fair and bright,
Dwelling in God's eternal light.
Those whom we held so dear—so dear!
What have they left us? Memories deep.
Memories holy and tender and true.
Yet, were death an endless sleep,
There would not slumber, there would keep Safe from decay the forms we knew.
Deathless in God's divine sphere,
Hapt and serene our loved ones dwell,
Complete in the bliss they prayed for here;
Perfect in love, in vision clear,
Who of their sacred joy can tell?
Wisdom and truth and peace are theirs,
Knowledge that deepens each passing hour;
Fruition to faith, and answers to prayers,
No conflict of soul, no weary care,
To that high life of immortal power.
Shall we demand their return again—
Dear as they were—to the strife once more?
Call them back to the grief and pain,
Back to the toil, the fret, the stain,
Back to the world from that beautiful shore!
No! With the blessed let them be,
Safe and saved in the Savior's smile,
Breeding to him the adoring knee,
Rapt in us from the crystal sea,
"Here with us in a little while!"
—Churchman.

Infantile Religion—2.

Rev. R. Abbey, D. D.—
DEAR BROTHER: I think I can say that I do thank God from my heart that the attention of the church of late years has so often been called to a consideration of the religious capabilities and interests of our children as evinced by our Sabbath-schools, Bible classes and the general circulation of Sabbath-school literature. But after all there is an opening that needs closer watching. By this I mean the first few months and years of childhood. I believe that sin and Satan often gain an entrance into our households—right here from which it is very difficult and often impossible to expel them in after life. There are some very crude and false and dangerous notions about the early religious experience of children that ought to be exposed and forever exploded. One is, that children are expected, as a matter of course, to run in the paths of sin and folly a few years at least; it is a necessity which can not be prevented. I do not believe in any such necessity. If they are born in a state of acceptance with God and are fit subjects for the kingdom of Christ, I do not see why they may not be preserved in that state and relation ever afterwards. This must be the will and purpose of God. By sinning a few months they start in a downward course that may end in final perdition. They are born Christians; try to keep them such through their childhood and then they will be apt to continue such to the close of life. Another wholly unfounded and often injurious opinion is, that very little can be done with children religiously until they come to the line of accountability when they will be capable of receiving religious instruction and being governed by moral suasion. This imaginary line is fixed anywhere between three or four and twelve or fifteen years, and while parents are waiting for their children to get to it the devil has often got them committed to a life of sin and death. There is no such line. Nobody has ever seen or crossed it. I never have, I am certain. The true state of the case is that the lately-born little Christian learns to know and love his mother and depend on her for the supply of all its wants. As it grows and the mind begins to develop and take in objects the Christian mother begins to teach it the first lessons of love and obedience to God so that when it is three or four years old—though it is still a child and has many childish ways—it is a pretty fair Christian, and if the teaching and example of its parents and other religious instructions are such as to keep it in the love of God and comfort of the Holy Ghost, it will become a mature Christian and in all probability continue so to the close of life. One of the greatest difficulties I find in the way of the early instruction and training of children is, what seems to me, an unwillingness in parents and guardians to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with their responsibilities and duties in regard to the Christian instruction and Bible training of their children. They prefer to read almost anything else in preference to a well-written book on family government, including the religious instruction and training of children. And right here, without the least disposition to flatter an esteemed brother, I may be permitted to say your book on Christian education is by far the best book I have ever read on the subject it treats of. I read it carefully as soon as it came from the press and wish I could scatter it by multiplied thousands all over Christendom until Christians should be everywhere well shaken up on the subject of Christian education. It would save the preachers a vast deal of hard and often useless thumping on old sinners to get the sweet little Christian children started off right in the ways of the Lord. Just here I will stop for the present and await your criticisms or some other impulse to start me again. As you say the best we can do in "age and feebleness extreme" is to employ our pen. Just so. Your preacher goes into the pulpit on Sunday and preaches to a small audience. The day is too unfavorable for you to be out, so you sit down at your desk and write a telling article well sustained by the Scriptures for one of our church papers that will be read by eight or ten thousand people. Now, who stands the best chance to be useful that day: the man in the pulpit or the superannuate at his desk? I hope you will still be "a ready writer." I have read you up to date and am waiting for further instruction.

A Christian.

BY REV. W. H. ANDERSON.

How frequently and in how large a variety of sense are these words used, and how few take time to seek for the depth of meaning the rich treasury of thought the infinity of blessings contained in them. A Christian nation is the general definition of the opposite of idolatry or paganism. It is the expressive definition between a Jewish or Mohammedan people—individual or creed. The origin of this title and the design of its testimonial is matter of divine record and inferential conclusion. "The disciples were first called Christians at Antioch." (Acts xii. 26.) And from this fact this city has been honored with the expressive name of "The Jerusalem of Christianity." It was a locality worthy to be the place where Christ's disciples received their true and honored appellation—"Christians." It was celebrated for its refinement in arts, literature and philosophy. Cicero says: "It was distinguished for its learned men and the cultivation of fine arts."

We can not linger here, however pleasant, to notice this rich and large and influential city where the great Chrysostom was born and the greater, Paul, preached. "The evident baptismal name of 'Christian' is associated with sheer and counterfeit and the purpose of associating the infancy of 'the crucified Nazarene' with the name and position of all his followers. 'A Christian' to all his was the sublimation of hate and disgrace. A follower of 'the crucified Nazarene' could acquire no deeper mark of contempt. How beautifully has this term been relieved of its brand of infamy and become the noblest name immortal man may wear. The cross is no longer the badge of deepest disgrace, of profoundest sorrow, but is the emblem of all that is pure, beautiful, good and life giving. To be a true follower of the Christ of the cross is "the noblest style of man," a child of God, an heir of heaven." In olden times "I am a Roman" challenged the protection of law and invoked universal respect. "I am a Christian" does more, infinitely more. It secures the love of God and the wonder of angels and the respect of hell itself. It uttered in truth it is the passport to the mercy-seat, the introduction to every blessing in heaven's treasury and will be the means of securing a heavenly escort over the Jordan, and affords the password at heaven's gate. It gives to heaven its chief joy and to eternity its endless, ever-increasing bliss.

A Christian is "a sinner saved by grace." He becomes such by direct, personal, immediate faith in the Lord Jesus Christ with the conscious evidence of appropriation such as Thomas had when he cried, "My Lord and my God." He is Christ's friend, brother, servant, losing his own will in that of his Lord. Life has new sources of ambition, love, labor and pleasure. A Christian is "a new creature." He is born of the spirit, inducted into the family of God and is invested with all the rights and privileges that belong to each member of the divine "household of faith." He is Christ's property; so that "whether he lives or dies he is the Lord's."

A Christian is Christlike in temper, purpose, effort, character and life. Christ is his life, his model, his trust, his joy. Imitation of the Master in the employment of every faculty and using every opportunity, for good, trust in God's providence and grace, a prayerful resigned life, a tireless activity for human benefit, are prominent features of a Christian.

A Christian ennobles life in association with the spirit and purpose of living as seen in Christ. He gladdens every dark hour of sorrow, sweetens every bitter cup, soothes the most poignant grief and lights up the grave itself with the truth, grace and presence of Christ. A Christian is the means of illustrating, as well as of demonstrating, the grace of God in Christ to save from sin and secure purity of heart and boldness of life. A Christian is the means of showing the glory of God in the plan of redemption here, in the resurrection and in an eternal heaven. A Christian is the means of leading sinners to Christ, spreading the gospel round the world. A Christian is the element of the triumph of Jesus, our risen, glorified Lord. Christians are to save the world instrumentally for Christ, and then to colonize heaven not only to fill the thrones of the fallen sons of light, but to show to archangel and cherubim a grander revelation of the combined attributes of God in blessing immortal minds than ever yet gladdened heaven or constituted a gala day among the immortals.

"A Christian. Let us rise to the full conception of the term then sink in all the depths of humble trust at the cross that we may truly gain and walk worthy of this noblest of all names in heaven or on earth."

CARLETON, Kentucky.

Letter from Washington.

In the quaint, yet beautiful, Unitarian Church of Our Father, the Woman's Suffrage Convention held its annual meeting last week. On the night that I attended the large auditorium was well filled with ladies and gentlemen. The president's chair was occupied by Mrs. Stanton, of New York, a lovely old lady with a fine face, softened by waves of snowy hair. My imagination carried her off bodily from that platform and placed her in a big armchair by a glowing fire, and soon I could see the curly heads of grand children nestled to her heart and see the plump hands pat the dear old face. I suppose Mrs. Stanton would have objected seriously to being thus disposed of; but really I felt an unpleasant jar on coming back to reality as if seeing a sacred vessel desecrated.

A number of ladies occupied the platform with the president, among them Susan B. Anthony, who has so long been an active worker in this good (?) cause. The first speaker was Miss Hinman, of Pittsburg, Pa. She is a small woman, with dark hair and bright eyes. Her voice was not very strong, and in a few moments a gentleman in the gallery demanded, "Louder!" (A woman will be a woman, no matter how hard she tries to be a —.) The speaker's under lip went up, the dark eyes flashed, and as ever determined on "victory or death," she said, in a tone intended to annihilate the offender, "Can't you hear?" and then, dropping her voice, calmly proceeded at the pitch previously adopted.

This speaker was followed by Rev. Olympia Brown, a Universal preacher of twenty years standing, from Racine, Wis. Mrs. Brown's lungs are well developed; but, unfortunately, she has a way of using her nose in speaking, quite to the exclusion of some more euphonious vocal organs. Like an orthodox preacher she took a text, "All men are created equal." The lady handled her theme well, it must be admitted. She has a mind masculine in its depth and grasp; but, unfortunately, it is accompanied by a masculine appearance and manner. Her chief and best argument for woman suffrage was the fact that the unimportance of woman as a political factor causes her degradation as a laborer. Working women, as a rule, receive but half the pay of men in similar employments and of like capacity. This is hard; but, oh! I fear me, for worse will be the evils that will come trooping from this Pandora's box of woman suffrage and not even hope be left behind. These women demand an expurgated edition of the Bible, claiming that it is due "woman's degradation."

Mrs. Stanton denies her daughters the privilege of reading the "outrageous statements" of St. Paul. Poor St. Paul! what a blow this must be if he "knew the truth, now up in heaven." Alas! alas! that God's "last and best work" should thus call in question this grand inspired apostle. The glorious old Bible, in whose precious truths our pure, true mothers plowed their tilling heads, these women dare attack! The press and the pulpit, I am glad to see, have at once condemned this false step of those who pretend to be representatives of the womanhood of this great nation. If it is such to be our character as "free" women, God grant we may forever remain in bondage.

But pleasanter topics than woman suffrage now engage the thoughts of hundreds in Washington. Moody, the evangelist, has been with us, and his presence and preaching have fallen as a benediction on our fair city. In company with some friends I attended the service held on the afternoon of January 17 at the Congregational Church. The meeting was appointed for three P. M., and by a quarter past two this immense building was filled to its utmost capacity. Many, unable to find seats, stood during the entire service. Mr. Moody was surrounded by a number of divines from the city churches, prominent among whom was Dr. W. A. Bartlett, Moody's first and, I think, his only pastor.

The evangelist is a short, heavy built man, with a large head and a genial, pleasant countenance. His hair and whiskers are fast turning gray, and, oh! how his career honors the crown that Father Time is placing on his brow. One would scarcely single out Mr. Moody from a crowd as a distinguished man; yet he has, by the magic of simple eloquence and intense earnestness, stirred the very depths of men's souls, and to-day, thousands treading life's bare path, thank God for the evangel he sent, whose hand pointed them the way to heaven, and whose voice bade them a hearty God-speed. Mr. Moody's theme was the power of God to use the most insignificant means for the accomplishment of his great purposes. He speaks rapidly and with intense earnestness, making the hearer feel that every word he utters proceeds from the convictions of his own heart. His numerous illustrations were nearly all taken from the Bible. Things we had heard a thousand times seemed to stand out in a new light and with an added glory. It was a sermon to bind to one's heart for all times. Not one ascent among the planets and fixed stars, not one descent into the hidden parts of the earth did the preacher make, not oneology nor ism did he mention; yet every eye dwelt on his face, and every ear on his lips. Here and there, all over the congregation, I saw a handkerchief softly pressed to an eye to wipe away a falling tear.

On Sunday, Moody held six services, preaching as many sermons. What will some of our hard-worked (?) preachers think of that? Since the visit of this good man a religious feeling seems to have pervaded the city and successful revival meetings have been held in many churches. Since then I heard a prominent Presbyterian minister in one of our largest, most fashionable churches, preach a sermon, advocating "religious exorcisms."

Sadly have I read in the Advocate from week to week notices of the death of friends known intimately for years. Such tidings fall heavily on the heart: when lights like these go out suddenly as a candle in a gust of wind, one can but feel that from us who loved them departs much of the brightness and beauty of life. But

"Who hath not learned in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is never Lord of death,
And love can never lose its own?"

Greater Works.

BY REV. DR. DREMS.

Our great Master said (John xiv, 12), "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father." In advance, we should expect a religion of divine origin to be adapted to the development of our nature. Now we know that the power to believe in truth and to act upon it, confident of its validity, whatever may be the appearances to the contrary, is the highest capability of our intellectual and moral constitution. True greatness resides in the development of our highest capability; and, if that be to climb up on another, it is no degradation so to climb. The best of the "morning-glory" can do so to grow up on trellises: it is no shame for this plant thus to grow. The oak can grow without trellis, but the oak must have soil; it is no shame that it grows rooted in the soil. Men look at the outside, God at the inside. Actions arouse the enthusiastic applause of men, but it is the spirit, which performs the action, that is admired by God. It is faith in the divine administration of the universe which leads to all great discoveries and achievements, faith being the prompter, sustainer, soul of action, and being as much superior to action as spirit is to body. This could be illustrated in ten thousand cases. Take that of Columbus. How we magnify his discovery of America. But that was almost nothing. America lay in his path. He could not help the discovery if the planet were a globe and he sailed westward. The real greatness was in himself, in his faith in certain truths, faith that led him to beseege courts, endure privations, face ridicule and scorn. There was the greatness. Columbus' faith was a thing greater than all visible continents.

True religion always develops faith and lets that form the practice. A morality constructed on rules is powerless. A man that does right because he believes he ought to do right may be trusted; but a man who does not steal because it is a fracture of a rule is perpetually liable to become a thief. The story of Paradise, as given in the Bible, shows that the state of our first parents was a condition for the development of their faith. What was the forbidding of one fruit, and only one, but a test of man's faith in his heavenly Father's wisdom and goodness? Then came the deluge. Study that interval between the command to Noah to build the ark and the downpouring of the flood. Was it not a hundred and twenty years of the discipline of faith? Take the history of Exodus, that prolonged journey from Egypt to the promised land. Can you understand this without regarding it as a trial of faith, a development of faith, in the Israelites? Was not the whole space of time from the settlement of Israel in Palestine to the death of our Lord a discipline of faith? And has not the same thing been going on ever since?

Enough is revealed to us now to be the basis of faith, but no such revelation need ever be expected as shall supplant faith by knowledge, such a thing would be a disaster. Jesus Christ came to present a permanent object of faith and a perpetual source of spiritual power. He was "God, manifest in the flesh," and he says, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." That his teachings should have a controlling influence over men it was necessary that they should believe in his divinity. Both by works and words he partially created this conviction; and, what is so almost constantly overlooked, here is no greater proof of the divinity of our Lord than is shown by the very transfer of the same kind of moral power to all who really lead lives of faith in him. "The works that I do shall ye do." What works did Jesus do, to which he had reference? Certainly he did not include the work of atoning sacrifice, which could be made by none who was not at once God and man. Of what was the Master talking? Of his oneness with the eternal Father, of his divinity, his essential deity. Now, whatever in any age is needed to set this forth to the world sufficiently to convince unprejudiced, willing and intelligent minds, shall from age to age be granted to those who believe in Jesus. No amount or quality of evidence can convince the unwilling. Jesus wrought miracles. So did his disciples. In the Acts of the Apostles we learn that the shadow of Peter healed the diseases, that devils were cast out by aprons taken from St. Paul, and that Elymus was struck blind.

But miracles are instructive to the human intellect only in its child hood. They are the products of any intellect that knows how to employ the laws not generally known. All who believe in Jesus shall at any time be able to perform miracles, when miracles are necessary. But they are never needed by a religion which has once grown large and strong enough to stand alone, and certainly the Christian religion does not need miracles. Miracles are on the plane of the material and perishable. Miracles are temporary and must be few.

The building up of a high, strong-holy character out of one that is depraved and low, is a greater work than raising Lazarus.

The elimination and preparation of a truth is greater than is a miracle which only changes water to wine or multiplies loaves.

Men who lead holy lives do, by so living, carry greater conviction to the hearts of the world than if they wrought miracles, in the vulgar sense of that word. Under the preaching of probably each one of the Apostles more people were converted than under the ministry of Christ, and more under the influence of humble Christians in our day than under any of the Apostles. "Such honor have all his saints." Have you?

President D. M. Rush.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, in session on the fifth instant:

We, the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, called together in special session, express our profound sorrow at the death of its able and accomplished president, Rev. D. M. Rush, which sad event occurred on January 10, 1885. During the years of his presidency he has illustrated the highest qualities of a Christian educator and has wisely guided the college to a growing and gratifying success. He was a scholar of accurate and large attainments, an instructor of admirable tact and real enthusiasm and an administrator of commanding dignity and marked executive ability. In the pulpit he was an instructive, evangelical preacher, and among the people a loving, watchful, sympathizing pastor. As a Christian he was conscientious, unswerving and cheerful—a worthy model for the emulation of young men; therefore,

Resolved, That, as a Board of Trustees, we recognize the great loss Centenary College has sustained in the untimely death of its president, Rev. D. M. Rush, A. M., and that we will cherish the memory of his rare virtues as among the richest heritages of the institution.

Resolved, That we extend our sincerest condolence to his family in this sad dispensation of Providence, and pray the Divine blessing upon them in their bereavement.

C. G. ANDREWS,
C. B. GALLOWAY, Committee.

Rev. E. H. Moon, writing from Holly Springs, Miss., thus regrets his church:

There are signs of spiritual improvement in the church at Holly Springs. We had a large congregation Sunday and Sunday night. At the close of the morning service (Rev. A. M. West joined our church). The general and his family are in deep distress caused by the sudden death of his youngest son, Mr. Stanley West was a young man of great promise. He graduated with honor at our State University last year, and then entered upon a practice of law in Oxford. His friends predicted for him a brilliant future, but on Friday evening, January 23, he accidentally shot and killed himself.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

J. M. PUGH.

O glad and glorious day
 Ringing wide world through O shout of joyful nations
 In victory and peace!
 Hosanna! while the echoes
 Repeat the praise song,
 To hymns of heaven's own choir,
 And say, "What hath God wrought!"
 The tree is now planted,
 And watered with tears,
 Hath spread its branches
 Through the glorious years.
 Today we lift our voices,
 With prayer and praise fraught,
 And ask, in joyful wonder,
 "What hath God wrought!"
 O blessing of the ages!
 O child of God!
 Thy feet are on the mountains,
 Thy glory spread abroad,
 Thou'rt bringing in the nations,
 The idols have been caught;
 They lift their hearts in gladness,
 Singing, "What hath God wrought!"
 Grace, grace to be to us!
 And glorify our name,
 With praise to him, our Father,
 Where grace and praise bloom;
 This stone cut from the mountain,
 By heavenly power brought,
 This is the mighty wonder,
 This is what God hath wrought.
 But not till time has ended,
 And each hour has come
 When the new earth, unguessed,
 Glows in her lush bloom—
 Not till the new-born heavens
 Shall fill our perfect thought Shall angels grasp the wonder
 And say, "What hath God wrought!"
 SHREVEPORT, LOUISIANA.

I Started on Friday.

Just two days after our Conference adjourned it began to rain, and for three days and nights it rained as if the clouds were sovereign and had forgotten the covenant and the rainbow. But all showers have an end, and the steady snow must have to form its heavenly carpet. So, the rain being over, the bridges all more or less damaged, the railroad broken in many places, the snow came to hide the noisy work of the preceding rains. Only about two or three inches seem to have been reckoned sufficient for this purpose; but then came a sheet—"Simon pure," genuine sheet—and the best "Arctics" were necessary to keep the pedestrian on his feet. Thus it remained till the twenty-fourth, when the revival of fallen vigor poured his cordial beams upon this frozen sphere and caused the freeze to give way to slush and mud. Just at this juncture—Friday, the twenty-fourth—we set out in hack, at seven A. M., from Minden for Minden Junction—six miles through the snow. It was Friday—that unlucky day—the day which in the next Roman arrangement should be left out of the seven. Who just out of bed—a three months' slow, lingering, but not severe spell; baby just recovering from a severe attack of cholera morbus. But the "Hannan Blank" was due at Minden that night, and, if that boat was missed, it would, perhaps, have been ten days before another could have been had for Bastrop—our destination.

Besides, I was not superstitious, and, though a brother suggested that it was a "bad day" to begin a journey, I just went on as in any other day of the seven. But that Friday began to show itself before we left Minden Junction. I had sent all my baggage down the evening before, so as to have it at Minden when I got there. "No freight trains down to-day." Ship it on the mail train then. "Can't do it. No freight on the passenger train." Well, express it then on the passenger train. Only about twenty-five per cent. more cost. Thus I got my freight on a passenger train which would not carry freight, and off we went, fifteen minutes behind a special train, for Minden. Soon, however, more Friday work was seen. There was that "special train" just ahead of us off the track. Pretty soon we were under way, but pretty soon our engine refused to steam and we were again "laid up." After quite a long time we got steam up and went off at an encouraging rate, being three hours behind time. Being very anxious, and—naturally being watchful, I sighted Minden about a mile away as we came round a bend. Our car coming to a standstill, swinging myself around by the staves, there was that irrepressible "special" just ahead of us, and just beyond that a locomotive and tender off the track. It was Friday, of course, for it was two same day we started on our trip. After some two hours' detention here matters were put to rights, and we steamed over into Minden nearly five hours behind time in a run of less than eighty miles.

Our boat not having come in, the first thing, of course, was to get the wife and children comfortable at some hotel. At Hotel No. 1: "No, sir; all our rooms having stoves or fire-places are engaged." Hotel No. 2: "Yes, sir." Hack and team to move over, $2.50. Telegraphing to Bastrop that we were coming up on the "Blanks," the next thing was to hunt up the agent and be enlightened as to when she would be in port. No agent could be found at that late hour of the night. My toothpick needed repairs, and, as a pocket knife was a good tool to do the work with, I reached down to my pocket for it; but it was not there. On I went, trying to arrange to get my family to the boat when she landed. This was easy enough to do. The only conditions were (1) that I go and wake up the livery-man when the boat landed, and (2) pay the moderate sum of $2.50 for the conveyance.

Tired and cold, I hurried back to the hotel, where I found my family all quietly sleeping off the worry of the day. Breathing my gratitude to him who is above all, I thought it good to "beware of dogs" and these creatures who are "without"—thieves—and so concluded to put my pocketbook under my pillow for safe keeping. Imagine my feelings when I did not find it! Like my knife, it was gone! Not much in it—about sixty or seventy-five dollars—but all I had, and with my family among strangers! No, it is not yet midnight; it is still Friday. Never mind, I will not disturb anyone else to-night. In the morning I will inform my "helpmeet," and we will counsel out of the difficulty.

Saturday, 3:30 A. M., the "Blanks" blew long and loud. Off to the boat to get her to wait for my family. Clerk promises "one-half or three-quarters of an hour." Back to wake up the livery-man; carriage ordered; went in advance to wake up and help my family off; on board just in time! Up Onatchita, up Bayou Bartholomew; lining in the tree tops; caught in the hands of the small stream; boat too large; delayed often. But at seven P. M. we are nearing Point Pleasant—the Bastrop landing. Began to peck up for going ashore. Traveling rug gone. But this was Saturday—not Friday at all. Good brethren are on land to greet us; good conveyance to bear us to the parsonage; good people there to greet us; good provisions to live in; good and plentiful provisions for all our present wants, and, above all, a good brotherly greeting by those almost in tears for the departure of my popular predecessor.

Now, Mr. Editor, if I were going to move again, I would start just as well on Friday as on any other day. If "Friday is an unlucky day," a "bad beginning makes a good ending." If the two sayings be facts, the one just offsets the other, so that there is no difference.

I fear it will be late in the spring before we get into the new church. Bro. Sawyer started a good work here, and he must come over at the dedication and complete it. Yours truly,

J. M. P.

Boys and the Church.

Mr. Editor: In your address before the Centenary Conference there is much to encourage the zeal as well as to strengthen the responsibilities of Sunday-school workers. This is a day freighted with evil to the young people, and this fact is not more surely known to anyone than a conscientious teacher in the Sunday-school. The war against the powers of darkness especially demands the valiance of Christian men and women in this part of church work.

All boys in the Sunday-school, even of Christian parents, do not show good first principles, and there is the rub of the work. To build on such a foundation is throwing away labor, and the effort to clear away rubbish and lay the foundation of truth requires keen insight into a boy's nature.

To-day there are three evils which especially seem to have taken hold on boys, and in the struggle with these evils the Sunday-school unfortunately lacks the co-operation of the church. There is an element in the church which impedes the progress of spirituality among the children. One of the distinguished features of this element is that it fails to see harm in anything that has not the unquestionable appearance of crime. It professes a profound love for Methodism, but is otherwise distinguished by a lack of the vital power of Methodism. It is without faith and has not even the form of godliness as taught by Wesleyanism. Yet it hesitates not to settle the minds of the young people of the church about matters of the gravest tendencies; backing the power of apirituality, it preaches to become a spiritual advisor for others.

To this element we may impute the growth of covetousness in the church. The widespread practice of lottery, with its multiplied forms, exists here also. Example after example is on record for the emulation of every child who may feel the disposition to follow. Moral philosophy teaches that a lie is a lie however small, and, on the same principle, covetousness is covetousness whether expressed in taking money or other valuables from a man's pocket, as a pickpocket, or gaining money by lottery, strictly speaking, or winning a mulch by shooting at a target. The fashionable practice of raffling pieces of fancy workmanship indulged in by young ladies of all classes of society lacks the moral tone of peddling and the merit of begging. The laws of State and Church are ignored, and young boys are earnestly pressed to take a first lesson in gambling—it may be at the same hands there will be powerless to lift them from the degradation that is likely to ensue. Playing marbles "for keeps" is on the same principle, and will surely develop. Let parents remember that the word of God speaks plainly regarding covetousness.

Another evil that has permeated a goodly portion of the church and poisoned the minds of even the young boys—not to exclude the girls, by any means—is a very low class of light literature that seems to be much in vogue with more than one class of Methodists. It is disrespectful to write the names of these papers in the columns of the ADVOCATE, and who ever is ignorant of such literature let him be ignorant still. Every child in a family should be provided with wholesome matter for thought as soon as his understanding begins to develop, and in this day, when choicest reading is almost thrust upon all, the child's claim is strengthened. Guardians have never made a more fatal mistake than to allow school-children free range in literature. It is simply negligence, and not confidence, that does not guard a child's imagination from impurity. Low-class literature has had a powerful influence on the society of this day in dwarfing mental capacity and in spiritual death. It is impossible to estimate the effect that the future shall disclose when we consider the hold it has on the mere children of this generation.

There is in my mind a lovely little girl of thirteen years who confided to a schoolmate that she despised the Lord's holy day, and to while away its three hours she had the Sabbath before read a number—probably seven—yellow-back novels. A child of godly ancestry, so far as the Sunday-school is concerned, could as well dwell in the darkest quarters of hellendom!

The great evil that, Herod-like in the grasp, has seized the very trunk of the tree, properly, among the boys of the land is the use of tobacco. The popularity of this habit impresses me at every turn. The almost universal apology it meets is an argument against it. Man is prone in evil as the sparks to fly upward, and thus slow progress becomes, necessarily, a characteristic of good. One suggests that goats furnish the only parallel to man in the use of tobacco. "Hilleleus" is a severe test of merit than reason; but since man alone is degraded by appetite, reason appeals to him, and to the "children of light" reason comes here accompanied by the voice of God—Make no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof. Tobacco has powerful medicinal properties, and the most vigorous intellects have failed to long withstand a drugged constitution. Since the world is largely dependent on the ministry of Jesus Christ for progress of thought, the wonder is that young preachers scarcely acquainted with the process of thinking can with such avidity indulge in a habit which weighs at once on mind and spirit and demerits apologies in and out of the pulpit for physical disorders. Whoever cares not for the body depreciates the redemption that Christ has wrought. Preschers can not afford to indulge an appetite that is acknowledged by the most solicitous for youth to be damaging. By their high calling of God they occupy a position of influence, and are commanded to be examples for the flock. Boys are particularly subject to example, and how closely they observe a preacher may be appreciated by the teacher who essays to apply the practical questions of the lessons and reconcile contrary example in those professing consecration to Christ.

All arguments against the use of tobacco among the ministry have been in vain. Every effort to persuade seems to have failed, until we could almost make a case of idolatry of it, and say, Let Ephraim alone; he is joined to his idol. A worthless argument, cut and dried, will serve for defense to this habit of man. He knows the wrong and does it, and will catch at a shadow to screen his conscience from the light.

There is no danger in persuading men to invest in the Lord's work; there is no possible danger of collapse here, but the interest is sure. But whoever attempts to satisfy an appetite for tobacco is unconsciously of the drain upon his purse for no benefit; especially a Methodist preacher whose salary is never more than sufficient, outside of every necessity has never a dime that could not be spent on hooks for the advantage of the church—not to mention those who are "hard run" at the expense of this habit, which is endless in demand, with no recompense more than a wasted frame, a disordered constitution and a bad odor. A lawyer almost declared vengeance against certain clients who had smeared his office floor with tobacco juice. And shall a lawyer's office be more honored than the sacred hearth where it is a continual strife to raise boys to fear God and eschew evil?

God's word is a sure guide to a pure life and a place in his kingdom, which is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy.

Retrospective.

SIXTEENTH PAPER.

Mr. Editor: An interim of several weeks has marked the silence of my pen. During this time the East Texas Annual Conference held its session at Loggville, Texas. Under the administration of Bishop McTear, who is noted for suavity toward the brethren, corrections in his decisions and expiation in his proceedings, the session was pleasant and harmonious. The presence of several visiting brethren, with their platform addresses and pulpit ministrations, added interest to the occasion; none more so than our genial brother, Rev. Dr. Patterson, superintendent of our mission in Mexico. Two of our comrades had fallen during the year: Revs. B. P. Rogers and Dr. J. B. Tullis. Although in years little past the prime of life, they were on our superannuated list. The memorial services held on Sunday night told of their efficient labors while they were effective, as well as the high esteem in which they were held by their brethren. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper closed the interesting and profitable services.

The leisure hours of the writer during the past month have been employed in reading the daily papers containing the proceedings of the Centennial Conference, the "History of Methodism," by Bishop McTear (a rare treat), "Life of Bishop Payne," and "Studies in the Forty Days." These valuable books I have carefully read, very much enjoyed and, I trust, profited by the reading. These late acquisitions to our Southern religious literature should find a place in all our libraries.

To resume my "Retrospective Papers," the writer has something more to say of the good people of Wilkinson circuit before closing his disciplinary term of two years.

Judge Edward McGeehee, so extensively and favorably known as a man of deep piety and magnificent liberality, had his membership in Woodville station, where in contributing to the support of the pastors he was foremost among their members, at the same time aiding in the support of the circuit preacher, who remembers that he replenished his corn-crib and larder from his Thompson's creek plantation, neither has he forgotten a present of fifty dollars in money he received from him after his last year's pastorate had closed. Judge McGeehee was one of the few wealthy men who supported the institutions of the church according as the Lord blessed him. "Riches increased, but he set not his heart upon them."

Allow me to mention another brother whose memory I love to cherish. John Whitaker was one of the stewards who rarely failed to attend his quarterly meetings. He was a modest, unassuming Christian gentleman. At his house preachers were cordially entertained, while his purse contributed to their wants.

Dr. James Angel (now of Galveston, Texas) furnished a comfortable home for myself and family for one year (free of charge, and also was our attendant physician for two years. He was a local preacher of ability until his voice partially failed. He had an interesting family of children—all now doing well in Texas. While the latter is living and enjoying a green old age, with a competency of the good things of this life, and with a bright prospect of enjoying the better life to come, the two former mentioned have passed away to reap the reward of those of whom the Savior said: "I was hungry, and ye gave me meat; a stranger, and ye took me in."

I find names of kind and generous-hearted persons crowding my mind too numerous for space in these papers. If not personally noticed, they are remembered for their kind offices and consistent piety. Even my friend, Mr. Tordino, who was appointed custodian of the class paper at Hotstead by my predecessor, and who informed me that he had taken the liberty of scratching off all the names he considered not worthy to be retained as members of the church, was a clever outsider notwithstanding his officiousness.

As the time for leaving my charge drew near, and not knowing where next I would be assigned, the good people on the Wilkinson circuit seemed very dear to me. A suitable time for reflection was afforded. I have been as faithful in the discharge of duties enjoined as I should have been? Have I never been "triflingly employed"? Have I been as consecrated to the Master and as anxious to win souls to Christ as I should have been? In a word, have I been during my two years' pastorate an example to the flock, so that I could safely say, "Follow me as I follow Christ"? In all these regards my conscience would say, "I praise you not." I might have done far better had I "determined to know nothing but Christ and him crucified."

The next Conference was held at Vicksburg, commencing December 15, 1883. Bishop Payne presiding, who appointed me to Cole's Creek circuit, with my young brother, J. D. Newsum (junior preacher), some account of which I will give in my next.

December 28, 1880: Our Annual Conference met on Tuesday night at Montgomery, Ala. Bishop Andrew presided. Bishop Soule was present, but quite feeble. He was unable to preach, but made several short addresses. His last address was very affecting. We all felt that we should never see him again. He is a noble, old-looking man; he is about eighty years of age; upwards of sixty years a traveling preacher. I was returned to the Columbus mission. Bro. Newby was appointed to the station. I am anxious to see a good work of grace in our community. We need special grace at this time while our hearts are anxious about the state of this country, and many have seen their dearest friends depart as volunteers to fight the battles of the country, uncertain whether they will ever see them return. May God protect the lives and health of our young men, and especially preserve them from the demoralizing influence of camp life.

April 5, 1881: I went to the prairies on Wednesday in company with Gen. Cocke, of Virginia, and Bro. Powell, for the purpose of preaching on the plantation of Col. Phillip Cocke. Gen. Cocke is a very benevolent man, and takes a great interest in the religious instruction and improvement of the blacks. He has been instrumental in inaugurating the colored missions in the prairies and in having a large framed church built for them on the large estate of his son. At eleven o'clock, on Thursday, all hands were assembled from the three plantations, all dressed in their Sunday clothes, and they made a large congregation, some three hundred I suppose. There were present Gen. Cocke, Mr. R. D. Howell, the agent of the estate, the three overseers and two of their wives. I preached to them from, "But now they desire a better country, that is an heavenly one." The congregation was very attentive, and appeared deeply interested. When I closed I called on Bro. Powell to pray, and he prayed a most fervent prayer. He was so much affected that he frequently could not proceed. After dismissal the blacks gathered around their old master to shake hands with him and to express their determination to meet him in heaven. It was an affecting scene.

December 26, 1881: Our Annual Conference was held at Greensboro, Ala. Bishop Early presided to the satisfaction of the preachers, and the appointments were made with less difficulty than usual. I represented the Columbus district in the absence of Bro. Koger. I have been appointed to the Columbus district after being off four years.

January 1, 1882: I have lived to see the first day of another year. The past has been one of the most eventful years ever known in the history of this country. During its entire population of young men have been in the field; many have been slain in battle; provisions are enormously high; money scarce; business prostrated, and no prospect of a speedy settlement of our difficulties. I thank God that I can trust in him and feel that he is a rock that can not be moved, however the billows of time may beat against it. May he forgive my past unfaithfulness and give me grace for days to come!

The Report on Temperance.

Mr. Editor: The late hour at which reports are often presented at Conference gives but little time for the discussion of important questions; and frequently, for want of time, they are summarily disposed of without due consideration. Such was the case in reference to the report of the Committee on Temperance at our last Conference. The report of that committee was sound on the temperance question, and the objection raised by some of the brethren arose, perhaps, from a misapprehension of the author's meaning. The language of Dr. Harmon, the writer of the report, is generally strong, and on this subject especially he is always strong and incisive. The report would have been adopted if a few expressions had been softened and modified; but time did not allow his recommendation, and consequently the whole report was substituted by a single resolution. At the preceding Conference about the same thing was done. When will the church take hold of the temperance question with an unflinching nerve and cease to be afraid of strong expressions and uncompromising terms which portray the subject in its true and proper light?

We have failed too long already with this demon. Some advocates of temperance may suppose that by being a little mild and by almost a patronizing smile something may be gained and the cause promoted. There never was a wider mistake. You might as well suppose that by meeting Stan with a look of non-committal you can overthrow his kingdom. "We will throttle the monster, but it can never be done by slight concessions or by yielding to the enemy one iota in this great moral contest. It was a mistake when, some years ago, we failed to adopt the proposed amendment to our discipline, which would exclude any one from the pale of the church who would engage in the manufacture or the sale of intoxicating liquors. The church then not only lost an opportunity, but delayed the onward march of a great moral reform. I am aware that some of our most honored brethren opposed its adoption; upon what grounds need not be stated, but they were quite objectionable to such an issue. If I mistake not, one argument was that the large grain producers would lose a market for their products. Better, infinitely better, that all the grain should rot in the fields than to be manufactured into poison by which thousands would be ruined. How often are the blessings of Providence converted by man into that which produces only misery and death!

You may think me an extremist; but, with my views, an extreme can not be reached until intoxicating liquors in every form are banished from social life and from the sacramental table and their manufacture utterly and forever prohibited. And this is the objective point. Nothing short of this will meet the demands upon all who love God and their fellow-men. My soul is stirred within me whenever there is the least semblance of a compromise on this subject.

The Methodist Church has always been abreast with any in the temperance movement if not in advance, and no class of men can claim a better record on this subject than Methodist preachers, and yet we have not measured up to the fullest extent the cause demands. The responsibility upon us as a church is very great, and calls for watchfulness as well as constant and persistent effort on the part of all the preachers. I was much surprised some years ago at a dining during a Conference at Vicksburg to see one Methodist preacher accept and drink a glass of wine. Some one is ready to exclaim, fanatic! Well, be it so. Horace Mann, on a certain occasion, had presented the claims of education to the people and the duty of citizens looking to the moral training of the youth of the country and urged upon them the expenditure of their money freely for this purpose; that thousands expended to save one boy would be well invested. A gentleman said to him, "Your figures are too high for one boy." His reply was, "Not if he were my boy." A reply that honored both his head and his heart. We should save any boy we can from the tempter's snare, and the most effectual means is to remove the intoxicating cup beyond his reach. If you have no boy who calls you father, save your neighbor's son, you may have a daughter, and she will some day marry somebody's boy. Every one is interested in the grand movement which contemplates the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Could I know that the possibility that my sons might become drunkards, was forever removed it would thrill my soul with joy surpassed only by the raptures of heaven. And such would be the rejoicings of thousands of fathers and mothers in this broad land. May God hasten the glad day when the death knell of the liquor traffic shall be sounded!

It was my intention to write on the "Wines of the Bible," but must defer that for another communication.

From the Work.

WOLTON, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We are slowly started upon the itinerant's career and are pleasantly domiciled in a parsonage, and we feel perfectly at home. (By the way, is meant not only the parson, but the parson's better half and the little ones.) Our reception was kind and cordial, and the kindness has been unrelenting. It will certainly be the preacher's fault if the year prove not a season of great blessings from God. The circuit is compact, and was left by Bro. D. P. Bradford in fine working order. His work was well done. May I do as well! Pray for me. At Clinton we are pushing forward our new church building enterprise. The number is on hand, having been ordered by Bro. Bradford. We propose, under the Divine guidance, to hasten the building to a speedy completion and hope to have it dedicated by May 1. Our members there are few in numbers, but strong in faith. They have been holding fast for years, and are now taking courage and going forward. At Richmond the absorbing question is, "To repair the old or to build the new?" At Bolton the good people are designing further improvements to the parsonage. And at all points we are praying for a deeper work of grace in all hearts. A revival—acall-points and at all times is the watchword. I have not as yet visited Itallife's Chapel, an afternoon appointment; but there is no part of this work promising better results.

T. L. HELLER.

JANUARY 24, 1885.

LAKE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We have fully entered upon the duties and labors of another year's pastorate on the Lake circuit. We are comfortably domiciled in the parsonage, just repaired and paid for as a Centenary offering. Allow me, through your columns, to thank those who gave to this purpose the largest amount of which ($142) was given by one individual, residing here and well known to the Mississippi Conference. We have a kind and appreciative people. This is a pleasant country, except bad roads in winter. I have two railroad towns and one country village in the bounds of my work, and no whiskey sold at either place. I think this part of the State is ready now to vote for prohibition. We are looking forward for better things generally. Pray for us that we may have a happy and prosperous year on Lake circuit. I was made to feel very and an hearing of the sudden death of our dear young Bro. Callaway. I have lost a classmate, the Conference a useful preacher and his wife a devoted band. Lord, help us to bow in meek submission to thy wise dispensations. We can not tell who next may fall, but may we all be ready.

Injurious Talking.

A Frenchman, speaking of a person known to his comrades, said, "He multiplies his evil nature, for he always opens it at the expense of others." There are multitudes of persons to whom that remark will apply. Backbiting and denunciation are two terrible sources of social mischief. We meet with persons who sensitively shrink from the deliberate violation of truth, who will habitually over-extend their statements to such an extent that a false impression is conveyed to the mind of the listener. They thus lower the tone of their own mind, destroy the power of accurate perception, and sow the seeds of much error in the world. They soon discover that they are not credited even when they speak soberly.

CHURCH OF THE LUTHERANS, MINISTERS AND NORTH MINISTERS CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

OKAS B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS. REV. J. T. SAWYER.
REV. W. L. C. HENNING.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1885.

In commenting upon Mr. Moody's meetings in Richmond, Va., the Presbyterian Banner significantly observes as follows:

The inquiry is abroad, and theological seminaries directors and faculties would do well to heed it, whether our theological seminaries originally established to prepare young men to preach the gospel are not devoting an undue proportion of time and labor to making critical scholars.

Voltaire boasted that he lived "in the twilight of Christianity," but it must have been the twilight of the morning, for the sun is ascending and not setting. Instead of deepening shadow there is brighter and sweeter light. And never was there such a demand for the lamp that giveth light and life. It is said that each year the Oxford Press alone uses in printing Bibles enough paper to form a belt around the globe eight and two-third inches wide.

The Christian World makes note of the fact that the three last Lord Chancellors of England—Earl of Cairns, Lord Hatherly and the Earl of Selbourne—were Sunday-school teachers and active in all Christian work. They served the King of Kings as loyally and lovingly as they did the Crown of England. Business and professional men who have not time to serve as stewards and Sunday-school officers are invited to consider the examples of these distinguished Lord Chancellors.

The four corners of the earth meet in the Lord's house and speak "the language of Zion." A few days ago, in a Carondelet class meeting, four brethren testified—one from Minnesota, one from Philadelphia, one from Montana and one from Louisiana. Two weeks ago Dr. Carter received two members—one from Massachusetts and the other from South Louisiana. That is right. When Methodists from all points of the compass come to the city they will find our churches wide open and served by able preachers who will provide them "food convenient."

"A million for missions." Is the watchword of the Methodist Episcopal Church this year. May it be realized, and more! They have thorough organization, able administration and great wealth. Fifty cents per capita—about what they give at present—certainly is not the possibility of grace with them this year. Their mission work has been the church's crown of glory. That a like zeal and larger grace may characterize all our Methodists this year ought to be the burden of every prayer. If the Centennial review, has accomplished anything, the fruits should be manifest this year.

Each visit to the Exposition increases our amazement at the wonderful display. Within three weeks a magical change has been wrought in the appearance of the Main Building. Hundreds of exhibits have been tastefully arranged in the space assigned, and the whole is now a world of wonder. By electric light, it is said to be brilliant beyond comparison. Our last visit was spent mostly in the Government Building, which contains the State exhibits, the educational and woman's departments, the colored exhibit, and the displays from the Smithsonian Institution, and the Navy, War, State, Treasury and Postoffice departments of the United States government. A critical study of this building will impress one far more than any extravagance of description, with the marvelous wealth and resources of our country. Come and see the world in miniature.

As some secular papers have industriously circulated the statement that in Kansas since prohibition drunkenness and all manner of crime have increased, we reproduce the following counter-testimony from the Kansas Methodist:

The State of Kansas has less illiteracy, less drunkenness, less Sabbath desecration than, perhaps, any other State in the Union. And on the other side she has, perhaps, a larger proportion of men and women in the fields of education, religion and reform than any other State. The Methodist Episcopal Church alone has over three hundred and fifty regular appointed preachers at work and a membership of nearly fifty thousand in the State. These, with the tens of thousands Sabbath-school teachers, are engaged in doing a vast work for humanity.

Torch and Hammer.

In a critical review of the works of Voltaire, Thomas Carlyle concludes as follows: "But what next? Will thou help us to embody the divine spirit of that religion in a new Mythos, in a new vehicle and vestment, that our souls, otherwise too like perishing, may live? What! thou hast no faculty in that kind? Only a torch for burning, no hammer for building? Take our thanks then, and—thyselves away."

This sturdy and stern old critic—master of a sententious style—has thus strikingly characterized the mission and commission of all skeptics. They have "only a torch for burning, no hammer for building." Their business is destruction and not reconstruction. They would apply the torch to the magnificent structure of truth that God has builded for us and gleefully watch it turn to ashes; but nothing is offered in its stead—not even a hammer to suggest another and better temple. And yet this is the only fair test of criticism. If the building is insecure or incomplete, the architect should suggest the needed modification or else present a better plan. But what has infidelity offered in place of our Christian system? What better rules of life and what higher motives and hopes are set before us? To ridicule our gospel, which has fed the world's soul-hunger for all the centuries, and provide no better or more wholesome food, is a cruelty, if not a crime. Christianity invites investigation. Let her walls and towers be examined with eager, critical eye. The issues involved are too momentous for any doubt and fears as to the strength and security of her fortresses. But if weakness is discovered or the whole framework is found to be built on a false theory, the right and the permanent should be suggested.

Another fact should be remembered in dealing with modern doubt—that mere criticism is very easy. It requires less effort to burn than to build—to apply the torch than wield the hammer. And then playing the leonoclast is so very exciting. These gentlemen so engaged become really intoxicated with their supposed success in overthrowing crude theories, destroying foolish idols and exposing ignorant superstitions. And, as the world looks on amazingly, the torch bearer imagines himself the most honorable and veritable knight that ever poised a lance. The truth is, we make too much ado over every little objector to Christianity. Names are thus foisted into prominence that would otherwise never be known beyond a narrow neighborhood. Flouting a baseless skepticism is their only claim to public recognition. And thus a temporary brevet reputation is secured by the folly of Christian men acknowledging their existence. With honest doubt the church has to deal. All her resources are wisely employed in establishing and enthroneing the truth in such minds. But to notice every little adventurer who cries, "I object," "I deny," without stating any broad and philosophical grounds of objection, is the merest dawdling while our Lord is calling us to duty. A man who only carries a torch to burn, and no hammer to build, in the world of thought is entitled to no more respect than one arraigned for arson before a court of law.

But there are other lessons and illustrations of the torch and hammer. Indeed, they represent the two great classes into which the world is divided. Men are either carrying a torch or swinging a hammer—they are either destroying or building. Some are constitutional torch bearers. Unless a building is reared according to their plans and specifications, they would rather see it crumble to ashes. For building they have no faculty; but for applying the torch they have a passion!

This class is seen in the church. They never appear, with hammer in hand, ready to help in construction or reconstruction. To see the stately pile go up and the capstone brought forth causes them no rejoicing. The sound of the hammer is not so musical as the crackling of flames. And so they carry a torch, applying it to everything combustible. They object to the administration of the church—the pastor is negligent, the pulpit dull, the people cold, the Sunday-school improperly conducted, the stewards lazy, the financial system all wrong, and so on to the end of the chapter. To induce such to lay aside the torch and learn the use of the hammer is the delicate and difficult work of a pastor.

The jury in the Murphy murder trial were discharged on Monday afternoon, having failed to find a verdict. The case was given to them on Friday at noon, and they remained locked in their room deliberating upon it until Monday afternoon. The prisoners were remanded to jail to await another trial.

Centenary College—President Adams.

In response to a call by Bishop J. C. Keener, president of the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, a special meeting of the Board was held at Jackson, La., on the afternoon of the fourth instant. With other members residing in the city, we responded to that call and left by the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad, at 8:45, on Wednesday morning. This was our first trip over the lower line of this new road. It is well constructed and equipped, smooth and rapid. We were only six and a half hours going from New Orleans to Jackson, and rode six or seven miles over a muddy road in charge of a careful driver. Between the city and Baton Rouge we pass through some of the finest sugar plantations in Louisiana. The old mansions built in other days are palatial and after a style of architecture that gives them an expression of stately grandeur. These vast estates are in the highest cultivation, and remind us that there is thrift and life in the old land yet.

The Board met in the college building at four P. M., Bishop Keener in the chair. The following additional members were present—a large and representative attendance. Considering the short notice, it is significant of a growing interest in the success of the college on the part of the curators: Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, LL.D., Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Rev. Christian Keener, Hon. George T. McGehee, Dr. E. L. McGehee and the writer. All felt sad on account of the loss that made the meeting necessary. The tributes to the worth and labors of President Rush by eulogistic, but not extravagant, He was a man of noble character and saintly life, and was adorning the high position he was called to occupy in the church. Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews and the writer were appointed a committee to draft memorial resolutions on his death, which will be found in another column. The affairs of the institution were looked into with care and prayer. Prof. Wiley, as president pro tem, was administering wisely, and the students seemed to be happy and hopeful. And they are a fine body of young men! The buildings have been improved by the skillful hand of the carpenter and the liberal brush of the painter.

The Board elected to the presidency of the college, by unanimous vote on the first ballot, Rev. T. A. S. Adams, A. M., of the North Mississippi Conference. It is needless to speak of him to the readers of the ADVOCATE. He is a native of Mississippi, and passed through the curriculum of the University up to the senior year, but went up to Emory and Henry and received his diploma. As a scholar, he has few equals in the South-west, and has a large experience as an educator. He is the author of two volumes of poetry, and for years has been a voluminous writer for the press. Yet in the vigor of a strong manhood, patriotically and passionately devoted to the South-west and full of hope for the future, we predict for him a successful career as president of this historic and sacred institution of our Methodism.

Diligent and Fervent.

The following is an extract from a diary regularly kept by Sir Mathew Hale, Lord Chief Justice of England. He illustrated the possibility of being at once diligent in business and fervent in spirit. His rules, so prayerfully observed, indicate how to make the best use of time.

1. To lift up my heart to God in thankfulness for renewing my life.
2. To renew my covenant with God in Christ. First, by renewed acts of faith receiving Christ, and rejoicing in the height of that relation. Secondly, by resolving to be one of his people, and doing him allegiance.
3. Adoration and prayer.

DAY EMPLOYMENT.

There must be employment of two kinds:

1. Our ordinary calling, to serve God in it. It is a service to Christ though ever so menial. Here observe faithfulness, diligence, cheerfulness. Not to overcharge myself with more business than I can bear.
2. Our spiritual employments. Mingle somewhat of God's immediate service in the day.

IF ALONE.

1. Beware of wandering, vain, sensual thoughts; fly from thyself rather than entertain these.
2. Let thy solitary thoughts be profitable. Use God's name reverently. Beware of leaving an ill impression or ill example. Receive food from them if they are more knowing.

EVENING.

Cast up the accounts of the day. If there was aught amiss, resolve to be more vigilant. If thou has done well, bless the mercy and grace of God which have supported thee.

The Fall of Khartoum.

The fall of Khartoum and the probable death of Gen. Gordon is one of the saddest blows the British Government has suffered in years. Gen. Wolseley's expedition arrived a few days too late to relieve the beleaguered city and rescue Gen. Gordon and his brave followers. The papers in England and America are outspoken against the tardiness of the Gladstone ministry in not dispatching an army earlier. So soon after the brilliant victory gained by Gen. Stewart near Metemneh, this news is inexpressibly sorrowful. What the successful rebels have done with the captured garrison is yet unknown. In the meantime recruits are hurrying forward and Gen. Wolseley has been given full authority to conduct or conclude the campaign of the Sudan according to his own best judgment. It is not possible, however, for England to withdraw from the field covered with defeat. Her interests in Egypt are too vast and important to be imperilled by retreat at this time.

Just what blame attaches to the present government for the fall of Khartoum, we do not know. But of one thing there is no doubt, political enemies are using it with terrific advantage. Whether it will result in overthrowing Mr. Gladstone does not yet appear. It will be remembered that Gen. Gordon went on that mission a year ago rather as a missionary than a military leader. He had no army and was without specific appointment from the English government. It was a religious zeal that impelled him and a conviction that personal persuasion and prayer would quiet the rebellious more effectively than the arms and munitions of war. Though a skillful and able military chieftain he relied more upon inspiration than chivalrous soldiery to accomplish his purpose. In view of these facts we have not sympathized with the indiscriminate condemnation and calumination of the Gladstone government. They were accused of forsaking Gen. Gordon, and leaving him to starve in a fortified city or be eaten by savages. Now if his was largely an independent and personal commission, the responsibility of the government is much relieved. But as a rescuing army was sent to the front, it must be regretted that there was not more promptness and speed.

Gen. Gordon seems to have carried a charmed life and, until definite information is received, we shall hope for his safety. In many respects he is one of the most remarkable men of modern times.

A Recent Murder Trial.

We have never known such general interest in any criminal prosecution as in the recent Murphy murder trial in this city; nor such intense indignation against perjured testimony. Our city papers spoke out with manly boldness, and in every office and every fireside it was the ever present theme of discussion. Five men were on trial for the murder of one man, and the testimony for the State accumulated day by day until a conspiracy was proven as dark and dreadful as disgraces the annals of the world. Public opinion was aroused to the highest pitch as the plot was disclosed by the skillful and able counsel for the State. As one of the accused was a prominent judicial officer, and the other four were relatives or employees of his court, the mayor felt constrained to deliver an address to the City Council, and advised the promptest possible proceedings under the law. He urged the impeachment of Judge Ford and the immediate dismissal from office of the other accused. All of which is quite suggestive.

1. We see in it a revival of conscience on the subject of the fearless and impartial enforcement of law. So many criminals had gone unwhipped of justice, protected by suborned witnesses and perjured jurors, that bad men had no fear of the courts. Escape was easy whatever the offense. This fact made criminals bold and life more insecure. But what had ceased to deter evil-doers became a terror to the general public. And the possible acquittal of five conspiring murderers against overwhelming testimony created an alarm that found expression in every newspaper in the city and on the lips of every patriotic citizen. Now, if this higher moral tone will give emphasis to the imperatives of law and hold judicial officers to a more rigid and rigorous discharge of their duties, a needed and grateful reform will have been inaugurated. Unless this results, we may expect the violence and inhumanity of mob rule. The tedious processes, leniency and silly technicalities of the courts by which criminals have been shielded at length exhaust the patience and forbearance of the people and they take the law into their own hands. And that is always a calamity. The unlawful administration of law begets lawlessness. "Regulators" themselves need regulation, for they become outlaws, impatient of restraint and reckless of human life. We, therefore, hail with hope this loud demand for the enthronement of law. It is our only security of life and property.

2. We notice a higher appreciation of judicial purity and integrity. This crime, in public estimation, was increased in enormity by being instigated, if not committed, by a judge—one sworn to enforce the law. That fact has occasioned the severest comment and condemnation. The people contemplate with horror the spectacle of the sacred ermine stained with blood. Men elevated to judicial offices are invested with peculiar dignity and sanctity. They are to hold with even hand the scales of justice, setting down naught in malice and preserving an uncorrupted and incorruptible impartiality. When this confidence has been shaken—when this ideal has been shattered—admiration is converted into indignation, and the sacred ermine becomes the foulest cloak of crime. This is a healthy sentiment and needs to be conserved. The slightest tinge on the robes of a judge is not to be tolerated. He must have clean hands and a clear record. But this ought to compel from every good citizen the cordial and courageous support of the judiciary. He should be upheld that the majesty of the law may be preserved and its penalties unflinchingly executed.

What the Editors Say.

DOCTRINAL PREACHING.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate rebukes a certain sickly sentiment as follows:

It seems to us there is a good deal of cant about the preaching of Christ and a great what is commonly called doctrinal preaching. Of course Christ should be preached; but how can he be preached without, at the same time, preaching the doctrines which he taught and which are the substance of his gospel? Christ should be preached as the Savior of mankind; but this is a doctrine to be illustrated by his life and death, and confirmed by his own words. It should be preached that men should repent, and believe that they may be saved; but this again is a doctrine to be expounded, proved and enforced. If a preacher should, like Paul, determine not to know anything save Jesus Christ and him crucified, the relation of Christ's death to our salvation—of all doctrines this most requires clearness of statement and cogency of proof.

WHAT THINK YE?

This from the Evangelical Messenger needs no word of comment: "If Christ should come to the church of to-day," asks The Pacific, "would the church recognize him?" There is another question, and the Missionary Review asks it: "Would Christ recognize the church?" What think ye?

MAKING SAD THE RIGHTeous.

In this serious phrase the Southern Churchman refers to the injury done the Protestant Episcopal Church by Romanizing members. We wish all the prophets in that church were as sound in the faith as our contemporary!

No one will ever know the evil done the Episcopal Church in this country by the Romanizing teachings of the so-called "advanced." Only the other day, and in this city of Richmond, a plain laborer or mechanic went to his minister to find out what Bishop Potter meant by receiving a monk into this church of ours. Long since the Episcopal Church would have been a mightier power had its ministers and members continued in the faith as the Reformers handed it down to us. But, having erred from the faith, they have so frightened the men and women of the land that to-day we are here with less than four hundred thousand communicants in a population of nearly 55,000,000 of people.

No one will ever know the evil brought upon the church by the teaching of Calvinism or Augustinianism, with its God of mere power, who was only regarding himself, and not the millions of the creatures his own hand had formed and his own Son had redeemed.

THREE HINDRANCES.

Cowper sang:

"What various hindrances we meet
In endeavoring to meet
In endeavoring to meet."

but the Holston Methodist has arranged in three classes those that obstruct the success of a religious paper, as follows:

There are three things that the Holston Methodist is hindered by: 1. A good deal of poverty among the people. 2. A good deal of illiteracy. 3. Some pride. A slender purse and the lack of literary taste among those who might take the paper hurt it. Free schools and railroads are coming to the rescue. Our people are learning to read and to love to read, and they are growing in means. Occasionally men are too wise and great for us; they soar above us; a Holston paper is too small an affair for them. A little more religion will straighten them out.

—Rev. W. W. Wadsworth, of the North Georgia Conference, and Rev. B. S. Rayner, of the Mississippi Conference, paid the ADVOCATE office a pleasant call on Tuesday last.

—The Harvard Divinity School has seven professors and forty students.

—Fifty years ago there were forty Methodists in Danville, Va. Now there are seven hundred.

—Mr. J. M. Phillips, one of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, visited New Orleans on his return from Mexico.

—Mrs. Lynch, mother of Rev. G. R. Lynch, publisher of the Alabama Advocate, died in Montgomery, Ala., on the second instant, at the advanced age of eighty years.

—Rev. Dr. Jas. A. Heard has been transferred from the Memphis to the North Alabama Conference, and has assumed the presidency of the State Normal College at Florence, Ala.

—The Arkansas Legislature has elected two ladies as engrossing clerks. The State Librarian of Mississippi is a lady, as is also one of the bookkeepers in the auditor's office.

—A bill has been introduced into the Pennsylvania legislature, establishing the whipping post for wife-beaters. Such characters certainly deserve to be beaten with many stripes.

—The Florida Chautauqua will open on the eighteenth instant. A week's postponement was necessary to complete the buildings. Bishop Mallie will preach the opening sermon.

—Phillips & Hunt, agents of the Methodist Book Concern, New York, have issued a call for the redemption of certain bonds issued by the house. We are glad to see this evidence of their business prosperity.

—We note the continued progress of our Southern Methodism in St. Louis. At the last preachers' meeting all the pastors reported good congregations. There were sixteen additions to Centenary and five to First Church the day before.

—The Pacific Methodist has reduced its dimensions to four pages, but without loss in looks or lucidity. It is a bright, breezy paper, and comes every week freighted with the fragrance of a pure gospel from the land of the setting sun.

—This Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck is contributing a series of suggestive articles to the New York Christian Advocate on "Revivals Without an Evangelist." When foreign help is a necessary condition of revival success something is wrong.

—Though somewhat tardy, we extend congratulations to Rev. M. A. Bell, of the Mississippi Conference, on the occasion of his recent marriage to Miss Fannie Hutchins, of Yazoo county. May the itinerant life to both be bright and blessed.

—"Guzman." In the St. Louis Christian Advocate, says: "I believe the time has come when preachers should speak out. Tobacco makes about as many lunatics and corpses as whiskey, and your sermons is no apology for the red-eyed Pluto."

—The native population of the Fiji Islands almost to a man are Methodists, having been converted from cannibalism by Methodist missionaries. But now it is announced by the Archbishop of Canterbury that a bishop of Fiji will soon be appointed. The Church of England there has only two clergymen and three small congregations.

—The regular annual meeting of the Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association will be held in the Tulane University Buildings, New Orleans, Feb. 24-26, 1885. Teachers, school-officers and friends of education are cordially invited. An elaborate programme has been prepared, and distinguished educators from all parts of the United States will be present and participate in the discussions.

—Rev. J. W. Lowrance, of Kansas City, Mo., is in the city on a visit to the Exposition. He is looking stronger and more sinewy than before leaving Mississippi. As pastor of Centenary Church in that rapidly growing city he has had exceptional success. He reports hopefully of all our churches in the city. We have five congregations and twelve hundred members. Since Conference, only a few months since, one hundred and sixty-six have been added. Such news is cheering and indicates the adaptability of our system to city work.

—We notice in the Texas Christian Advocate the death of Rev. W. H. Seat, which took place on the morning of the 25th ultimo, at Galveston. Thus has passed away a gifted, devout, generous, transparent man. In Mississippi, where he labored for some years, he left a host of admiring friends and was considered a preacher of great eloquence. He transferred to the Mississippi Conference in 1819. In 1852 he was stationed at Jackson, the State capital, and transferred the next year to Texas. To that State he has filled stations at San Antonio, Galveston, Houston, Austin, Gonzales and Goliad. A good man has fallen on sleep.

Vice-President Elect Thomas A. Hendricks arrived in the city on Saturday last, and was received with great demonstration. There was an eloquent address of welcome to which he replied in fitting terms. His visit to the far South is greatly enjoyed by our people, and we hope will be profitable to him as a distinguished political leader.

The news from Bishop Wilson encourages hope for his recovery. Dr. H. R. Withers, of Hot Springs, thinks the healing baths of that great sanitarium the Lord has provided, will surely restore him. That his hope may be changed to glad fruition the whole church will devoutly pray. Since writing the above Bishop Parker has received a letter from Bishop Wilson, written with his own hand, in which he reports himself improved and hopeful of permanent recovery.

Mayor Guillotte has ordered the arrest of all vendors of illicit papers. This is understood to mean the suppression of the Mascot. When the circulation of obscene literature is suppressed, a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals is organized, and the force of a criminal trial is held up to public execration, all in one week, we are beginning to see better things.

In a private note to the editor, Presiding Elder Ellis says of his district: "The work, temporal and spiritual, is advancing. All the preachers of the district are at their posts, and the year promises to be one of excellent work and marked success. I pray God that the Spirit's power may be upon us all, preachers and people. It may be that our Lord in taking our fellow-laborers will compensate his church by unusual replenishing of power from on high."

The Christian Index speaks of the Old Testament as a "dim" revelation. Surely brother, you don't mean that. As to interpreting a "bright revelation by a dim one," we only follow the example of the apostles. Who can understand the epistle to the Hebrews without a knowledge of Leviticus? And our Lord himself often quoted this "dim" revelation. Everywhere he said "it is written." To reverse the order of interpretation against such examples, we can not.

We see from an exchange that in England, watch-night services, which were held only by Methodists twenty years ago, are now common in all the denominations. In the High Church parishes very elaborate services are held at midnight. In low Church parishes and Roman Catholic churches, service is generally held only in the early evening. On the last New Year's Eve the service at Newman Hall's church was largely composed of choral singing. At Mr. Spurgeon's the service began shortly after 10:30, and the laborer was well fitted.

There was a picturesque scene when Bishop William Taylor and his missionary co-laborers sailed for Africa. The party consisted of forty grown persons and thirteen children. In addition to personal baggage they carried axes, guns, carpenter's tools, a printing press, 33,000 yards of cotton cloth, mouth organs and jew's harps, children's toys and 5000 Bibles in the phonetic style. The cotton cloth will serve as currency in trading with the natives, while the toys and little musical instruments will claim their attention and keep them docile. One member of the party, Mary L. Myers, M. D., received telegraphic announcement of her father's death just as the vessel was about to sail. She hesitated for awhile, and then concluded to go on to the Dark Continent.

One of the patriarchs of the South-West—a Methodist centenary—passed away on the twenty-fifth ultimo, not far from Brookhaven, Miss. Some facts of his life are of peculiar interest. James McDaniel was born in Georgia, March 25, 1784, and died January 25, 1885, aged one hundred years and nine months. His widow survives with whom he lived seventy-five years. He lived under every President of the United States, and was contemporaneous with our national government and the organic existence of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a blameless, beautiful life, full of good deeds and zealous labor in the church of God. He passed away lamented by a large circle of friends, bequeathing to children, grandchildren, great and great-grandchildren, the heritage of a character as "spotless as a star." These facts we learned from Rev. W. G. Millsaps, who officiated at his funeral.

As a caladrop foretells a storm, so does a plump upon the human body indicate health-destroying virus in the blood, which can be neutralized and expelled only by Dr. Hart's Iron Tonic.

Phillip William Otterbine.

This noble man has a sacred place in the history of American Methodism. He assisted Dr. Coke in the ordination of Bishop Asbury, and was one of the truest and most helpful friends of that Joshua of our Methodist Israel. Asbury called him the "great Otterbine." He founded the Church of the United Brethren in Christ and guided it to gratifying results. The following interesting sketch we find in the editorial columns of the Central Christian Advocate:

Mr. Otterbine was born in the ancient and picturesque city of Dillenburg, Germany, in 1726. His parents were pious and intelligent persons, his father a learned minister of the German Reformed Church. The son was educated for the same ministry and ordained into it in 1749. In less than three years after he volunteered as a missionary to this country, and was soon engaged as a minister at Lancaster, in Pennsylvania. It was not long before he became known on account of his elevated piety and the earnestness and zeal with which he urged all persons to seek a higher religious life than his brethren in the ministry taught. And to this personal religious experience and the character of his ministry we trace his usefulness during a long busy life and his leadership among his brethren. There grew up about him a company of ministers who thoroughly imbibed his spirit and gave him desirable co-operation. He grew beyond his own church and became the founder of a new denomination. We do not propose to relate its history. It was not the result of ambition nor the outgrowth of a spirit of independence, but seemingly a providential development, that has had sufficient justification in its later history.

The patriarch died in 1813, having spent sixty-five years in the ministry. When Bishop Asbury came to Baltimore, in the March following, to hold the Baltimore Conference, he delivered in Otterbine's Church a discourse in memory of his beloved friend. The entry that he made in his journal on this occasion may properly close this brief notice: "By request I discoursed on the character of the angel of the Church of Philadelphia, in allusion to William Otterbine, the holy, the great Otterbine, whose funeral discourse it was intended to be. Solemnity marked the silent meeting in the German Church, where were assembled the members of our Conference and many of the clergy of the city. Forty years have I known the retiring modesty of this man of God, towering majestic above his fellows in learning, wisdom and grace, yet seeking to be known only to God and the people of God."

A Question Settled.

Rev. Dr. McNally, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, at the recent Centenary Conference, in Baltimore, said he thought the Conference should settle the place where Methodism was introduced into this country. Said he: "Some claim Western Maryland, and others New York."

We had thought Mr. Asbury settled that question when he wrote his carefully prepared address to the whole church, signed by himself and Dr. Coke, and published in the Discipline for 1784. "We think it expedient to give you a brief account of the rise of Methodism, both in Europe and America. The first Methodist Church in New York was built in 1788 or 1789."

This paragraph locates the time and place only of the building of the first New York church. Mr. Asbury met the Conference for 1801 at Henry Willis, Pipe Creek, Md., and locates the first Methodist Church built in America. He writes in his journal, April 30, 1801: "This settlement of Pipe Creek, is the richest in the State. Here Mr. Strawbridge formed the first Society in Maryland or America." Who can doubt the correctness of Mr. Asbury's statement? He traversed broad acres to form Methodism; he saw and preached in both these humble chapels, and found the facts which he wrote in his possession before he penned a single line in reference to the time of their location.

He tells plainly the year when Mr. Eubank's church was built in New York, and after that adds: "Mr. Strawbridge's Log-chapel, at San's Creek, was before that; yes, the first one in Maryland or America."

But after Mr. Asbury's death, at the General Conference, 1816, Bishops McKendree, George and Roberts address reads (See Discipline for 1816): "The first Methodist Church was built in New York in 1788 or 1789." But who told them so? Say, did Asbury authorize them to revise what he had written? He said, "The first Methodist Church in New York was built in." etc. They say (McKendree, George and Roberts), "The first Methodist Church was built in New York." Who told them so? Did Asbury? No, he was dead, and they, at the Conference, 1816, buried the remains under the shadow of old Baiter Street Church, where they should have remained.

But, nevertheless, what these three Bishops wrote in 1816 was the beginning of the mooted question, and at the General Conference of 1876, 1880 and 1881, the Bishops, which consisted of twelve members, in their address, for the first time, said, "The first Methodist Church built in America was erected in New York, in 1788"—thus establishing Mr. Asbury, who was the first episcopal address, and said in it, "The first Methodist Church in New York was built in 1788 or 1789." Which Board of Bishops shall we believe—the one of 1781, who met just twenty years after the log-chapel was built, to organize the church; or the one of 1884, one hundred and twenty years thereafter?—The Pioneer.

Centenary College, of Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: On the fourth instant the Board of Trustees of Centenary College met at Jackson, La., and unanimously elected the Rev. T. A. S. Adams to the presidency of the college, made vacant by the death of Bro. Rush.

A letter just received from Bro. Adams announces his acceptance of the presidency.

The loss which we have suffered in the death of Bro. Rush was, according to human calculation, well nigh irreparable; but we find by the same Providence a man raised up who is in all points suited to fill the responsible position left vacant by his death. Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER,
Pres. Board of Trustees.

In a note to the publishers, renewing his subscription to the ADVOCATE, the venerable Dr. A. H. Mitchell, of the Alabama Conference, writes as follows:

I have been thinking of discontinuing the ADVOCATE, as I have to economize in some directions; but when I remember that I was at its birth, for it was born on a steamboat on the Mississippi river in 1850, and that I have been a constant subscriber and reader ever since, I can not have it in my heart to give it up. In many respects your paper is a model.

THE SABBATH FOR MAN. A Study of the Origin, Obligation, History, Advantages, and Present State of Sabbath Observance, with special Reference to the Rights of Workingmen, based on Scripture, Literature, and especially a Symposium of Correspondence with Persons of all Nations and Denominations. This is an exhaustive discussion of one of the most vital questions in our Christianity and modern civilization. When our Sabbath is undermined and threatened, then our civilization will be overthrown and the kingdom of Christ suffer serious hurt. This book is a very cyclopedia on the Sabbath question. It covers the entire field, and will furnish arguments for, and against, essays, etc., innumerable. We want this book circulated and studied.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—Gen. Briller Delisle telegraphs the government as follows: Friday and Saturday we destroyed five forts belonging to the Chinese, which the enemy had evacuated without fighting. In the forts we found immense stores of provisions, gunpowder and other ammunition. We reconnoitred twelve kilometers, and found the Chinese retreating hastily towards Langson. Our loss during the day was 21 killed and 162 wounded.

A "GOOD REPUTATION."—That enterprising piano merchant, P. Weisler, may be justly proud of the leading musical instrument for which he is agent, and especially so of the Mathushek piano. The appreciation of the public for this particular instrument has tended to proper and increase his business and materially. It is the reputation of the Mathushek Piano Manufacturing Company to furnish all their pianos in a most complete and perfect manner, using the best materials obtainable, and their efforts to keep this piano ahead of all others in every respect, is a commendable effort which the public has evidently appreciated by their entire patronage. Judged of musical instruments by that the Mathushek piano instead of being old at eighty years, like many others, is a life time and is kept in tune at a quarter less expense than any other make.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Denver, Col., Feb. 4.—During a severe wind storm this afternoon the Colorado Central train for Denver was blown from the track. The entire train is now lying upon its side in a ditch. Of the twenty passengers on board, eighteen were more or less injured. As soon as possible the injured were taken to Georgetown where they are receiving every attention. The storm did much damage in that town. A large number of chimneys were overturned and the fronts were wrecked.

Cairo, Feb. 4.—The steamer Annie P. Silver this evening struck a mass of grounded ice making a hole in the shore at Greenfield, which caused her to swing violently around in the strong current, twisting her badly, throwing her chimneys overboard, springing her bows and shipping about eighteen inches of water. The City of Helena, just behind, took her in tow, remaining here at dark. One hundred barrels of flour and meal in the hold are damaged. The Silver was bound for New Orleans with a cargo consisting of 1400 tons of assorted merchandise, 1100 being way.

Pulaski, Tenn., Feb. 6.—Joe Jones' residence, situated at Minor Hill, six miles from here, burned this morning at 6 o'clock, burning two children to a crisp. Mr. Jones was feeding his stock at his barn at the time of the fire, and Mrs. Jones was in the storeroom when the fire originated. When Mr. Jones returned the whole house was in flames, and he was unable to rescue his children.

New York, Feb. 6.—The steamer City of Augusta, from Savannah, reports that at 9 a. m., Feb. 5, at Cape Lookout, bearing west by south, a distance of thirty miles, while running on a northeast course, came into a continuous string of wreckage for two hours. Passed a deck, apparently hewn up, with beams swinging in the water and part of the cabin painted white; also dry goods cases, barrels, buckets, tubs, etc., apparently a cargo of general merchandise.

Chicago, Feb. 8.—Decidedly the worst snow storm thus far this season set in here about 8 o'clock to-night. The flakes are falling very fast, driven in blinding gusts from the north and being very wet, clinging to everything they touch.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 7.—The great will case of Mrs. Sarah J. Atkinson, who, previous to her death, in 1883, willed all her property to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, naming Bishop McTear, president of the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, custodian of the funds, was decided in the Circuit Court to-day by a verdict for the church. The will was proved by the relation of the late Mrs. Atkinson, who died at the time of making the will. The amount involved aggregates about $40,000.

Washington, Feb. 7.—A fire this evening in the annex to the Signal Service office destroyed and damaged a number of valuable meteorological records and almost ruined some of the finest instruments in the office. The fire was confined to the second, third and fourth floors. The records destroyed and injured are those which have been collected the past five or six years, and which officials say cannot be replaced. A large number of charts were also damaged beyond repair. The instruments injured were of the finest class barometers and thermometers. Signal Service officials are unable to estimate to-night the loss to the Service. The loss on the building is $2000.

New Brunswick, Feb. 8.—At 3 o'clock this morning an extra freight train from Philadelphia, owing to a broken truck stopped upon the bridge over the canal, and for repairs. While waiting, the through Southern freight, which left Philadelphia at 10:30 p. m., came dashing along through the city, and not until within 500 feet of the caboose of the extra did the engine see it. The brakes were applied to no purpose; the engine ran through the bridge, struck the caboose of the extra, telescoped it, struck an oil tank, of which there were four in the train, and an explosion followed immediately. The burning oil and wrecked cars were thrown over and down from the high bridge into the streets below. The burning train ran through the gutters down the streets into the Raritan Canal. This being covered with ice, down to the paper manufacturing establishment of Janney & Co. This was soon totally destroyed. Seven dwellings opposite, and in the immediate vicinity of the collision, and not over the long railway bridge, building used as a box factory by the Consolidated Fruit Jar Company, was destroyed. The flames then spread to the main factory of the company, which was wholly destroyed. By 6 o'clock this morning the flames were under control.

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 9.—For months past a large portion of the people of the State and of hundreds of influential men throughout Mississippi, have been urging Gen. E. C. Walthall to stand as a candidate for Governor, and so strong were the influences favorable to his candidacy that it is generally believed that his nomination would have been assured by the vote of the Legislature. The wishes of his friends. The following from him, will be received in sorrow by his friends, and hailed with joy by the friends of the other candidates: "It seems proper that I should publish the fact that I am not a candidate for Governor and will not stand for the nomination."

FOREIGN.

London, Feb. 6. Gen. Wolseley telegrams from Kord to the War Office this afternoon that a courier arrived from the British camp near Metemuch, who reports that the rebels at Metemuch have become defiant since hearing of the fall of Khartoum.

Khartoum fell Jan. 26, Gen. Gordon's fate is still in doubt. Reports in regard to him are conflicting. The general opinion, however, was that he was killed. Some say he is with the Greeks in their church at Khartoum. This fall of Khartoum has decided the Soudanese to join El Mahdi, who places both hands of the Nile under control of the enemy. The natives greatly fear the English, and the advance of Gen. Earl's column is awaited with anxiety by them. Natives say El Mahdi is hard pressed for supplies, and that he has great difficulty in persuading the Soudanese to attack him.

London, Feb. 7.—Dispatches from Kord to-day indicate a serious state of affairs at the British position near Metemuch. Lord Wolseley telegraphs the War Office that a courier just arrived from Ghat reports Col. Boscawen, commander of that place, seriously ill, and El Mahdi's forces pressing on to take the British camp. The Arabs have several heavy guns, which are gradually being placed in position to shoot on the British camp. Other field pieces are being maneuvered for the same purpose. The natives report that El Mahdi has 30,000 men gathered between Berber, Soudy and Metemuch, and the force at the latter place is daily receiving reinforcements.

Cairo, Feb. 9.—In an interview to-day the Khedive, said he believed Gen. Gordon still alive, as the Mahdi is too wise a man to kill him. The Mahdi had no interest in wishing the death of Gen. Gordon, but on the contrary, would do all in his power to prevent such an occurrence.

SAY, VIOLET!

BY MARY A. FREEMONT.

Say, pretty violet,
Daintily little flower,
Fashioned by nature in her wondrous loom,
Can you not tell me,
If I whisper softly,
What is the secret of your rich perfume?
Down by the streamlet,
Where'er your roots are set,
Often have I seen you lift your timid head;
O, the bright spring weather,
When you look together,
Queen of all the flowers through the wide world spread!
I fain would from you
Learn to look up like you,
Chasing from my heart all meaner thoughts away;
And as your atmosphere
Breathes your presence near,
I would lend love's fragrance to all from day to day
—Your's Companion.

Higher Education by the State.

No sane man could, with any show of reason, object to a good free school system supported, managed and controlled by the State. It is right and proper for the people to be taxed for the education of the masses in the common and ordinary branches of an English course. The masses should know how to read and write, and they should know enough of arithmetic to enable them to transact the ordinary business of life. This much is self-evident. The State owes this much to itself, to the people and to the general and public good. As long as education by the State is conducted within these limits there can be no reasonable objection to taxation for this purpose. But when the State taxes the people to build great universities where the teachers are supported by public funds and pupils are admitted to free scholarships in all the higher branches of learning, then the masses of the people have a right to ask where and how the public money has been applied. If the great body of the people derived or could derive any benefit from these universities and colleges thus established and supported, then there might be some show of reason for them. As it is, in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred the few who are able to educate their children independent of the State, get free tuition for their sons and daughters ten months in the year, while the poor people who need help get only four or five months schooling for their children. The time is coming, and it is not far distant, when the people will be heard on this question. They only need to understand the question to be indignant at the wrong perpetrated upon them by the State in the name of public education. The immense sums forced from the people by taxation and locked up in brick and mortar and in chemical and philosophical apparatus and paid to professors to teach what the common people have not time to learn and what they do not need to know, is a crying shame upon the public good. This course is calculated to destroy all respect for the public or common school system in the minds of the people. It is a perversion and misapplication of public funds. It is robbing the poor of their just due for the benefit of those who are able to get along without it. It goes for nothing to say that the rich pay school tax in proportion to their wealth because the poor people also pay according to what they have. Those who have large wealth get more protection from the State than those who have nothing but life and personal freedom. Their property is protected as well as their persons. Whatever they pay for the betterment of the masses is so much paid for their own personal and pecuniary protection. It is manifestly wrong to raise by taxation a public school fund and then so apply a large part of it as to put the benefits of it beyond the reach of those who need most help from it. This is putting a penny with one hand in the urn of poverty, while with the other hand a shilling is taken out. It is a glaring fraud upon the whole public school system. In some instances legislators are blinded by the glow and glare of some great thing—of doing something that sounds large—about which there will be a great flourish of trumpets in most years in all of our Southern States. What we need most and first is good, common, every day schools in every neighborhood for the education and training of the ignorant masses of our people. These schools ought to have good school-houses, good teachers, well supported and they ought to run for ten months in the year. When the masses of the people have been brought up to a standard where they are ready for it, and the funds on hand will justify it, then, and not till then, should the State think of establishing high schools, colleges and universities for the people. The first work before us is the common school education of the people. Not a single dollar should be expended in any other direction until this first work is completed. In this country the State does not propose to teach religion, and in order that religion be not taught there is quite a tendency to keep religious teachers out of the public schools, particularly out of the State colleges and universities. Whatever other gifts and qualifications a man may have if he be a minister of the gospel, he is thereby disqualified for a position in one of these State universities. It behooves our people to consider these matters. They are not questions for any sect or particular class or condition of society, but for the whole people.

A Model Sunday-School.

The Jackson, Miss., Sunday-school has a custom of reading out, near the beginning of each new year, a minute report of the attendance and performance of every officer, teacher and pupil. I heard the report of the secretary this year, and was so much gratified by it that I concluded to write about it for the benefit of other Sabbath-schools. It is a good plan thus to show up the year's work; it encourages the faithful and shames the neglectful. I doubt if any other school can show a better record than this one. The superintendent, though a lawyer of, perhaps, the largest and most laborious practice in the State, has been absent only once during the year. The librarian, who is a successful business man, diligently employed every hour of the week days, has been absent only once. The secretary, who works in a State office, and is compelled to be at his post from early morn till dewy eve, has not missed a single Sunday. Of the teachers, six have been present every Sabbath, except one. Of the scholars, ten were reported as having been perfect in attendance, one as having been absent only once, and four as having been absent only twice.

The secretary prepared his report in good style, bestowing praise where it was due and administering delicate reminders to the careless. His tribute to one of the teachers, a lovely young lady who lived to see the last Sabbath of the old year, but died before the dawning of the first Sabbath of the new, was most touching. His own voice was husky with emotion and many falling tears attested the deep sympathy of the school as he read: "But as we begin a new term we look down on the right of this middle aisle and there is one face absent, there is one voice never to be heard again in our midst. In the early spring time of life, the reaper death cut his sickle in our midst and cut down this beautiful, bright, opening flower. Fifty-one Sabbaths out of the fifty-two of the past year found her in her seat at this Sabbath-school. No weather was too inclement, no day too warm, or too cold, or too wet, to keep her away. She actually died where the true Christian always dies, at the post of duty. May the grass grow green, the zephyrs blow gently, the birds sing sweetly, the rains fall softly and the sun shine brightly over the grave of our departed friend and collaborer, Miss Josie Van Hook!" The amount reported as having been collected for the Sunday-school for all purposes during the year 1884 was $179.33. The school uses our own literature and every Sabbath repeats the Apostle's Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments in concert.

Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society.

NOTE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

MR. EDITOR: With gratitude to our common Father, I greet you and the many friends by whom I was remembered in your kind supplication at a throne of grace during my late illness. I have been almost fully restored to my usual health and am ready to work for the Master. As the time for the Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society, which is to convene in Raymond, draws near, I would like to employ the columns of your valued paper to convey a message to the auxiliary societies in the Mississippi Conference. The meeting will open Wednesday after the first Sunday in April, and will continue two days. In order that it may be a success it will be absolutely necessary for every society to have a representative present. We desire also to urge that all dues be collected during this last quarter, so that the amount reported may correspond with the number of names enrolled. We will try to make arrangements to secure reduced rates on all railroads. Ministers are cordially invited, and you, Mr. Editor, especially, for we would feel that our meeting would be incomplete without your presence and aid.

Religion Below the Elbows.

BY PRES. WM. W. PATTON, D. D., LL. D.

"A curious kind of religion that most be!" my readers will exclaim. "We have heard of head religion and heart religion, but this is the first time our attention has been directed to a religion of the elbows. Unless it be an awkward way of using the expression 'out at the elbows'?" And so I must offer a word of explanation, and must also disclaim being the author of the phrase in question. Its origin was on this wise. For many years it was my privilege to enjoy a somewhat intimate acquaintance with the Rev. Horace Bushnell, of Hartford, Conn., our churches and our residences being not far separated. After my removal to Chicago, upon each annual visit to Hartford, it was my unfeigned custom to call upon the good doctor, and to have an hour's familiar talk upon the current topics of interest in the religious world. Upon such an occasion I was praising the earnestness and activity that characterized the Western churches, and the manner in which they carried out church work the enterprise which they display in business pursuits. Suddenly the doctor hooked up, with one of his searching glances, and said, in his own idiomatic way: "I will tell you what is the difficulty with the Western style of religion; it is too much below the elbows!"

That was a centre shot, and produced a marked impression. Many and many a time have I turned that queer phrase over in my mind, and considered its meaning and application. "Below the elbows" must refer to the forearms and hands. Certainly the human animal would be poorly off without this part of his organism. Wonderful is its construction, as Sir Charles Bell proved; and the expounders of natural theology have not been slow to put to use the facts, as an illustration of final causes in nature. The thumb alone serves to differentiate man from the apes and the monkeys. Civilization has been conditioned instrumentally upon what is below the elbows. Had those instrumentalities been lacking, human works had been few and rude. It will not answer to speak disrespectfully of these useful extremities. But then imagine a man alive only in the elbows! And these parts to be in perpetual motion! A kind of a jumping-jack! Or a very busy saw-mill, with an endless up and down activity! The conception makes one shudder, and then grow weary of the monotonous unrest. We must have a man with a beating heart and a thinking brain—a man alive and active in every part, and also capable of quiet thought and fruitful imagination, of searching investigation and glowing sentiment.

Allowing this, what is the application to personal piety and to religious characteristics? What is the type of religion of which Dr. Bushnell could say that it was "too much below the elbows?" In considering this one must not be in a heat, as if feeling hurt and affronted; nor hasten to retort with like speech, and to say that New England religion is too much above the eyebrows! That may be, and Dr. Bushnell's assertion be also true. Moreover, what that keen observer attributed to the West, may be characteristic of more sections than one of our land. What if it had invaded the East, too, and become largely an attribute of our national religion?

Let us enquire into the facts. The idea of the doctor's sharp phrase was that he thought that, in Western Christians, the outward largely predominated over the inward; that the hands were more employed than the head and heart; that religion had not in it enough of elevated thought, calm purpose, quiet meditation, holy reverence, lofty idea and symmetry and refinement of spiritual character. He deemed it too exclusively busy with external activities, with a round of visible duties, with a bustling stir, with an ambition to point to conspicuous results, that can be numbered and measured and weighed—so many committees organized, so many societies formed, so many meetings held, so many exertions made, so many dollars raised, so many edifices built, so many scholars in the Sunday-school, so many new congregations gathered. Probably he had in view the Martha type of religion, the "much-serving" tendency, which rushes around the spiritual house with a frantic zeal to have the hands "doing" something every moment, as the only way of honoring the Master, and forgetful that he is equally pleased with the Marys who take time to sit at his feet, to look lovingly into his face, and to feed upon his gracious and instructive words.

If there is an excessive tendency in this direction, there is much, no doubt, to excuse it. Faith without works is dead, and earnest souls will be impelled to continuous action. The world surely calls for something to be done, to enlighten its ignorance, to comfort its sorrows, to cleanse its pollution. It is not to be saved by mere thinking or interior exercises of however lofty a nature. Jesus himself is described as "one who went about doing good." Besides, modern active piety is a needed reaction from the previous extreme of spiritual passivity. Our fathers had a type of religion that needed to run down out of the head into the arms and hands, and to exercise itself vigorously below the elbows. They could read and hear the driest doctrinal discourses with relish, and contend for technical orthodoxy, and spend hours in exegesis and many "hours of darkness"—and have occasional spiritual raptures, and yet send no gospel to the heathen, institute no Sunday-schools, organize no Bible societies, and grapple with no questions of reform. Their Christian lives largely lacked the practical element. In the rebound from their contemplative and impassive extreme, in which too much was made of the head, it would be singular if we had not gone to the opposite extreme, and made too much of the hands. For, as there is a very dry outward activity, and the truly spiritual soul is left almost by the wayside, the activity which takes the place of love is very different from love. There may be much of the "Lo here!" and "Lo there!" and very little of the "kingdom of God within" the soul. There are temperaments, male and female, which delight in organizations, gatherings, bustle, and excitement, and what they call stir and progress, be the occasion secular or religious. They naturally carry their business enterprise, or their housekeeping talent into "church work;" but the work may be of the least spiritual character, and pertain to socialities, fairs, suppers, excursions, entertainments, and other plans for amusement and financial success, rather than to the salvation of souls and the development of Christian character. In other words, the temptation is to substitute social pleasure, or delectation, or one's own congregation and church, for personal devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ. This would be to substitute the hands for the heart.

Nor must we forget that any valuable power of the activity which we call "doing," resides largely in its being the representative of Christian character. A single word spoken, a single deed done, in the very spirit of the Lord Jesus, by a soul in constant communion with him, is worth for spiritual results a thousand words and deeds not thus inspired, and which only yield festivity, amusement and dollars. And so let us aim to have a religion uniting the agency of head, heart and hands; a religion which shall have dignity and efficiency, repose and action, intelligence and sentiment, spirituality and enterprise.

The Atkinson Will Case.

Mrs. Atkinson, a widow lady of Memphis, and childless, died in 1882, leaving a bequest of forty or fifty thousand dollars to the theological department of Vanderbilt University. Her relatives contested the validity of the will on the ground of "undue influence," and that Mrs. Atkinson was cranky, if not crazy. Domestic, doctors and a druggist and various witnesses were brought forward to substantiate these points. The university declined all attempts at compromise. A good many hard things were alleged by the natural heirs against Bishop McTear, under the hand of "undue influence." The Memphis Appeal, of February 8, gives the conclusion of the matter: "The Circuit Court jury has made a departure, deciding in five minutes a case which has occupied the attention of the court since the twenty-sixth of last month. On that day the trial of the celebrated Atkinson will case, which has been fully detailed in the Appeal began. A hamper basket full of depositions was read and a number of witnesses examined. The argument was hot and lengthy, and when Judge Pierce got through charging the jury yesterday they were chock full of legal lore and in four minutes by the electric clock rendered the following verdict: 'We, the jury, find for the proponents, J. C. Mills, et al., sustaining the validity of the will of the late Mrs. Sarah E. Atkinson, we being satisfied from the evidence introduced before us that, at the date of making and signing of said will, previously and subsequently to the making and signing thereof, the said Mrs. Sarah E. Atkinson was of sound mind and disposing memory; that no undue influence was brought to bear which would interfere with her testamentary capacity.'—Nashville American.

The Old Preacher.

The old preacher, God bless him, his face is wrinkled, his hair is turning gray, he has lost the fire of youth, and when he preaches he does not storm and stamp and make more noise than is necessary. Maybe he did these things once, but that does not matter, he does not do them now. Thirty-five years ago he commenced to preach; then he was only twenty years old. Then he was called a promising young man; the church had hope of his becoming a good preacher—one who would be able to fill the most important stations, and travel a district as presiding elder, and those who hoped for the most were not disappointed. He improved fast, and soon the people began to send word to Conference to return him another year, and the third year, and when he could no longer be returned they wept, and hoped before many years he might be sent to their circuit again. As he improved, petitions came to the stationing committees at every Conference for him, and he was in demand everywhere; he would have been welcomed to the most important appointments in the Conference; and the poor out-of-the-way circuits sighed as they thought there was no hope of his ever being sent to preach for them. But that was long ago—then he was only about thirty or thirty-five years of age; but now he is old, he is fifty-five. He has fought many a hard battle with sin and the devil, and he has gained many glorious victories. He has had some great revivals of religion on his charge—hundreds of sinners have been brought to Christ under his ministry. He has improved in his preaching too; he is better acquainted with the Scripture and there is more Bible in his sermons than there used to be. His sermons are clearer—more comprehensive and thorough than in his younger days; but, then, he is old, and who wants an old preacher? Nobody has petitioned for him for a good while now, and some are beginning to wonder what they will do with him after a little while, and he is beginning to wonder too. He sees the change that is taking place—yes, the change that is taking place—yes, he has taken place, and he wonders at it. He sometimes sits down and asks himself the question, "What is the matter?" I love God more than I need to, I feel for perishing sinners as much as ever I did. I know I am in as great earnest as ever I was, and I have the presence of God with me in the pulpit and out of it, as I did not have in my younger days, and God blesses my preaching as much as ever he did, and I can take care of a congregation just as well as ever; but somehow the people do not want me. Why is it? What is the reason? Must I quit preaching? Is the time coming when I can not get work, when I must be laid on the shelf, as they say? I have often prayed that they might "cease at once to work and live," and "my armor with my life lay down," but the people appear to have concluded that it shall not be so. Why is it? Ah, I am getting old, and they want young men. I wonder why? Can not old men preach as good sermons as young men? do not they know more? have not they more experience? can not they build up believers as young men can not? Is it just because I am getting old? And what am I to do? I feel as though I can not do anything but preach—I have beefed at it so long, and God has not taken my commission yet. I feel now just as at first, "woe is me if I preach not the gospel," but what am I to do? O, if it were God's will, I could wish that preachers might not get old—that they might stay young—until God would take them to heaven, for who wants an old preacher?

Thus the old preacher soliloquizes, and as I hear him speak, and see the tear glistening in his eye, as the sad, denying thought steals over his soul, "Nobody wants me for their preacher because I am old," I feel like thanking God that there is a heaven where preachers never grow old—where they are always welcome and always wanted. God bless the old preacher, and help the people to love and heed him too.—United Brethren Tribune.

Former Times versus The Present.

The following from a personal letter to the editor by one of our most thoughtful and successful pastors is right to the point. The habit of exalting the past by abuse of the present we believe to be spiritually hurtful.

"I commend your criticism on 'A School Teacher's Views Freely Spoken.' There was much in the teacher's view that I endorsed. The select scientific course may still with information; but there is some difference between this and broad culture. I have filed his two articles, though there is much in them that I do not agree to, and much of which I am incompetent to judge.

"When I was a small boy I used to be alarmed at the sad condition of the times. The ignorance and vice of the day was the common talk of many persons, and they mournfully contrasted these days with the excellence and purity of the past. I thought that by the time I arrived at maturity the world would be completely ruined. I have learned since that this sort of talk was not peculiar to those days. I have heard it ever since.

"I find from an old book in my library that a wise man, three thousand years ago, said to the people: 'Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not enquire wisely concerning this.'"

Good Words.

Zion hears the watchman singing,
And all her heart with joy is springing;
She wakes, she rises from her gloom;
For her Lord comes down all-glorious;
The strong in grace, in truth victorious;
His star is risen, his light is come.
—Nicolai.

—Out of hearts ploughed by contrition spring flowers fairer than ever grew out on the hard ground of unbroken self-content. There bloom in them sympathy and charity for other erring mortals, and patience under suffering which is acknowledged to be merited, and, lastly, sweetest blossom of all, tender gratitude for earthly and heavenly blessings felt to be free gifts of Divine love.—Frances P. Cobb.

—God's presence is enough for toil and enough for rest. If he journey with us by the way, he will abide with us when nightfall comes, and his companionship will be sufficient for direction on the road and for solace and safety in the evening camp.—MacLaren.

—It is we, and not the Lord, who have to gain all or lose all, according as our relation to Christ has been—according as our relation to Christ is—in that great day when "the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all."

—We pray; our prayer is answered; we cry for the blessing, and the blessing comes. There is a sure and open line of communication between us and our God; why need we trouble ourselves about the how of it, when the fact itself is certain?

—If we spent less time in propping the cross of Christ, and more time in pointing men to it, then more souls would be converted by it.—MacLaren.

—The gate that leads to heaven is a strait gate, therefore we should fear; it is an open gate, therefore we should hope.

—It is a most dangerous habit of character to be able to gork up raptures whenever raptures are the rage.—F. W. Robertson.

—What we are afraid to do before men we should be afraid to think before God.—Foster.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

MISS JACQUELINE LANE.

(Tribute of love and respect to her memory by a late pupil of Whitworth College.)

BY A. C. B.

Ah! hearts that ache,
And faces pale with fear—
Death loved a shining mark,
Heeds not the later tear.

We try to say,
Father, thy will be done;
But that the cup of pain,
Prayed for in time only soon.

And to that land,
Dear love home, thou hast sped;
We would not call thee back,
Or speak of thee as dead.

But just "asleep,"
In Jesus' arms he lies,
And unto all who mourn
This comfort sweet he gives.

Her work is done—
No more for us she calls and cheers,
"She hath done what she could,"
And we are left in tears.

But we will meet
Where angels come to rest—
Where no farewell is said,
No funeral bells are toll.

And hearts that have
No piercing wound been given
Can scarcely realize
The ecstatic joys of heaven.

A Wedding in China.

Mr. Editor: A wedding in China, as in other countries, is an occasion of joy and festivity, and, as one took place next door to our house soon after our arrival in China, we had a good opportunity to see and hear all that was said and done, and I shall try to give some account of it and the peculiar customs of the Chinese on such occasions.

The bride was brought at candle-light in the bridal chair—a large beautifully embroidered Sedan chair—borne by four well-dressed bearers. The chair was preceded by men and boys bearing flags and lighted lanterns, although it was still light. Following the chair was a band of musicians composed mostly of boys—all gayly dressed and full of fun. Then came attendants and several porters carrying bedding and household furniture enough to set up housekeeping. This was all provided by the bridegroom a month or two before the happy occasion.

We could not see the bride, as she was shut up in a closed Sedan chair, and even after her arrival at the house of the bridegroom we could not at first see her face, as she was closely veiled. Just at candle-light a large number of guests had assembled, with their wedding garments on, to join in the festivities, when the sound of firecrackers and music announced the approach of the bride, and many voices exclaimed, "The bride is coming!" When the chair was put down near the door there was another explosion of firecrackers and the sound of music. A lot of gilt paper is burned near the door and a small quantity of rice is sprinkled near by the entrance, as emblematic of prosperity. The bridegroom and bride never see each other's face until the day of their marriage, or, at least, they are supposed not to have met. In many cases they do meet. There is no courting done in China by the young men, as the parents generally manage such things for them by a "go-between," or "middle man." On the occasion of the wedding of which I am writing the bride reached the house of her husband weeping, for she had left her mother's side the home of her youth to go among strangers, and her mother could not go with her. She was going to be the slave of her mother-in-law, and hence she leaves her mother's house full of sadness. It is not an occasion of joy to the bride—at least in many instances. It is the custom to weep, and she must do so.

The bride was dressed in a rich costume, and an elegant head-dress of several pounds' weight projected over her face, with innumerable glittering, silvery beads hanging down over the veil which covered her face. The bride was conducted to the reception-room, which is also the "ancestral hall" of the family, where all the guests were assembled to see the happy pair made one. At one end of the room was a square table, on which was burning red wax candles and incense in front of a picture of the bridegroom's ancestors. It is here the bridegroom receives his bride; sometimes with a simple bow, and in some instances not the slightest notice is taken of her presence. When the master of ceremonies calls, "Prostrate yourselves," they both bow three times to the picture on the wall. Then the "go-between," as the Chinese call him, takes two pieces of narrow thin silk prepared for the occasion—one green, the other red—and each about a yard in length, and, tying the two together, puts the green silk into the bridegroom's right hand and the red into the bride's right hand. Then they kneel and bow three times to each other, and again bow to their ancestors, and then bow again to each other several times. The bridegroom then follows the bride, who is being led into another room accompanied by all the guests, where he, or someone for him, removes the veil, and for the first time in his life he looks upon the face of his bride. Sometimes one of the lady guests, with a long stick, removes the veil from the bride's face, and then comes the free remarks of all present as to whether she is pretty or ugly. If she is ugly, how they pity the poor bridegroom, while he looks on with seeming indifference, and often gets up and retreats or rushes from the room in great disappointment or in disgust. On some occasions the bride is seated in the room at the head of the bed and the bridegroom at the foot, when two cups of wine tied together are produced and handed to each of them. When each has taken a sip the cups are exchanged and they again take a sip, and during the whole time not a word is spoken by them. They are eagerly watched by all the guests who, at the same time, make their remarks about the couple. After they have taken the wine two cups of some kind of food is brought and a cup is handed to each of them, and when they have taken a slight morsel the cups are exchanged and they each again take a slight morsel. The bride is always fed or pretending to be fed by her attendant, for she is not supposed to eat anything for twenty-four or thirty-six hours, and in some instances not allowed to sleep for that length of time, except what little sleep she can get by leaning her head against the table.

When all this as above related is going on the bridegroom rushes from the room, when all the women and children try to prevent him, and this is the signal for everyone to make merry. After this the bride is led out to pay her respects to all the guests, who are expected to examine her fine clothes, and especially her tiny feet. All are allowed to make just such remarks as they choose about her beauty or want of it in as plain language as the Chinese can use on such occasions. After the bride meets all the guests, and makes her bow or motion of the hand to them, she is then led out in search of the mother-in-law to pay her respects. Very often the mother-in-law pays but little attention to the bride and manifests but little interest in the arrival of her daughter-in-law, and often never gives a kind word of welcome to her. No matter how gay and happy all those who are present may be, the bride must not manifest any joy or delight, for that would be a violation of all propriety and custom. If she speaks at all to her attendant, it must be in a very low tone of voice. She stands in the midst of her gay visitors like a statue and walks about only as she is directed by her female attendant.

There is much connected with betrothal and marriage in China which would not be edifying to Christian people at home, and which would require too much space even if I were inclined to write it all. We have said enough in this letter to show that the life of a daughter-in-law in China is not an enviable one. The marriage ceremony of our native Christians, although agreeing in some respects, differs very much from the heathen around us. The ceremony is a Christian one, and all that is objectionable is omitted. When one of the party is a Christian and the other is not, the Christian is placed in a very unpleasant situation. When the bride is a Christian and the bridegroom is not, the family forces her to kneel to the ancestral tablets, and, if she resists, they make her life miserable. I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBETH.

Orthodoxy versus Heresy.

It may be a little grating to speak of heresy; but some things are orthodox and some are heretical.

A few days ago, in visiting a Sunday-school in which there were some Methodist teachers and some Methodist scholars, I heard a preacher say to a large class of boys, "Let us not regard that old Jewish institution as a church. It was rather national than ecclesiastical, and its ordinances were more of a sanitary than of a religious character." That was not the time nor the place for me to reply; but I felt that the preacher was repudiating God's church and his dealings with the world for nearly four thousand years in order to maintain a dogma!

This is not the first instance of rebellion in the midst of those who claim to serve God. If I were to say that this view, monstrous as it is, is commonly received, some orthodox editor would curl his lip and smile in disdain. Indeed, the truth or fallacy of the declaration would appear according to the subject upon which you read. If you pursue the study of the question as to the proper subjects for baptism, you will see, if your author be a pious Baptist, that God has always had a church, and the ordinances thereof were always spiritual and divine. But, if you read church history, you will see, no matter what the doctrinal opinions of your author, a practical confession of the allegations contained in the speech of the preacher alluded to. There can be but two sides to this question: Either the origin of the church, like the principles of common law, dates back to a period "to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," or to a period within "the memory of man." Then, too, the ordinances must have been spiritual or carnal, and the whole thing civil or ecclesiastical.

It is no use to smile and say the case is overdrawn; nor will it do any good to say we mistake the teachings of our writers. I propose in this paper to show that the doctrines of the Bible, and, by consequence, the doctrines of the Methodist Church, are perverted by sundry writers of recognized authority. Everyone who has read the great debaters—Campbell and Rice, Graves and Ditzler, Bledsoe, Miller, and others—know that in these discussions the idea that that organization generally known as "the Jewish Church" was a genuine ecclesiastical organization, and the passover and circumcision genuine ecclesiastical sacraments. But we insist upon uniformity. Whatever is taught as truth in our connection should be taught as truth in any connection. If these are facts when we come to prove up and justify infant baptism, they are facts when we come to prove up our historical connections. In my little book, on "The Church," I have shown the connection of the present church with the church of the Hebrews; but what I propose to do now is to show a necessity for right teaching on this subject.

Caution Farrar, in his "Early Days of Christianity," like Neander, by the very title of his work, gives color to the utterances of the preacher above alluded to. But the teachings of these authors do not stop with a mere unpropitious title page; but in the body of the work, and in plain language, Mr. Farrar teaches this same heresy. So does D'Aubigne; so does Mosheim; so does Stevens, and a number of others. But before we start out with these writers let us put this down: If God did not have a church in the world hundreds of years before the incarnation, he has no church now. Let this be borne in mind, and we will bring it up in the conclusion and examine it more closely.

Bishop Hurst being one of the latest writers on this subject, let us begin with him:

"The church, in its broadest sense, consists of true believers in all ages; but the Christian church was established by Christ himself." * * * "The opposing forces were massed, and every effort made to prostrate the new religion." (Outline of Church History, pages 11, 22.)

If it be insisted that the words, "true believers in all ages," admits the existence of the church prior to the incarnation, why say "the Christian church was established by Christ himself"? The natural inquiry is, What is the difference between the church and the Christian church? If a church has been in existence "in all ages," when and for what purpose was "the Christian church established by Christ himself"? What sort of church was that which existed before "the Christian church was established by Christ himself"? If it was not "the Christian church," it must have been a "Christianless church"—a thing of which we can not conceive. Then what was there in this religion under pagan opposition which was "new," except that all religion was new to the pagan world? Its doctrines were not new; its purposes, its piety, its truth, its Head was there the same they had ever been. It was more than three thousand years old.

Once more. If "the believers in all ages" constitute the church "in its broadest sense," by what right has Dr. Hurst narrowed the Christian church down to a period of less than one-third of the world's existence? Why say "the Christian church was established by Christ himself"? There is no evidence in the Bible to that effect, and the church is never spoken of in that book as the church of Christ—never. It is simply "the church," or else "the church of God"—never "the church of Christ." In poetry it may be so called, because "he is the Head of the church even as the man is the head of the woman." But, in an organic sense, it is all wrong. "Christ himself" never established any church, except he did it when he dwelt "with God, and was God." As the anointed, as the sent of God, he had nothing whatever to do with establishing the church. It was here when he came. He came to his own. He belonged to it. As a member, he worshipped with and partook its sacraments.

Next, see D'Aubigne. Page 38, Vol. I, he says: "While speaking of one church of God, it no sooner refers to its manifestation to the world than it enumerates 'the churches of Galatia, of Macedonia,' of Judea—all the churches of the saints." Page 33: "The feeble world was tottering on its foundations when Christianity appeared. The national religion which had satisfied the parents no longer proved sufficient for their children." Page 34: "Two principles especially distinguished the new religion. * * * One had reference to the ministers of its worship; the other to its doctrine."

Can language be plainer than this? "The church of God" manifested to the world at the time the "churches of Galatia, of Macedonia," etc., were enumerated. Had there been no manifestation of "the church of God" before those local churches began to exist? Whose "church" was that "in the wilderness" which had "ordinances of divine service and a worldly sanctity"? The church of God, certainly. "When Christianity appeared!" Plainly, Dr. D'Aubigne could not tell when "Christianity appeared." Christ, the head and source of Christianity, "is as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

These "principles" which "especially distinguished the new religion"? Did not the old religion have the same ministers as the new? the same duties? the same functions? the same duties? There were priests under Moses and there were priests under Paul whose duty it was to conduct the public worship and read and expound the word. What "principle" was that which had reference to "the new religion"? As

I show in "The Church," there was not a new doctrine taught by the apostles, nor a new doctrine written in the New Testament. Why then make this great difference between the periods of the church's history? Why persist in calling an institution 4,000 years old a "new religion." That a Frenchman should absorb enough of the old Romanists' view to go on in this line is not so surprising as that Hurst should do so.

But why go on with these quotations when every student knows so well that the church is the same under all the dispensations, only on the subject of baptism! "The infant church," "the new religion," "the establishment of the church by Christ himself," "the planting of the church by the apostles," are all phrases met in all histories of the church. It is time to tear down these contradictions, to maintain the unity of the church, its sameness in all ages, or abandon the half-conceded strife.

No man can point to the passage in the Bible which conveys the remotest idea of the time and place of the establishment of the church. Like the being of God, it is an oft-asserted fact; but the time and circumstances of its beginning are nowhere alluded to. The history of the church is a ring. We can trace it all around (the circle of time), but fail to find the beginning. It is now and has been as far back as we can go. The only means we have of knowing that a church was established is from the fact that we see it; but, if left to prove its existence as a thing begun in the past, it can not be done. Those to whom the day of Pentecost were clearly members of the church which existed at the time, and not there and then for the first time brought into existence.

As I have done, I do again. I demand the book, chapter and verse which tells us when the church was set up on the earth for the first time. Its doctrines are traceable all the way back. So of its ordinances; so are its objects. It is an institution of God for man, and in the nature of things, must have been co-existent with man. The church is no second thought with God. It is primary, an offshoot from heaven—the militant a transplant of the triumphant.

February 5, 1862: I have entered upon my labors on the Columbus district and held three quarterly meetings. I feel my insufficiency for the position I occupy, and sometimes feel discouraged in view of the state of the country and of the church. Preachers will need more than usually the grace of God in these times of trial; but I feel like trying to do my duty and help to keep the church alive and not let the machinery of the gospel become damaged. The hope of the country is in keeping up a nucleus of piety in the churches at home, that when the armies are disbanded there may be some religious influence to counteract the flood of ungodliness which will overflow the land through the demoralizing influence of war upon our men who are engaged in it. Oh, Lord! save the country from the floods of wickedness; save us from distrust and unbelief; keep us in the hollow of thy hand till these calamities be overpast. Save the church and ministry from backsliding; take not thy Holy Spirit from us; give us not up to a reprobate mind. Lord, help me to clove closer and closer to thy bleeding side to be more and more diligent and prayerful, and give me courage to discharge my duty to thee and the church.

March 13: I have just returned from Pickens and Greene counties, Ala., where I held quarterly meetings. The country is in a great state of excitement upon the invasion of the enemy. There seems to be a general uprising of the people and all ranks and classes are taking up arms. The preachers are leaving their charges to enlist, and the people seem determined to defend themselves to the last extremity. There will be a great loss of life ere long as we are evidently on the eve of some great battles. The armies are concentrating at different points, and both sides seem determined to conquer. Our country is in an awful condition. The war is destroying railroads, burning towns, devastating the country. Thousands are sick and dying from exposure and neglect. The circulation of religious books and periodicals is stopped, pulpits vacated, and the churches left without pastors, vice and wickedness increasing at a fearful rate. Our country seems given over by God to destruction and ruin. It is awful to contemplate the state of things in this hitherto highly favored land, and what will be the final result no mind can conceive or tongue describe. All my trust is in God in this time of trial. I have faith in his providence and rejoice to feel that God reigns and will do all things well. I thank God that I find religion a comfort to me, and that I can have peace of mind amid all the battle and excitement of the times. I have taken God for my portion and he will not forsake me.

March 18: I returned from Carrollton, Ala., this morning. We had an interesting quarterly meeting. Bro. McVoy, the preacher, has determined to volunteer, and the sacramental services were peculiarly solemn in view of the separation. He is greatly beloved by his people, and they give him up with great reluctance; but yield to the exigency of the times. I was somewhat revived, although the cross was heavy. I saw in the congregation some who had been converted there under my ministry twenty years ago. They are still striving to get to heaven. Oh, that I may be found worthy to meet my numerous brethren in that bright and happy world where is no more parting forever.

September 6: I preached to-day in South Chapel, in Noxubee county, Miss. Twenty-three years ago I had the pastoral charge of that church, and my visit to it has called up many reminiscences of time past. Great changes have taken place since that time. I saw but two or three in the congregation who were there at that time. Bro. McGee has moved to Arkansas. Bro. Augustus and Sister Stokes are dead. Bro. Koger still lives in this country. He and his old lady are both blind and helpless. Jeff. Koger and Bro. Wm. Augustus, who were youths then, are now in the army. Bro. Moses Cockrell still lives at the same place. He has become an old man, his head is perfectly white; but he seems to enjoy health and vigor. Bro. Dickson is dead. I took him into the church that year a single man, to-day his widow and two grown daughters were at the church. Bro. Eliah Callaway was with us, showing the effect of years, a venerable man of God, who was then my presiding elder. He has been a faithful soldier of the cross, but will soon have to pass to his reward in heaven. I saw several young persons in the congregation who were children when I formerly preached to their parents. Some of them are married and fill their parents' seat in the church. No time fleets away. God has mercifully spared my health and strength and I am still effective. I have had a happy life, been blessed above many of my fellow-creatures. Oh, may I find favor in his sight and stand among the redeemed at his right hand in heaven.

A Statement and a Plea to Southern Methodists.

There were in the communion of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the beginning of the late war, 207,766 colored members. They had for their pastors and religious guides, white preachers, members of the Annual Conference, appointed by the Bishops. Soon after the war, many of these colored members—perhaps a majority of them—entered other Methodist Churches, having headquarters in the Northern States; but thousands of these colored members, in spite of vehement urging, remained loyal to the church through whose ministry they had been brought to Christ. To meet the needs of their case, it was judged best to organize a separate church for them. Under the authority and direction of the General Conference that met in Memphis, Tenn., May, 1870, a convention was called to meet in Jackson, Tenn., in October, 1870. Under the presidency of Bishops Paine and McTear, the "Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America" was organized; Bishops were elected and ordained; a book of Discipline was adopted; the buildings occupied by these congregations were secured to them by good titles, and the church set going.

At the recent Centennial Conference, this "Colored Methodist Episcopal Church"—the ecclesiastical daughter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—reported 155,000 members. They have, considering their poverty and many disadvantages, done wonderfully well. But they are in great need of a well-established and well-equipped training school, in which preachers and teachers may be trained for the great work of the instruction of their people. They can not get on without training any better than white preachers can. If their work is to be rightly done, trained teachers and preachers they must have. They are not able, themselves, to provide the means of training them. They naturally look to the church that sent them forth, in 1870, with its blessing. They earnestly ask help, and they have faith in Southern Methodism that they will receive it.

The General Conference in May, 1882, recognized their great need, and their right to ask it at the hands of Southern Methodism. In response to a recommendation of the Bishops, the General Conference took measures looking to the accomplishment of the great work of providing for this urgent want of our colored brethren. At a meeting in Atlanta, Ga., August, 1882, of the senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, (Bishop George F. Pierce), and of the Bishops of the colored church, it was decided to establish in Augusta, Ga., an institution to be known as "Paine Institute." A Board of Trustees was named, a charter was secured, and, in 1883, the work was begun. Dr. Morgan Calloway, vice-president of Emory College, was elected president, and the Rev. G. W. Walker, of the South Carolina Conference, professor. Dr. Calloway organized the school, and did two years' good work, and, in November, 1884, at the call of the church, returned to Emory College. Prof. Walker was made president; Rev. W. C. Davis, of the South Georgia Conference, was elected professor, and his sister, Miss Sallo Davis, assistant.

The work of "Paine Institute" is now going on in a hired house, inadequate in its accommodations. Enough has been done to demonstrate the utility and practicability of the scheme, but success demands permanent and adequate quarters. The collections hitherto made have been barely sufficient to keep the school going. To raise funds had established the work, the Rev. Dr. J. E. Evans was appointed by Bishop Pierce, January, 1883, commissioner of education for the colored people. Dr. Evans labored with zeal and ability during 1883. Last December, Bishop McTear appointed the undersigned to take up this work, and carry it on. Upon that work he has now entered, fully resolved, by Divine help, to do his utmost to accomplish the enterprise undertaken by the church.

The "Colored Methodist Church" has suffered in many ways by its relation to Southern Methodism. This relation has cut them off from the large gifts from the North that have come to other colored churches. Their relation to us cuts them off from help abroad, if we fail them, their lot is indeed a hard one.

This appeal is made to all who believe that the colored people need instructed preachers and teachers; to all who believe that Southern Methodism should help the church they sent forth and that, by its relation to Southern Methodism, is shut up, for the most part, to what we will do. "Paine Institute" must be firmly established and adequately sustained; it must have a habitation of its own. Eligible buildings can now be procured at a bargain. Send, as the Lord has prospered you, to the undersigned.

W. C. DUNLAP, Commissioner.

A Report.

Mr. Editor: I ask space for an un-called report. While at the Annual Conference of 1881, held in Carondelet Street Church, I was in Bros. J. and L.'s class meetings on Sunday and had the realization of an old interpreted dream. "Surely the Lord is in this place." I knew it; I felt it, and my soul rejoiced to feel that "this is the gate of heaven." This class meeting path I then resolved to follow. An old friend of mine, a Baptist minister, said: "He loved these spiritual communions of Methodism." Another young man, of the Presbyterian Church, said: "Bless God for such afluence. My soul is happy, henceforth my service shall be the Lord's. He was this year admitted on trial to the Louisiana Conference. Many other instances might be given, but this is sufficient for me. The Lord has blessed my resolution, and by his grace I am going to keep up the class meeting. Brethren and sisters of Carondelet, ask your prayers 'that my soul shall bless the Lord and that all that is within me shall praise his holy name.' I pray God to bless you and all other class meetings with a glorious review this year. I now ask all others who are deeply interested on this subject for a brief report.

Your brother,

ST. H. WHATLEY.

From the Work.

FLOYD, LA.

Mr. Editor: There was considerable shaking up of the Homer district at last Conference, and I found that was shaken out of the old nest among the pine hills to fall into the low grounds; but not as yet the "low grounds of sorrow." As soon as the weather would admit we moved on with wife and little ones for our new home in Floyd, on the Floyd circuit. We left Kinggold for Delhi, via Minden Junction, Tuesday, January 27, reaching there next day at two P. M. The night we enjoyed the hospitalities of Bro. J. M. McKee. Having previously notified the people of Floyd of our intended arrival on Thursday, they met us with a hack and wagon to carry us home. On reaching Floyd, to our surprise we found the parsonage lighted up, and a merry pool of ladies' and children's voices coming from within. As we entered the door a good brood of children, welcomed us to our new home. In the sitting-room was a fire burning. In the dining-room, to which we were soon invited, was spread warm and most sumptuous supper: turkey, chicken, potato salad, pickles, salmon, breads, pies, cake, fruit, etc., lay in rich profusion on the board, and we were right royally served by the good sisters as guests of the parsonage. After supper two of those good ladies opened the parson door saying, to my now delighted wife, "This, too, is yours," and her eye beheld a barrel of flour, bins of sugar, coffee, tea, and on down the grocery line to pepper and salt—a supply for weeks. Our hearts were full and we had no words to express our appreciation that night, but we remembered them at the family altar. The good people, by their kindness, commended to our hearts. May we "commend to their consciences the truth in the fear of God!"

FEBRUARY 3, 1885.

RENTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: This is my fourth year on the Mt. Olivet circuit; consequently my last for the present term. Therefore my motive can not be impugned. If I express my high appreciation of the many kindly deeds and tokens of Christian regard which we have received from this people during these three years, reminding us that we are among an appreciative people, and that "the workman is worthy of his meat," I am not among these friendly greetings. A handsome Conference seal for myself and an anonymous box of sundry, needed and valuable articles, with Christmas-greetings to Mrs. Howard—all from Wesley Chapel—a buggy and an overcoat from two friends at Sattalia. The most appreciable feature of these generous acts is that they were the free-will offerings of persons who had contributed most liberally to the support of the work. But for such noble Christians scattered abroad over "these lands," our poor salaries would leave many of the preachers in great want. Reader, "go to the end of the earth," and provoke your pastor and his family to a more entire consecration to their high calling. For who could receive such expressions of Christian sympathy without feeling a rebuke at every discovery of shortcoming or inefficiency? May none of these lose their reward, and may I be able to improve upon my many failures and minister unto their spiritual things as I have been partaker of their carnal things in the prayer of their humble but unworthy pastor.

A Pastor's Welcome.

MR. EDITOR: I am in the parsonage on the Raleigh circuit; landed here on the twenty-second, and this is the first time that we ever lived in a parsonage. After three days of exposure in very bad weather we reached the parsonage and was greeted with a warm reception. A number of the brethren and sisters awaited our arrival, with good fires in our rooms and the table groaning under the weight of its luxuries. And to complete the whole, a large cake was placed in the center of the table, with these words, "Welcome home!" Mr. Editor, I am not able to express the gratitude of my heart and the outpourings of love to God for his goodness toward us. Yours in Christ,

A Mother's Gratitude.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow a widow to thank many kind friends through the ADVOCATE for meers to send her son to school one session at Coneary College? My son is preparing to be a Methodist preacher. I offer many thanks to his friends at Lake Providence and to Mrs. Dr. Hollingsworth. He was able to go until January, and then would have had to come home had it not been for the kind help of Bro. W. W. Guthrie; for which his mother sends many thanks. That generous offering of Bro. Guthrie will send him until June. May God bless every one that has lent a helping hand to educate my orphan preacher boy!

Peculiarities in Public Prayer.

SOME years ago an eminent minister, recently deceased, who was deservedly loved for his many amiable virtues, and admired for his genius and eloquence, offered prayer in his pulpit. His petitions on that occasion were distinguished by simplicity, directness, and earnestness, and apparently tore all hearts onward to the throne of grace. But while they were being breathed, and the floor of the platform creaked, and caught other sounds which I am ashamed to confess I contained me to look up. To my amazement I found the good brother gesticulating somewhat wildly, moving about nervously as though he were delivering an exhortation to men instead of addressing an assembly of God. Since then I have observed and have been astonished to find not a few of them consulting the same fault; and this circumstance has recalled other peculiarities of public prayer, and has led me to put these reflections on paper.

I remember hearing once—I never wanted to hear again—a very pompous elderman who seemed to take great pleasure in introducing into his supplications a large number of unfamiliar words, who also sought by means of antitheses, alliterations, grandiloquent phrases, and other rhetorical devices to attract the attention of the hearers. As I listened for a while I felt that these verbal protections were not designed for heaven, but for earth, not for the Creator, but for the creature. This impression was deepened when I afterwards read a specimen of this gentleman's declamatory piety in print. It seemed evident that it had not its proper destiny, reported for a newspaper, to be admired and praised by those who regard devotion only as a literary effort. We had heard of that famous Boston preacher who was said to be the finest ever addressed to a Boston audience, but even that memorable performance "paled its intellectual fires" in the presence of the verbal convulsions and bombastic terminology which was declaimed suitable for the ear of him sick at heart as I listened to the close, and felt that "sacred silence" would have been more helpful to all serious souls than this glittering rhetoric, and this noisy and noisy-syllabled twaddle, which displayed more affectation than dependence, and more vanity than heartiness.

It seems to me that ministers cannot be too careful as to their manner in public prayer. In that solemn service they are seeking to voice the cares, woes, the trials and the sins of the people, and at the same time they are seeking an audience of the compassionate Father, who neither desires a enology from their lips, nor a parade of showy words. Surely their language, under such solemn circumstances, ought to be simple and easily understood on the part of those who are supposed to adopt it as it flows from the lips of the supplicant; and certainly it should gleam throughout with honesty and sincerity, presented as it is to a watery grave, where sham and abominations are out of place, and swelling expressions are equally intrusive, and scraps of poetry are incongruous as they would be in the mouth of a drowning man when calling on his friends to save him from a watery grave. Some ministers are discursive in their prayers, others are informal; some exhort, others are didactic, and others modestly suggest what is becoming in the Almighty, while others manifest a free and easy familiarity, which is absolutely incompatible with reverence. These things ought not to be.

The minister should always try to realize that praying is not preaching. The style, the action, and the voice appropriate to a spoken discourse, are not keeping with the more solemn privilege of supplications. It may be legitimate in the forms to startle the hearer by sudden excited climaxes, by bold figures, by gorgeousness of word-painting; and it may be pardonable, when trying to move him, to employ all the arts of the trained and conscientious orator. I have no criticism to offer on these points. The gifts of eloquence and the highest conferred on man; they are to be valued, and they are to be earnestly employed; but they were never designed by their Author as means of approach to a throne of grace. He is not to be startled, or roused, or terrified, and he is to be awayed by well-ordered and certainly never would be accomplished by declamation.

In prayer there should be absolute immobility. The position once taken, whether standing or kneeling, should be retained to the end. There should be no shuffling of the feet, no moving of the hands, no restless twitching of the fingers, no shaking of the head, and, in a word, no action whatever. The body should be as a thing forsaken. It should not be thrust before the worshiper, distracting his attention from the petitions being offered, and distracting the concentration between him and his God. Not the slightest gratulation should recall his existence. For the time being it should be extinct. The voice, also, should be subdued and low; firm and distinct, but never harsh or loud. Elocution, generally a snare, and in prayer almost a sacrifice, ought to be avoided. The attention given to varied modulation, to excessive emphasis, to musical intonations, renders difficult the due concentration of mind on the Supreme Being, whose presence and blessing are being sought. A merry song at a funeral is not more out of place than a declamatory invocation in prayer. Sometimes clergymen who are anxious to discharge with decent propriety all the functions of their sacred office go to professed teachers of the art of reading and speaking for instruction. These guides who make orators, or claim to do so, but have not been able to make themselves orators, undertake to show ministerial students how to pray, when, in many instances, they themselves are profoundly ignorant of its first principles. The public petitions which are fashioned and delivered by the minister, and which are generally suited in style, and distinguished more by sound than by sound sense, and as a whole are offensive to modesty and spirituality. My advice to our young ministers is, when they go to the altar for the first time, let them leave their education behind, and let the influence of their meekness, silver-tongued, euphonious, sonorous intonations, and their adagio, andante, staccato, crescendo and diminuendo. Thrust away such cheap artifices. The voice needs only the pathos that springs from real sympathy with the sorrows and sorrows of the world, and only the music that is born of spirituality, and the emphasis that comes from sincerity and earnestness; qualities these which no educationist can impart.

May I not be permitted to add in closing that the happiest phraseology for devotional purposes is to be derived from the scriptures; and that the clergyman cannot do better than to familiarize himself with their forms of expression. He will find them simple, and yet sublime, common, and yet impressive, reverential, and yet speaking the language of the heart, but decked with earthy images and metaphors. Taken together they come as near to the language of the soul as it is possible for words to come, and they never can be judiciously employed without enkindling devotion, and ever, precious to the Being worshipped—Standard.

When the history of music and musicians has been confined to the end of the present century, the position occupied by its master, Sir Julius Benedict, will be found in many respects without a parallel. To very few men, even eminent in several departments of art, is it given to celebrate their fiftieth annual concert, nor does a case frequently occur of a composer in his eightieth year producing an oratorio from his own pen. These facts alone would alone form a sufficient claim to honorable remembrance; but—still keeping aside Sir Julius Benedict's right to be considered as a representative musician of his time—there are other respects in which his career merits more than a passing notice. The opportunities which he has enjoyed of studying the works of the great composers, and the musical composition, we think, unique. Benedict knew Beethoven in 1827, and he had the honor of being not only a pupil, but friend of both Wagner and Hummel. Mendelssohn, who labored among the companions of his youth, and later on, while in Paris, was one of the most intimate terms with Rossini, Auber, Meyerbeer, Berlioz, Herold, Halévy, and others distinguished in the musical world. In our country, during his long and honorable career, he has been the friend, and a century later, the patron, of most of the eminent musicians of his time, and has gained for himself a position in our midst such as no foreigner has ever achieved in attaining since the days of Handel—Cassell's Family Magazine.

Excitement Unabated.
THAT REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE OF A ROCHESTER PHYSICIAN FULLY AUTHENTICATED.
Cleveland, O., Herald.
Yesterday and the day before we copied into our columns from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, a remarkable statement, made by J. B. Henion, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Henion recounted a wonderful experience which befell him, and the next day we published from the same paper a second article, giving an account of the "excitement in Rochester," caused by Dr. Henion's statement. It is doubtful if any two articles were ever published which caused greater commotion both among professional people and laymen.

Since the publication of those two articles, having been besieged with letters of inquiry, we sent a communication to Dr. Henion and also one to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if any additional proof could be given to us as to the validity of the statements published. In answer thereto we have received the following letters, which add interest to the entire subject and verify every statement hitherto made:

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
GENTLEMEN: Your favors received. The published statement, which you refer to in every respect, and I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which snatched me from the very brink of the grave. It is not surprising that people should be so interested in the subject, for my recovery was as great a marvel to myself, as to my physicians, and friends.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 21.
SIR: Acknowledging your kindly reminder, we would say: The best proof we can give you that the statements made by Dr. Henion are entirely true, and would not have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the best citizens of Rochester, and a card published by Rev. Dr. Hays, which you are at liberty to use if you wish.

H. H. WARNER & Co.

To Whom it may Concern:
In the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of December 31, there appeared a statement in the form of a card from Dr. J. B. Henion, of this city, recounting his remarkable recovery from Bright's disease of the kidneys, after several doctors of prominence had given him up, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. We are personally and by reputation acquainted with Dr. Henion, and we believe he would publish no statement not literally true. We are also personally and by reputation well acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of that remedy, whose commercial and personal standing in this community are of the highest order, and we believe that they would not publish a statement which were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

W. D. STUART, (ex-Surrogate Monroe County.)
E. H. FENNER, (ex-District Attorney Monroe County.)

J. S. MORRIS, (County Judge, Monroe Co.)
H. C. SHIPLEY, (Capitalist and Senator.)
W. F. ROWLEY, (ex-County Judge, Monroe Co.)
JOHN VAN VOORHIS, (ex-Member of Congress.)

To the Editor of the Living Church, Chicago, Ill.
There was published in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of the 31st of December, a statement made by J. B. Henion, M. D., narrating how he had been cured of Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in his last stages, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. I was referred to that statement, as having recommended and urged Dr. Henion to try the remedy, which he did, and was cured. The statement of Dr. Henion is true, so far as it concerns myself, and I believe it to be true in every other respect. He was a parishioner of mine, and I visited him in his sickness. I urged him to take the medicine and would do the same again to any one who was troubled with a disease of the kidneys and liver.

Religious Education.
In short, true religious education is not, and never can be, the sole work of any school, however good. Throughout the whole educational movement, especially of these latter days, many of us have lost sight of what true religious education is. We are a great deal too fond of dividing work into different departments; as if it were the business of a school to hammer the three R's, and as much else as it can be got to hold, into the child's head; the parent's business to feed, lodge, and clothe the child, and pay its school fees, till it can begin to earn a few shillings a week; the Sunday-school to provide its share of religious instruction; the church to provide for the religious life of the people, and the sense of obedience to high principles, the sense of respect we owe to God, can never be shut up in, and referred to, a mere department, as if it could be taught separately, like arithmetic. If it is any work, it is intended to pervade all things, all life. The spirit of religion is needed just as much in the Church, as in the school. The Church is not a sort of tank in which so much religion is stored, and out of which people may fill their own buckets if they are so inclined.

Religion is rather more like the rain without which no grass can grow, without which no fruit can swell, and like the dew which needs to fall over the woods and fields and gardens alike, and without which all natural life would be dried up. When we think of religious education, we think of the influence which should descend upon and pervade every so-called Christian society, having, in any but different forms, but having this one thing common: high goals, purposes, and effort to lead a righteous life, desire to know and to do the will of God, desire to do as they know and do what really are the laws by which we should be guided; desire to follow them, and not merely please ourselves. That which concerns our whole course and work is no more educational department confined to one section of instruction.

Religious education is this, or its opposite.

Temperance Physiology.
No doubt something will be gained by calling attention to the subject, but the question is, if the method proposed is the best that could be adopted. We doubt if the appeal to science through such teachers as we have, and such books as most of those that are now appearing, to meet the now emergency, is the best way of securing the end desired. What is wanted is to make the deepest and most intelligible impression upon the minds of youth in regard to the bad effects of indulgence in alcoholic beverages. But the student is not the best way to accomplish this object. The evils of intemperance are evils which only appear in conduct. The incontestable facts of the injurious influence of drinking are direct, palpable, conspicuous, observed by everybody, and open to question by no one. Science does not make them more clear, or add vividness to the painful facts which are seen by all. Good may come, as we have said, but it is a question if more good would not come from the dogmatic statement of facts, that are free from doubt and controversy, and that are based upon unquestionable and established experience. The subject in its scientific aspects is beyond the grasp of pupils in common schools, but maxims and rules can be stamped upon their minds in a way that will exert a salutary and permanent influence. And if it is desired to reach the victims of alcoholic indulgence, to be taken as object lessons, in which what the pupils see himself becomes the basis of the opinions he forms. Every community is full of examples of the effects of drinking, and the effects are all around us, in the streets, in the houses, in the schools, in the churches, in the homes, in the minds of the people. Let the scholars be directed to observe for themselves, and see how much truth they can find out on all sides of the subject; the exercise will at any rate be an excellent means of mental improvement and practical education.

THE ART OF EARLY RISING.—The proper time to rise, says the "Lancet," is when sleep ends. Sleeping should not be allowed to enter a state consisting in the sleeping or rest of all the several parts of the organism. Sometimes one and at other times another part of the body, as a whole, may be the least awake, and so the first to awake, or the most exhausted, and therefore the last to arise. The secret of good sleep is, the physiological conditions of rest being established, so to work and weary the several parts of the organism as to give them a proportionally equal need of rest at the same moment; and, to wake early and feel fresh, four and a half hours of sleep, if the sleepers should be secured; and the wise self-managers should not allow a drowsy feeling of the consciousness or weary senses, or an exhausted muscular system, to beguile him into the folly of going to sleep again when once he has wakened. After a very few days, of aroused action, the man who resolves not to doze, that is, not to allow some sleepy part of his body to keep him in bed after his brain has once awakened, will find himself, without knowing why, an early riser.—Popular Science Monthly.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1885.

Renewals are coming in freely by every mail. We do not wish to lose a single old friend, but intend to add many new ones this year.

In the City of Washington there is a population of 147,000, and 1040 places where liquor is sold by license—giving one dram shop to 144 inhabitants. A prohibitory law for that city is in demand.

The bill now pending in Congress for the reduction of postage on newspapers ought to become a law. The present rates are burdensome to publishers and a needless tariff upon the nation's greatest organ of influence and intelligence.

The work in all foreign mission fields seems to enjoy at present a hitherto unknown. Communicants in these missions increased in 1881-82 at a rate six times greater than in the home fields, and in 1882-83 at a rate nine times greater. And yet an occasional objector says converts in foreign fields are secured at a "rather high price." What complacent ignorance!

Bishop Keener left yesterday for the City of Mexico on an official visit to our missions there. He was present at the planting of that mission and has watched with prayerful interest its rapid, vigorous growth. Dr. Kelley will also attend the annual meeting of the mission, but will go by another route. We expect some characteristic correspondence from the Bishop's pen.

Rev. T. B. Holloman, writing from Yazoo City, says: "The session of our Conference made a fine impression on this community. Dr. Hoyte, the Presbyterian evangelist, followed on with good results, and we have made a most excellent beginning. Since Conference we have received eighteen members from different sources. In compliance with the appeal of Drs. Kelley and Young, I took up our foreign mission collection last Sunday, raising $55—an excess of five dollars over last year's report, with more to follow."

In holding church Conferences, when the disciplinary question is asked, "Is our church literature circulated and read?" we hope brethren will devise ways and means for extending the circulation of this ADVOCATE. One pastor writes that he has a congregation of forty members, in a good farming section, in which not a single copy of the paper is taken, and asks what can be done. We would advise the appointment of an active committee of ladies to canvass the entire membership for subscribers, and that the pastor give them all possible aid and encouragement. Send to this office for sample copies.

An effort is being made in New York City to start a new daily paper that shall avoid sensational accounts of social scandals and the doings of the criminal classes. Whether or not the venture will prove an immediate success, it is worthy of trial. We are not averse to a full publication of the news. The evil is not so much in printing accounts of murders, larcenies, arson, perjuries, etc., as in their display. They are dressed up in jocular, ribald phrase, while other items of news find the barest mention. It is the embellishment of crime that is to be deplored, and for which our great city dailies are sometimes censurable.

The disestablishment of the Church of England will possibly become somewhat of an issue in the next parliamentary election. Against the state connection of the church there has been a rapidly growing sentiment for years. It is now sufficiently strong to materially affect the complexion of the incoming Parliament, which will be elected under the new franchise and redistribution laws. Much of the recent discussion on the modification of the House of Lords was aimed at the severance of Church and State—the retirement of the Archbishops and Bishops from that upper chamber and their participation in matters of political legislation. As the cause of Christ will doubtless be conserved by the independence of the church, we hail the prospect of disestablishment with unalloyed pleasure.

What is Christian Education?

Bishop McTear has reopened an inquiry as to the function and limit of State education that will doubtless lead to much discussion. Denominational institutions, it is argued, languish because State colleges offer free tuition to all students, and are generally sustained by the public treasury. This statement, therefore, becomes a double plea—on the one hand, to wealthy churchmen to endow denominational institutions, and, on the other, to the State to confine her educational work to a common school curriculum. Into that discussion we have no purpose now to enter. If the State hinders the church in her mission as an educator, the hindrance should be removed. Christ and Caesar should be at peace and their duties never allowed to conflict.

But back of this controversy, and helpful to its right understanding, is the question, What is Christian education? If it is the province and function of the church to educate, how is she to discharge this duty? In what respects are her methods to vary from undenominational or State schools? These are very pertinent inquiries, and lie at the root of this discussion. If the same textbooks are taught, the same round of duties observed and the same influences exercised in State and Church institutions, there is no need for both. The money expended in elaborate buildings and in general equipment is a reckless waste. Unless the church school is conducted on some different plan, and proposes something more and better than mere scholastic drill, then all our eloquence about Christian education is the emptiest cant.

The theory is that, while the best literary advantages are offered, the church school will, in addition and with special effort, aim at the conversion and spiritual culture of the student; that, together with mental discipline, there shall be heart training. The school-room becomes, therefore, the annex of the church and each teacher a co-pastor. An education is thus received in an atmosphere so strongly and positively religious as to secure the largest possible results to the kingdom of God. To educate independently of and without regard to such an influence and result is a gross breach of parental fidelity. The dangers thereof are not to be overestimated.

Now, in endeavoring to meet this grave responsibility, the church must be careful in the administration of her schools. They must be officered not only by scholars apt to teach, but by Christians zealous to communicate. The church has no more use for irreligious teachers in the school-room than in the pulpit. Whatever their scholastic attainments, and however grandly they may adorn a certain department in other institutions, the church has no place for them. She must see to it that the education she offers is positively and thoroughly Christian. If not, her colleges are a misnomer and their patronage falsely secured. Mere textual drill can be secured in other schools. We urge parents and guardians to patronize our institutions because spiritual and moral training will receive special and prayerful emphasis. It is stated in high commendation of the administration of Dr. McCosh that in the eight years of his presidency of Princeton College but four young men have graduated unbelievers. The history of church schools as to conversions and the development of religious character needs to be written.

And what of denominational influence? Much is anxiously said against "sectarian schools;" but, if by that is meant denominational institutions, we have a word to say. Why a church should spend thousands in constructing and equipping a college, and then advertise that no special denominational influence is exercised, we fail to understand. If not, then the Presbyterians and Baptists can do our educating for us without the necessity of spending so much money in brick and mortar. Roman schools make or retain Romanists, and we do not blame them. And Protestants who patronize them, thinking no ecclesiastical bias is given or attempted, are too innocent of history to be entrusted with the training of children. And so we are to do Methodist work. The preacher appointed at Conference to the presidency of a college is the pastor of that student body. As such, he must have the same spiritual solicitude for their salvation as any other preacher in the Conference for the souls in his congregation. If he hasn't, and if his efforts in that direction are not earnest and constant, he has forgotten or mistaken a Divine call to the ministry.

These are important considerations, and may be pondered to profit. When we determine the sphere and practice of the church as an educator, the relation of State and denominational schools is easily ascertained.

Romanists Becoming Prohibitionists.

We have no disposition to withhold commendation from anyone or any class when deserved. It, therefore, gives us pleasure to note the improved attitude and more pronounced utterances of the Roman Catholic Church on the temperance question. The unparalleled agitation the past few years has affected that great organization to such an extent that her Bishops and councils are speaking out on the subject in no uncertain sound. When we remember that a large majority of those engaged in the liquor business in this country are immediately or remotely connected with the Catholic Church, their movement against the traffic is most significant. In all the public declarations of her Bishops, temperance has been urged, but all insisted that moral suasion was the most effective and proper means of reform. Their appeal has been made to the drinker, with scarcely a word to the seller. But now there is a change, and their efforts are being directed against the business. Cardinal Manning, of England, said recently: "I impeach the liquor traffic of high crimes and misdemeanors against the commonwealth, and I ask you, in the name of common sense and common justice, can you withhold from those entrusted with the high responsibility of the ballot the power of applying their votes in the form of a veto when it is proposed, without consulting them, to put in the midst of them these places for the sale of intoxicating drinks?" These are strong words; but the distinguished theologian advances even to a higher position and ranges himself with the most pronounced and ultra prohibitionists. He concludes:

It is mere mockery to ask us to put down drunkenness by moral and religious means when the legislature facilitates the multiplication of intemperate to intemperance on every side. You might as well call upon me as the captain of a sinking ship, and say, "Why don't you pump the water out?" when you are scuttling the ship in every direction.

That paragraph will do to show to your Catholic neighbor who has been denouncing all this fanaticism and folly.

But even more significant is the formal deliverance of the Plenary Council, in recent session in the city of Baltimore. Composed of all the Archbishops and many other leading representative prelates of the church in America, it spoke by authority. Read the following:

And we not only direct the attention of all pastors to the repression of this abuse, but we also call upon them to induce all their flocks that may be engaged in the sale of liquor to abandon, as soon as they can, the dangerous traffic, and to embrace a more becoming way of making a living.

Now, if that admonition has back of it sufficient conscience for its enforcement, we may expect a wholesale closing of saloons. Indeed, if the Romanists can be induced to retire from the business, it will at once almost cease to be a business. And this we affirm, on the authority of Father O'Connor, of New York, who says that of the 7,000 licensed saloon keepers of that city, 6,500 are Irish and German Catholics.

At the formal opening of the new Roman Catholic Church of the Paulist Fathers, a few days ago, there was a grand temperance demonstration. All the Father Mathew Total Abstinence Societies, numbering thirty-three, were in attendance. There was a congregation of between six thousand and eight thousand people, and three of the most eminent prelates in America were present by special invitation to address the meeting—Bishop Keane, of Richmond, Va., Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, Ill., and Bishop Ireland, of St. Paul, Minn. The last-named discussed the liquor traffic and its effect upon politics and the Sabbath. Right eloquently did he plead for rigid prohibitory statutes and their vigorous, impartial enforcement. He closed his powerful, impassioned appeal with these words:

"It cheers me to see six thousand to eight thousand citizens of New York here, showing their interest in the work of temperance. The Catholic Church has spoken well her wish on this question, and the mandate has gone forth from the Plenary Council that the Sunday laws must be observed, and Catholics must seek to secure even more stringent laws. The words of the church should be ever-present in the minds of Catholics. Priests and Bishops must labor to induce Catholics in the liquor traffic to leave it and to get some other way of obtaining a livelihood. God grant that the word may be listened to! God grant that in New York it may soon be said that Catholics are leaving the liquor traffic!"

If other prelates will follow the lead of Bishop Ireland, the mandate of the Plenary Council will be enforced, for he has publicly announced in his diocese that communion will be refused liquor sellers.

And now we conclude this volume of striking and gratifying testimony with an editorial extract from the Catholic Temperance Advocate. It has a clear and melodious ring. Nothing has been more tersely stated by any Protestant writer. It must be that we are hailing the dawn of a better day. It says:

There are some people who think that prohibitionists should walk very gingerly lest they should tread on some poor rum seller's toes. "Are you sure," they say, "that you have a right to interfere with the liquor traffic?" We answer: "The right of a man to drink liquor under his own roof may be undisturbed; at any rate, prohibition does not touch that right. Prohibition only says, When you throw open that door and invite the passersby to drink, and when two hundred years of experience prove that by so doing you double my taxes and make it dangerous for my child to tread on those streets, I have a right to say whether you shall open the door or not. I don't care whether you sell alcohol or roast beef—it does not matter. All I know is that, if you undertake to sell something that doubles my taxes, and that makes my passage through the streets more dangerous, you at once invest me with the right to interfere, and, if any grog seller can stand here and show, in the face of an intelligent people, that he is right, under an idea of a democratic government, to flinch from my pocket and make my passage through the streets unsafe, in order that he may catch other men's sins into his gold, let him try it."

Gladstone and Gordon.

In some observations, last week, on the fall of Khartoum and the untimely death of Gen. Gordon we ventured to dissent from the indiscriminate criticism of the press upon the Gladstone government and its responsibility therefor. Subsequent reflection and reading have only confirmed the justice of our dissent and the unwisdom of popular criticism. Censure is usually administered recklessly and praise with wild extravagance. When the victory of Gen. Stewart near Metemneh was first reported and the gunboats from Khartoum brought news from Gen. Gordon there was great rejoicing, and Gladstone's star was in the ascendant. But when the cables of next day were freighted with sorrowful tidings from this beleaguered brave the ministry was loudly denounced and the resignation of Mr. Gladstone defiantly demanded. These, however, are the outbursts of passion when the public mind is inflamed over an unexpected or supposed calamity. By the time Parliament meets, a few weeks hence, we may expect a calmer national temper, and that the traditional English conservatism of sentiment will be dominant.

Many of the embarrassments of the present government were inherited from the Beaconsfield administration. This is especially true of the difficulties which have environed Egyptian affairs. The people were ready to revolt at the excessive taxes levied to pay foreign bondholders, while English capitalists were exciting the public mind at home in favor of protecting their imperiled millions. Then followed the rebellion of Arabi and the expense of its suppression.

The troubles in Soudan succeeded the overthrow and capture of Arabi. A number of tribes revolted under the leadership of El Mahdi, who has bewitched them with an assumption of prophetic inspiration. Now, it must be remembered that England has never governed Soudan nor claimed authority over the people. Military posts here and there have been occupied for the protection of commerce. Beyond this England had no interest or purpose there. Mr. Gladstone, therefore, determined to ignore the Soudanese rebellion and withdraw from the country. This policy Gen. Gordon severely denounced and volunteered to go unattended by any army, and by personal persuasion satisfy the chiefs and restore peace. A mission so humane and philanthropic was everywhere applauded, and Gen. Gordon was allowed to go and test the virtue of his theory and the talismanic power of his presence. He went, and with what result we too sadly know. But after the failure of his mission was apparent he was advised to leave Khartoum, to which he replied in these words: "I shall hold on here as long as I can, and if I can suppress the rebellion, I shall do so. If I can not, I shall retire to the equator, and leave you the indelible disgrace of abandoning the garrisons." He furthermore added that he could "hold out a year." Now, when these facts are considered the course of the Gladstone government is less obnoxious to vehement criticism. Indeed, our opinion remains unchanged that in broad, philosophical statesmanship, united with vast scholarship, lofty Christian purpose and profound piety, the present premier of England is without a peer in the world's politics.

When he retires from office the grandest parliamentary figure of this generation will cease to be.

The Truth Well Told.

In one of our exchanges we find this pithy paragraph:

"The church would make a long advance if she could at once settle in her mind the conviction that she is not patronizingly assisting the forlorn band of missionary pensioners, that she is not aiding secretaries or Boards, that she is not compassionating nations as such inferior races of men; but that she is doing the work to which she is called by her Redeemer, and to which, in every syllable of her creed and every utterance of her vows, she is pledged."

But just that discrimination is made by few; hence the criticism and complaint we hear daily. The officers of these Boards are not appreciated as simply the authorized, commissioned representatives of the church, but as the personal advocates of a cause to be aided or neglected at pleasure. To make a home application—How often do we hear such expressions as these: "I see Dr. Young is calling for money, and I'll have to help him a little." "Dr. Kelley is a zealous, able man, and I always liked him; so you can put me down for a contribution." Now, these gentlemen are not flattered by such expressions because they discover in them a gross, humiliating misconception of spiritual obligation. Personally, they are not to be helped or applauded, neglected or censured. Their administration should be reviewed, and, if unsatisfactory, they should be removed. But in office they are the church's chosen representatives, and, as such, deserve and demand unvarying, liberal, loyal, prayerful support. To do that is to honor Christ and show forth our true allegiance to his cause. We are not aiding individuals or expressing personal preferences, but obeying the commands of our Lord and honoring the imperatives of a true spiritual loyalty.

American Influence in Turkey.

Under this title Dr. Wm. H. Ward contributes an able article to The Independent. He wrote from Midhat, Mesopotamia, and gave the results of his own observations. His strong testimony as to the gratifying success of American missions in the land of the Saracen is at once a refutation of the silly objections of those who prate about the failure and expensiveness of foreign missions, and an eloquent appeal to the church to larger liberality and greater diligence in prosecuting her work abroad. And Dr. Ward found that the results of mission labor were not confined to statistical tables—the number of conversions, baptisms and probationers. But in all directions—in moulding public thought, in liberalizing political institutions, in reforming social customs, in improving methods of commerce and agriculture, etc.—their work was telling upon the general progress of the nation. He met the graduates of our American Robert College at Constantinople in the highest positions in the government, and many of these declared that but for that college important offices now held by natives would be filled by Russians. In the interior cities American missionaries set the fashions in almost everything. They first introduced potatoes, tomatoes, (called "red egg-plant") window-glasses, chairs, tables, bureaus and roomy houses outside the city limits. They also afford models of teaching and preaching to the other churches, especially the Armenian. The English language is most popular and has been everywhere introduced by Americans.

In confirmation of our recent reply to a certain objector to foreign missions because they were burdensome—expensive—rather high-priced—we are glad to add the clear testimony of Dr. Ward. This short extract is to the point:

I have found that it is not their converts only whom the American missionaries are converting, but the whole community about them; that they are the great, and, I may say, the only power at work to civilize the land. One of our party, who had seen in Greece the differences and quarrels of missionaries, and their failure to accomplish anything of value, and who had come to imagine that missions must be a failure everywhere, has told me how "astonished" he was when, in a trip of exploration in Central Asia Minor, last year, he would find in villages after villages, and town after town, the work of American Christian missions meeting him as he was searching for Greek inscriptions. The American who loves his God and his native land will be moved almost to tears of joy as he sees what America is to this land.

This is the true temperance creed:

"Mental suasion for the man who thinks,
Moral suasion for the man who drinks,
Legal suasion for the drunkard suaver,
Prison suasion for the statute breaker."

Death of Rev. J. H. Shelton.

A note from Rev. S. J. Cotton, dated Angulla, Sharkey county, Miss., February 12, brings us this sad news:

"Rev. J. H. Shelton, of the Mississippi Conference, died last night shortly before midnight. He passed away calmly as falling asleep." And thus for the fourth time our Conference has been bereaved since the recent session at Yazoo City. In a few short weeks four comrades sleep on the tented field. Bro. Shelton's health had not been robust for several years, and at the last Conference he was given the superannuated relation. He was a preacher of ability and had rendered long and faithful service to the church. Yet in the prime of life, we had hoped for him many more years of itinerant labor. Dignified in bearing, gentle in manner, and strong in his attachments, he won to himself a large circle of friends. In the pulpit he was clear in exposition, sound in doctrinal statement and often forceful in exhortation. He understood thoroughly our Arminian system of theology and subscribed without reserve to its every syllable. In death he illustrated the power of the gospel he had preached through life. A postal just received from Rev. W. L. C. Hunt, of this conference, says: "His dying testimony was, 'Christ is the only hope for sinners. All our works, when we have done our best, can avail nothing save through his merits.'" We shall expect a more faithful tribute to his life and labors from some Conference comrade familiar with his itinerant career. As our brethren are falling on every hand and so rapidly, we are warred to labor diligently while it is yet day, for the night is hastening.

From Ruston Circuit.

The work on the Homer district has opened well. There is encouragement in the fact that six district stewards came to the district stewards' meeting. The first Quarterly Conference for Ruston circuit was largely attended. Ruston is of rapid growth and is fast becoming a place of great commercial importance. The court-house is now located here; there are several fine hotels; the Methodist Church—a handsome structure—is moving on to completion, and there is a large school building, where Rev. Mr. Friley, assisted by Bro. Ives, conducts a school of nearly one hundred pupils. The merchants have come mostly from Trenton and Vienna, and as every one in business knows are among the most reliable and honorable in the State. It is true that the universal curse—the saloon—is found in Ruston as elsewhere, but the leading citizens are of the highest moral character, and we can not think that the traffic in the liquid fire will be allowed here much longer. Bro. Pearce, a progressive Christian gentleman, edits the Ruston Calligraph. These Ruston folks all seem to have comfortable and, in not a few cases, elegant residences, with wide streets in front of them, and abundance of yard and garden room around them. We noticed a whole neighborhood of homes that would be no discredit to St. Charles Avenue or Prytania Street. The District Conference is to be held here in the summer, by which time, judging from the past, the town will have extended her borders and added many more to her population. We heard of no houses to rent, and it is a very difficult matter to get board. It is thought that Ruston has a future, and we pray that God may take possession. The Methodist pastor, Rev. J. H. Stone, has a good field for labor, and so soon as the church is completed, the class and prayer meetings started, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at work, there will surely be fruit to the glory of God. The people of Ruston circuit are a live people, and we confidently look for a perfect report from them at the Baton Rouge Conference, i. e., all the collection raised and the pastor paid in full. Today, with Bro. W. W. Guthrie, we leave our genial, whole-souled host, Bro. Lee M. Kidd and his accomplished wife, in order to hold the Vernon Quarterly Conference tomorrow.

Obituaries.

DRUMMOND-THOMAS W. DRUMMOND was born in West Tennessee, January 18, 1831. He grew up to manhood and engaged in business in his native State, remaining there for some years. Afterward he removed to Mississippi, and in the counties of Warren, Scott and Hinds, he made his home until his death occurred in the last named, near Edwards, January 10, 1885.

Mrs. Drummond was a woman of religious principles, and one who loved to be thankful recognizing the blessing which had been to him. His early manhood was religious, and it was only in middle life or beyond that he gave himself to the service of God. His conversion to Christianity was effected in the year 1874, under the ministry of Rev. J. M. Weems. That conversion was bright, clear and joyous, a blessed realization of God's grace, satisfying to his own heart and convincing to others. His confession of Christ was followed by a marked change in his hopes and aims, and he devoted his life to the love of God and the cause of Christ.

Bro. Drummond was a man of marked features of character. He spent a useful life in agricultural pursuits, in which God blessed him with more than ordinary success. He made a fine soldier in the army of his country, and he lived at home at the close of the war to find his former accumulations swept away, with a brave heart he went to work again.

In the social circle he was entertaining and instructive. He was scrupulously faithful in all his dealings with his fellow-men. He was refined in his feelings, and always you felt that you were in the presence of a Christian gentleman. In the house of God he was an attentive and interested listener, and therein most helpful to his pastor. When he was taken away the earthly life of a good citizen, a loving father and husband, came to a close.

For some time before his death he was the subject of lingering, wearying disease, the victim of consumption; and he went to different places, to Virginia, Tennessee, Texas, seeking the restoration of his health. But, in December last he came home knowing that his course was run. All along desiring to live, for he was bound close to the associations of life, yet he left resigned to the will of God.

In those last days his faith had firm hold on the realities of the heavenly world. He felt that to depart would be to dwell with Christ. He seemed to be waiting just outside the gates. The promises of God were precious to him, and to his heart of faith the hopes of another world were as actual as the realities of this one. Among his last words were, "All is glorious." He died in the peace and hope which Christ gives, and amid the fond regrets and benedictions of all who knew him.

HARRIS-HEWARD EUGENE, son of R. E. and Mattie Harris, of Coldwater, Tate county, Miss., was born June 16, 1883, and died December 8, 1884. Little Heward had been sick a good part of his stay below, and suffered intensely several weeks before God took him to heaven. He believed, and lived while on earth, now a beautiful angel in our Father's house. Lord, comfort and direct his parents. May they be religious in this world and useful in the church of Christ, as to meet their child.

SAVAGE-JAMES A. SAVAGE was born in South Carolina September 20, 1825. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church while young. He was married twice, and leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their loss. He died December 20, 1884. Brother Savage was for many years a consistent member of the church of God. I know him to love him for his earnest piety and sterling worth. I have never known a man who stood higher in any community as a man of solid worth, the strictest integrity and simple, unaffected piety, than did Bro. James Savage. In the community where he lived for nearly forty years, those who had known him for only a few years and those who had known him from boyhood, bear the same testimony to his worth—that he was a prudent man, a true man, a good man, a man of God. He had a high regard for the church, and held at different times all the offices at the disposal of the preacher in charge and Quarterly Conferences, and in all things he was faithful. He was regular in his attendance upon the services of the church, and conscientious in his contributions to the cause of God. He had the confidence of the unconverted in his community—they regarded him truly as a man of God.

During our meeting at Pleasant Hill Church in Winston county, Miss., near his home, in August, 1884, he was regular in his attendance. He would praise the Lord for blessings received, and express his desire for a holier life. Within less than six months after the meeting closed he passed away. God moves in a mysterious way, but he makes no mistakes. All his works are done in wisdom and righteousness; blessed be his holy name! He was sick about two months, and after the most excruciating pain "he fell on sleep." His last was all peace and joy. Our loss is his eternal gain. He left a living testimony to the power of Jesus to save; a living testimony extending through a long series of years; a living testimony clear and bright; a living testimony borne under the cloud and the sunlight, borne in adversity and affliction, borne under trials that try men's souls, and under all circumstances it was the same clear testimony—Jesus saves. Jesus sustains. Jesus keeps. His family will feel his loss, the church will feel his loss, the community will feel his loss. The world is poorer and heaven is richer in a good man's death.

BELL—Miss ALICE E. BELL, daughter of J. P. Rogers and Martha E. Smith, died in Washington county, Miss., November 23, 1884. Her death was such as her friends had a right to expect, and proves again that Methodist also well, and illustrates once more the glorious results of religious association and training in childhood. She was born in the year 1867, under the ministry of Rev. J. M. Weems. That conversion was bright, clear and joyous, a blessed realization of God's grace, satisfying to his own heart and convincing to others. His confession of Christ was followed by a marked change in his hopes and aims, and he devoted his life to the love of God and the cause of Christ.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Feb. 10.—Rev. Sam Jones, the Georgia evangelist, closed a week's labors here last night. The effect of his services has been phenomenal. Four meetings a day in a church seating a thousand people, have been daily so crowded that standing room could not always be obtained. Every grade of society has been constant attendance, and nearly three hundred converts from all classes attest the power of his seven days' work. He goes hence to Charleston, S. C. Seven hundred and fifty dollars were raised by general subscription and presented to him here.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 10.—Brazil (Ind.) special says: An explosion occurred at 6 o'clock this morning in the Central Iron and Steel Works. Mayor Collins, owner. Four men were killed, eight dangerously wounded, and a large number slightly.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 13.—The fire last night at the almshouse entirely destroyed that portion of the institution set apart for the insane. During the night many insane persons were found wandering in different parts of the city, some nearly naked. The poor creatures generally seemed unable to understand the situation, and in some cases begged their captors pitiously not to throw them into the river; others seemed to take it a grand joke, and laughed gleefully when the captors were found to-day in the ruins. They were removed to the deadhouse, and placed side by side with the bodies of the seven allocated, and removed from the building last night. After a day's thorough search the almshouse authorities are convinced that the eighteen bodies alluded to, all of whom occupied cells on the third floor of the building, are all that perished, and that all the other 608 inmates were rescued, and are now in custody in other departments of the building.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The bill for the putting of Gen. Grant on the retired list of the army was defeated in the House to-day.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The Daily News appears this morning mourning for Gen. Gordon, and publishes the following from Gakul: "Natives who escaped from Khartoum say Gen. Gordon was killed while in the act of leaving his house to rally his faithful troops. The latter were cut down to a man, and for hours the best part of town was a scene of mourning and wailing, not even women and children being spared. All the notables were killed, except the treacherous pashas and their followers."

The following additional details of the killing of Gen. Gordon and the fall of Khartoum are at hand. "On the day of the capture, which is variously given as the 26th and 27th of January, Gen. Gordon's attention was attracted by a tremendous tumult in the streets. He left the so-called palace or government building, in which he had made his headquarters, to ascertain the cause of the disturbance. Just as he reached the street he was stabbed in the back and fell dead. The tumult was caused by the Mahdi's troops, who had gained access to the interior of the town through treachery and were soon in complete possession of the place, including the citadel. A fearful massacre of the garrison followed. The scenes of slaughter are described as surpassing the Bulgarian atrocities and revealing the worst horrors of the Sepoy mutiny. The panic-stricken Egyptians were captured in flight and put to death with the most fiendish torture. Some were transfixed with spears and then killed by death. Most of the victims were mutilated in a horrible manner. Eyes were gouged out, noses slit and tongues torn out by the roots. In many cases mutilated parts of victims' bodies were thrust into their mouths while they were still living. After the slaughter, many Arabs were seen rushing about the streets with heads of Egyptians impaled upon their spears. The next night was spent in a saturnalia of blood and debauchery. Since the capture of Khartoum the Mahdi repaired the fortifications and made the place well nigh impregnable. He has made it his permanent headquarters, and is said to have abundance of guns, small arms and ammunition.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—Gen. Gordon, before his departure on his mission to the Sudan, told a personal friend, who now makes the story public, that he would never return from Khartoum was distinct and he could not touch it. Throughout the entire life, he said, he had been strongly and correctly affected by presentiments. During his military career in China he was guided by them but never, even in the most perilous, had he men of that eventful period, had he been in the presentiment which covered him with its shadow, before he started for Khartoum Gen. Gordon virtually bestowed upon his chosen friends all his trinkets and mementoes.

Gen. Earle was killed Tuesday during the storming of the enemy's position at Berli. The British troops advanced to attack the enemy, who held a strong position on the hills. The fighting lasted five hours. There was great slaughter among the enemy. Those who survived escaped by swimming the river.

PAMS, Feb. 11.—De Losseppe, in an interview, says he cannot say if the English expedition dropped to failure. It may reach Khartoum, but the Sudanese will not submit, and the English, in going or returning, will fall a prey to hundreds of thousands of fanatics who are ready to die.

NEW GLASGOW, N. S., Feb. 11.—Last night an explosion occurred in an oil pit of the Vale colliery, seven miles from this place. Twenty-two men were killed in the colliery at the time of the explosion. Thirteen perished. The others were taken out alive, some of them badly injured. Most of the victims have large families, and the scene around the mouth of the shaft was heartrending as the bodies came up from the mine and others attribute the explosion to the sudden opening or closing of a heavy iron door of gas, which, rushing out, was ignited by the lamps on the caps of the men.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—A telegram was received at the War Office to-day from Gen. Wolke. He sends an account of the fall of Khartoum, as given by a native eye-witness to the entrance of the rebels into the town. Khartoum, this informant says, was entered by El Mahdi's forces at daybreak, Jan. 26. Gen. Gordon was killed by a volley from rebel riflemen while on his way from his headquarters to the Austrian consulate. The Austrian consul was killed in his residence, and the Greek consul is held a prisoner by El Mahdi.

The press association states under reserve that late Saturday night the War Office sent telegrams to Mias Gordon, at Southampton, to the effect that Khartoum had not fallen and Gen. Gordon was safe.

LIGHT AND LOVE.

The light
Gives many shades, and each shade to the sun;
The shadows are many, the sunlight is one.
Life is a rainbow still fluctuating: God's love does not
And his love is unchanged when it changes our lot.
Looking up to this light, which is common to all,
And down to those shadows, on each side, that fall,
In time's silent circle, as various for each,
It is thrilling to know that they never can reach
So far, that light lies beyond them forever!—
—Owen Meredith.

Symmetry in Religion.

BY REV. W. H. ANDERSON, D. D.

Symmetry is correct arrangement of parts to preserve order, beauty, strength. It is observance of rule to effect harmony, to inspire agreeable emotions. A tree is symmetrical when proportion of trunk and limbs is present. Symmetry is seen in the animal form, where there are mutual adjustment and dependence, and where arrangement and order, development and comparative size have reference to some wise and benevolent design. In this regard the human body is the most symmetrical of all material things, because designed to be the magnificent home of the immortal mind. It is God's complete specimen of created material substance, indeed the crowning act of creation itself. Symmetry in mind is relative and mutual culture, development and use. Thought, emotion, will, should act in uninterrupted harmony. Each power or faculty of mind should receive its own proper education and employment to preserve the proportions and harmony of brain creations. Mental statuary should be harmonious with itself and its surrounding. Any undue development of one department of mind may break up the general harmony. The head, body and limbs must preserve proper proportion while the position or posture, the expression of the face or the associated gesture impresses us with mental action or fixed character. No where is symmetry of greater beauty and larger value than in religion. Religion is the association of mind and heart and strength by divine love in God's service. Mind studies God in his works and word, appreciates the reason and the excellence of his claims on the homage, trust and obedience of created intelligences. Mind recognizes the lovely adaptation of truth and promise and provision to human wants and necessities. The heart loves the goodness and mercy of heaven to man. The will accepts and purposes to obey the requirements of God. The character is adorned by grace and the life is consecrated by the truth and spirit of God. It marks the divine beauty of our holy religion if the intellect alone is chitly cultivated. Thought, though grand and towering, may be but a huge aggregation of intellectual icebergs. They glow in the sunlight like huge gems, but their breath is chilling, their touch is death-like. Religion proposes to have man in his triple nature—soul, body and spirit. To cleanse from sin, afford moral purity and inspire a new, divine life within the soul that shall illustrate its beauty and power in lofty character and useful, happy life. All intellect could not accord with the claims and uses of religion. The truths searched for in the Bible, in the revelations of providence and of grace by the intellect, must be accepted by the loving, trusting soul. Love must vivify them and incorporate them in character and interweave them in active religious life.

Religion is largely a matter of the affection. The heart is the home of love and trust, of fidelity and consecration. Love is the divine definition of God, and God's family mark on all his spiritual children, "God is love." Love is the fulfilling of the law. "They that dwell in love dwell in God, and he in them," and many other Scriptures express the same. Love is the great principle of God's spiritual world as gravity is of the material world. Simple, sublime, mighty in nature and results. Love rejoices to obey, to labor, to suffer as his will may direct. Love measures success and determines value and defines happiness as God is honored in the acceptance of his truth and obedience of his will. To make our religion all emotion, regardless of the teachings of reason, the calls of duty, the action of correct principle, obedience to the monitor of the Spirit, would make us live in dream-land and utterly disqualify us for our solemn duties and, indeed, rob us of some of our higher and sober pleasures. If emotion were the standard of religious life, it would be to have no fixed standard at all. It would rob reason of its noble offices and substitute mere glow for principle. Religious life would be ever varying and religion loose some of its chief attractions of its consistency and stability. Emotions are glorious pulsations of love, joy, hope. They spring from truth accepted, duty done, grace revealed, a sense of the approbation and blessing of heaven. These emotions are in harmony with the blessedness of the gospel and themselves foretastes of heaven. Some make religion to consist largely in pious efforts, in holy attempts. It is true a holy life, a consecrated existence, is the design and ultimate standing of religion; but religious principles, directing and harmonizing with holy emotions and sacred purposes, are necessary harbingers and inviolable attendants of this devoted life. Without the light of well-digested, well-arranged truth, action would be ill directed or irregular; without the solace of the promise and spirit of God, hope could not cheer the soul with songs of gladness; without the blood and intercession of Jesus, the soul would sink under its load of care and toil. The divinest carving in all of heaven's statuary is in the character, life and labors of our divine Lord. Sense of personal responsibility humbly, but trustfully, associates with help from on high. Prayer for divine aid keeps pace with individual effort for resistance of temptation as well as for benefit to others. The human and the divine blended in him their loveliness and power and constituted him the world's redeemer. It is our privilege and our duty to take him as our model. No asceticism mingles with his piety. He honors the marriage at Cana with his presence and first miracle; he loved the family at Bethany; he had three favored disciples.

Symmetry in religion is daily piety, not impulsive, erratic, spasmodic in character and influence. It remembers that Israel wandered forty years before they reached Canaan, and does not attempt to get ready for heaven in a single day. It honors truth and Jesus, and loves heaven, and trusts in the aid of the Holy Spirit. It does not judge itself by mere frames or states, but by its plans, every-day living. It impresses itself on the public mind by its humility and patience, gentleness and perseverance. Its presence is a continued Sabbath and an impressive and convincing "evidence of Christianity."

Human nature is seen in its weakness leaning on the almighty arm. Sin, though it still tempts and annoys, is restrained in its work of death, and the grace of God is more lovely because of his blessed contact with human wants and woes. Symmetry in religion is God's lovely revelation of the power of his truth, the glory of his grace. It presents in beautiful harmony "the love of God, the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the communion of the Holy Ghost," each person of the Godhead engaged in human salvation. The loftiest efforts of genius, the most splendid creations of thought, the grandest treasures of learning associate with the most childlike trust and filial love at the cross of Christ. The Holy Trinity is engaged in polishing gems for Christ's coronal and triumph, educating citizens of heaven for their reward in the royal and priestly honors of God's glorious home forever.

CARLE, Kentucky.

Whoever Hath Not—Lost.

BY REV. J. B. A. AHNES, D. D.

"Whoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath."—Matthew xiii, 12.

The peculiar undulation, or, as it is familiarly called, the hog-wallow condition, of the Texas prairies led me to inquire for the cause. An old settler explained it. During a protracted drought the ground, at intervals of twenty or thirty feet, cracks, forming deep clefts. Subsequently, during the rainy season, the apertures are rarely ever fully filled. Puddles are formed, preventing vegetation to take root. In the course of time the elevated surroundings accumulate matter and develop into hillocks while the indentures proportionally deepen. Behold, said a traveling companion, an illustration of the text: "Whoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath."

Many years this text and illustration occupied my thoughts. The meaning, doubtless, is, that grace is being withheld for grace. Whoever truly yearns for truth will be satisfied. But each gratification begets increased desire for more. On the other hand, if the heart is devoid of an honest longing for light, if hypocrisy is at home in the soul, if it is studded with "hog-wallows," in which worldliness, vanity, enmity, lust and deceit, Satanic vermin, creep and crawl, the capacity for apprehending and appreciating religious truth will gradually decrease, finally cease, so that with open eyes man sees not, and hears not with open ears. Saving faith can not be acquired nor maintained unless we honestly and earnestly will comply with the requirements of our Lord and God.

There is a condition of the human heart analogous to that of physical putrescence. Not long ago I witnessed the attempt of the police to lift a corpse from the waters of the Mississippi to the shore. But the body was already much decomposed. The weather had kept the constituent members in shape; but as soon as a human hand laid hold on them they became disjointed. The hand was filled with foul matter. No hold. Some men are morally equally decomposed. No hold. No basis on which to build; no soil in which to plant.

A few years ago the intelligence reached our shore that the King of Wurtemberg, a Protestant, had joined the Roman Catholic Church. I mentioned it to Doctor, now Bishop, Parker, and remarked that, presumably, as the king had become cognizant and conscious of his sinful state, and lost condition he had vainly sought for instruction and comfort in the Lutheran, or State, Church. The impressive exterior of the Roman Church had beguiled the sin-sick king. The Bishop did not fully agree with me. He remarked that, according to the evangelical construction of the plan of salvation, it required a certain amount of will power in order to attain to the life in Christ Jesus. It required turning away from sin and turning to Christ. Though a sinner could not possibly save himself by anything he might do, nevertheless, in order to be saved, he had to do a great deal for himself. He must repent and prayerfully turn to God. This, however, was impossible for man already morally decomposed. It was quite different in the Roman Church. Whether he will or not it absolves the sinner from sin and with mass and extreme unction ostensibly fits the soul for heaven. Lying a life of debauchery and voluptuousness brutalized, intellectually and morally a bankrupt, his heart a mere of-bucket of hell, the Suabian king was, perhaps, incapacitated to embrace the grace in Christ Jesus, notwithstanding the biblical offer. No hold. He had not, and what he had was taken away.

Everybody is conscious of the fact that, if we slight the offered mercy of God to-day, mercy has receded from our possible grasp on to-morrow. If the faint longing to commune with God in prayer is not heeded, we will soon become utterly prayerless. Perusal of the lessons of the Bible and attendance on public worship will prove to be spiritual food, but it habitually neglected they will soon seem superfluous.

In spiritual matters growth and decline are subject to similar laws as those in the material world. This dirty, lily clad tramp, everybody turns away from the door. Had he been well dressed, riding a gay steed, he would have been gladly entertained. A business man who is industrious, punctual, conscientious, thrifty, will secure unlimited credit; but the man whose breath is pregnant with the odors of beer or rum, who is seen with lottery tickets in his pocket, is soon beset by his numerous creditors. Bankruptcy follows as a matter of course. Intemperance or neglect of the laws of sanitation having undermined the general health, medical skill avails nothing when an acute sickness makes fierce onset because of the lack of the necessary reserve for reaction. Had the general health been good, the acute malady would have been readily overcome.

Let me exhort you, my dear reader, diligently to cherish what little spiritual life you may have in order that it may develop and acquire vigor. If it is neglected, it will cease entirely. Then, with Esau, you may afterward find no place, no ability, for repentance, though you seek for it carefully with tears.

Pacific Notes.

It seems that news items from the Pacific are "like angels' visits, few and far between." But few years have transpired since we read with emotion and anxiety "wails from the sunset sea" and of "gold bricks." Where are those correspondents? California is all here—is still the gold State, but "all is not gold that glitters." We have many difficulties to overcome before Methodism will have fair play. A floating population renders the organization of our forces difficult and uncertain. Californians march to the tune, not of "My Maryland," or "Hall Columbia," but a gallop. Have little or no time to devote to religion. People coming from the East fall into line and are soon immersed in the eager pursuit of gain. Men who were class leaders there are saloon keepers and gamblers here; this has no little weight with the lucubrations. We have no Sabbath; this is the day set apart for trade, repair of machinery and carousing, skepticism and infidelity is indigenous. Not that there is more of it here, but being a popular theme it is held and increased. Another almost insurmountable difficulty arises from the fact that we occupy the field with our twin brother, the Methodist Episcopal Church. Oh! father, did you say, "The child is father of the man"? It is astonishing and grievous the amount of prejudice that exists. True fraternity is conspicuous at all the Conferences, but like a dressed-up monkey, it requires only a glance into the face to betray its identity.

"They stand aloof, the scars remaining,
Like cliffs which had been rent asunder."

Where the Church, South, has an organization and the Church, North, none, as a rule their members will unite with any other church or remain out entirely in preference to ours; the same is true with regard to the Church, South. "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation, and a house divided against a house falleth." While the Methodist Church in the West surpasses all others numerically, and its grand old principles can not fall in time or eternity. Just at this time, under the present circumstances, we suffer untold loss; the enemy is in our own ranks; the foe is in the citadel. Just how it is to be averted none can tell. We can but labor and wait for this time, which we trust is not far distant, when the good Spirit will brush aside the ominous cloud and gain us strength in unity. Not all is shadow; we have light as well as darkness. Many of our members, both lay and clerical, are indefatigable, and, notwithstanding the inconveniences, are here to stay. We expect to conquer; right must prevail. Are our principles right? We have but to refer to our record of the past hundred years. Nearly four millions have been brought to Christ. The natural beauty of our State is unsurpassed. The Sacramento Valley is almost an unbroken wheat field, dotted here and there with town and vineyard. Rain has been abundant; the wet season is over; the cloud swept away; the lately bleaked soil awaked from its torpid sleep stands out in its new dress of beautiful green. At the head of the valley North, with perpetual snow cap, like a sentinel of eternity, stands old Mt. Shasta, keeping silent vigilance over the plains nearly fourteen thousand feet below. In the West, stretching away like a black cloud over the sea, is the Coast Range. In the East are the Sierras, which,

"Like fragments of an uncompleted world,
From bleak Alaska, bound in ice and spray,
To where the peaks of Dartmoor curled
In clouds, the broken lands loom bold and gray;
The seamen nearing San Francisco Bay
Forget the compass rose; with darks hand
They seize the wheel; look up, then bravely try
The tide to shore by rugged peaks that stand
The stern and proud patrician fathers of the land."

Now, Mr. Editor, we need more laborers in the vineyard. Can you send us some? If you can, let them be men that are weaned. Let them bring their baggage and stay awhile. We will give them all the work they wish. We may not station them at San Francisco, or Sacramento, the first year, but after remaining with us awhile we find them competent they will get there in good time. We have no church aristocracy in the Pacific Conference. A man is worth his market value whether he is a son of a D. D. or not. It is the grandest country in the world for a young man of pluck and energy.

Yours fraternally,
FEBRUARY 6, 1885.
PACIFIC.
The Unruly Member.

One of the churches of a sister denomination on Long Island is reported as being seriously exercised on an essential point of administration. An unfortunate man with a wooden leg presented himself for immersion. The question was instantly sprung whether the member that was all matter and no spirit was a fit subject for baptism, and a conflict arose. "The lame" man naturally, like impulsive Peter, wanted only his head, but his feet washed. The clergyman, probably foreseeing the difficulty of holding that wooden appendage under water whilst arrayed in his "patent," vulcanized India rubber baptismal robe" and having enough to do to look after the bulky man of flesh, seriously opposed the project. The applicant evidently had Scripture precedent on his side in the immersion of eunuchs, barge vessels and of tables. Besides, do not men with wooden members feel thrills of pain in the places where feet and toes ought to be? May not the life of the body subtly project itself into the wooden substitute? And if it be absolutely necessary that the whole body should be sunk under the water, why not the wooden leg, when it is doing its level best to supply the place of the departed member? Have wooden limbs no rights that their owners are bound to respect? If so, then the question extends to the immersion of all artificial substitutes for any portion of the bodily tabernacle, a suggestive argument that we need not follow out to its legitimate conclusion. But why not immerse the wooden leg as well as the purely material clothing in which the applicant arrays himself? If the wooden limb is to go, then everything that has not life in it should also go along. The immersion would not sanctify the wood, and it would certainly not deprave it or do it any harm. If it would do either the fleshly body or the wooden leg any good, then both should be served alike. The figurative should have a fair chance.

The case is reported as finally going against the disappointed applicant. The minister, immersed only three-fourths of a man, the latter had to unscrew his leg in order to be properly submerged. He must leave the unregenerate member behind and hop on one foot to the baptismal pool. All this bother would seem to have been hardly necessary. But it has settled an important technical point of baptismal ethics.—The Presbyterian.

Pastoral "Calls" or "Visits."

What are the main objects of pastoral visitation?

1. To make each family realize that the pastor feels a personal interest in each of its members, and that he cares for them as a neighbor would.
2. To remove all feeling of timidity, distance or bashfulness between the pastor and the younger members of the family.
3. To ascertain the extent of the acquaintance which each one has, with the doctrines of redemption, so as to make the preaching fit the wants of the hearers.
4. To discover the difficulties which hinder one and another from accepting Christ as a personal Savior, and to remove those difficulties.
5. To learn the griefs and sorrows which are oppressing them and to mitigate them with words of comfort.
6. To arouse and warn the heedless and thoughtless.

Some people want their pastor to call very often. Probably the pastor would "take" pleasure in going frequently, if he could. But if he were to go often, he would have to make, not pastoral visits, but brief social calls. Then comes the question whether the objects of pastoral visitation can be accomplished in short, hasty calls.

Perhaps the first and the second of these objects might be gained. But not the others. People are shy about talking on religious themes at once; very few men have the tact to introduce these subjects abruptly, and those who try it often do harm by their abruptness. It takes time to lead them to tell their difficulties, to make them free enough to speak of their griefs, or to win their attention so that words of warning may enter the heart without arising hostility.

What would be thought of the physician who should go to the house of the sick, indulge in a mere ten minutes' chat, and leave without inquiring as to the nature of the malady, or prescribing for its cure? But if the pastor is to do all this, he must take time for each visit. And if he takes the time needed at each house, he can not reach many homes in a day; nor can he visit each house every month. Do not be impatient with your pastor about visiting.—Christian Observer.

Good Words.

Let us be content, in work,
To do the thing we can, and not presume
To feel because it's little.—Mrs. Browning.

—It is always a choice of masters to which Christ is urging men. It is not by striking off all allegiance, but by finding your true Lord, and serving him with a complete submission, that you can escape from slavery. Then give yourself to him completely. Let him mark you as his by whatever marks he will.—Phillips Brooks.

—I have been much self-accused for not referring all to God as the last end; that I do not eat, drink, sleep, journey, speak and think for God; that practice was so short and narrow, light so long and broad.—Samuel Rutherford.

—Who has ever consoled like him? There may be situations when an angel's word would bruise the heart. But the Holy Spirit does not articulate a single word; he only pours drop by drop the divine oil upon the wound, and the wound closes.—Gasparin.

—Enjoy the blessings of this day. If God sends them, and the evil of it bear patiently and sweetly; for this day only is ours; we are dead to yesterday, and we are yet born to to-morrow.

—We must lend an attentive ear, for God's voice is soft and still, and is only heard of those who hear nothing else. Ah, how rare is to find a soul still enough to hear God speak!—Feuilon.

—It is a happy thing for us that this is really all we have to concern ourselves about—what to do next. No man can do the second thing. He can do the first.—David Elginbrod.

—The moralist says, "Every man is occasionally what he ought to be perpetually." Then again some men are perpetually what they ought to be only occasionally.

—By so much as the gospel method is removed from the probabilities which natural reason would affirm, it is unlikely that natural conceived it.—Dr. J. Parker.

—The deepest trust leads to the most powerful action. It is the silencing of that restless machine which the motive power with greatest readiness and result.

—If you can not learn to work peacefully with persons who are not congenial to you socially, you are not suited for Christian service in a world like this.

—You might give a new and better direction to the life of an entire family by setting one of its members to attend church. Yet you make no effort to do it.

—There are sweet surprises awaiting many an humble soul fighting against great odds in the battle of a seemingly common-place life.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
BY THE WATER.

Soaring far on wings of rapture thro' "the sunset gates of gold."
Past the stars, like silent watchers, onward, upward
I behold.
In its radiant, smiling beauty, that unclouded land above.
Where the King of earth and heaven reigns supreme,
The God of Love.

Open wide, ye angel wardens—open wide the gates of light.
That a way, home-gleaming spirit may find entrance
there to night.
Open unto the shining portal that my eyes may look within.
Tho' the feet of sinful mortal can not until freed from sin!

Hark! the music's sweetly falling from the harp of angels fair.
Now to me they're softly calling, tho' I can not enter there.
Lo! the vision, as on palm-tops, far beyond the evening star—
Visions of the white-winged seraphs sweeping thro'
"the gates of light."

From the Jasper walls of heaven, beaming, smiling
sweetly down,
Are the faces of our angels—on each brow a shining crown.
Oh! with eyes no longer hidden I behold the city light.
Where the streets are pearl and golden—where they walk with him in white.

Oh! that I could see the shadows, radiant with the smile of God—
Where no tear, no sigh of sorrow—where no weary feet are trod.
Trees of healing by the river, flowing to the crystal sea;
Oh! that, Christ, the gracious Giver, would pluck one green leaf for me!

There celestial fruits and flowers bloom thro'out
the golden clime.
Sweetest music cheers the hours, gladder than earth's gladdest chime.
For the harps are tuned by angels—peace and joy and love the themes
Of the songs of fair evangelists; every face with radiance beamed.

Oh! I long to swell the chorus—long those golden harps to sweep!
And to join those gone before us—oh! alas! can only weep.
Oh! the time of my departure seems to me so far away.
When shall end "the night of weeping" when shall dawn eternal day?

But 'tis waiting, watching, praying patiently in pain and fear;
By the waters I am staying for the angel of release.
Long I've waited, and am weary, shall I wait another year?
Hark! a voice—the great Physician—"Daughter, rise! be of good cheer!"

Ended is the heavenly vision—closed "the gates of light" again.
Hushed the harpings of the harpers, lost the echoes of each strain.
But to me the Saviour speaketh never as he spake before,
And in faith I ask this New Year, "Jesus, even me restore!"

"The Church," by Rev. J. A. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference.

It is a fact to be lamented that there is among the ministers and laymen of our church, including Bishops, editors and all, no sort of settled doctrine or understanding about the church: what it is, how it came into being, or by what practical authority it is conducted. There are not wider differences between ourselves and Roman Catholics on any subject than among ourselves on this. Why is this? I wish I could emphasize that question so as to extort a reply, if not an answer. Can we not harmonize so as to have a definite doctrine that our preachers may preach and our people understand it? The one single, vital, fundamental question underlying all these scores of questions about the church is this: Did Christ abolish the old church and create a new one, or did he suffer the mere, simple continuance of the former? A distinct answer to that question, with a consistent and practical adherence to it, would reconcile our multitudinous and discordant teachings on the subject.

Mr. Watson (Dic. Art. Church) says: "It is common with divines to speak of the Jewish and Christian Churches as though they were two distinct and totally different things; but that is not a correct view of the matter. The Christian Church is not another church, but the very same that was before the coming of Christ, having the same faith with it and interested in the same covenant."

Now, if that is true, it is a matter of unspeakable importance, and, if practically carried out in our various teachings, would settle a vast amount of discordant and contradictory views among us. But this doctrine is not believed nor is it taught by probably more than one in ten of our preachers and writers. The general belief is that Christ, on his coming, utterly dismantled and abolished the Jewish Church then existing and build or framed a new one. And this belief of a "new church," a thousand times repeated, carries with it the cognate doctrine that, instead of "having the same faith," as Watson says, the "new church" opens with a new dispensation, by which it is understood that now, in Christian times, Divine grace is dispensed to men upon new and different conditions from the grace of the Jewish Church.

On this subject our church papers—all of them, so far as I know—pursue a singular course. Incidentally they frequently speak, with general reference to the church, as though the "new church" and "new religion" doctrine was understood and assumed. But when a book appears denying this doctrine, and roundly asserting the uninterrupted continuity of the church, they endorse it; and when one appears implying the severality of the church—the old defunct and the "new" doctrine—they endorse that. But if one of our church papers, except here and there a correspondent, has in twenty or thirty years past spoken out on either side of this question, it has escaped my notice; and I never read a religious book or paper without an eye to this point, because I consider it of the highest importance in ministering the gospel. This reticence is remarkable.

This doctrine of church severality—new church and new dispensation—though so generally assented to by our books and other writings, has never had an argument in its support, long or short, good or bad, that I have been able to find—and I have looked for them—if I except a page or two in Archbishop Whately's "Kingdom of Christ," and a far better argument by a Roman Catholic priest by the name of Smaurius. And if you ask a hundred Methodist preachers, one by one, if they believe the church has had an uninterrupted continuity from Moses and the prophets through the period of Christ and the apostles to the present time, ninety and nine will assent to it. And yet most of the books he reads, including several in the course of study, teach the contrary. We are certainly in a muddle on this important subject.

The author of the book under notice has done the church no small service just here. He has ripped up this whole subject from the bottom, and in a plain, simple and historical way presents it to the reader in a clear and unmistakable light. The book is less than two hundred pages in volume, and, in my opinion, gives a clearer view of the church as it is presented in Scripture and in the common sense way of thinking than is to be found in a clever argument of larger volumes that could be easily named.

Mr. Parker is modest. He says the book is for the young and for persons unread. I sincerely wish our Bishops would read it, and our editors, book writers and other teachers of teachers. It will help everyone of us. The literature and teachings of the church must come to this. It must. I regard a popular Protestant understanding of this church question as one of the conditions precedent to a very large and healthful growth of the church.

It is proper, however, lest I be misunderstood, that I notice a limp in the history. This will no doubt be corrected in another edition. If 3,000 persons joined the church on the day of Pentecost, what church did they join? They were Jews declared, moreover, to be religious. They could not join the church they were already in and, there being no other, they could join none. The three thousand were "added" to the few who by more favorable opportunity had already settled their faith that Jesus was Christ. They could not believe this until they had sufficient evidence, and this they now had for the first time. As others and still others had opportunity and became convinced of the Christhood of Jesus, they, of course, joined or were "added to" those who had done so before. But all this was in the church.

I am glad to say to my younger brethren and older ones, too, that in this little book you will learn more about the church than by laboring through many larger and more pretentious volumes. And then, too, what is equally necessary oftentimes you will unlearn several crooked and twisted lessons that you will do well to get rid of. If our church papers and others would encourage the circulation of this book, so as to give it a general reading, I think it would be well. Why not circulate a hundred thousand copies of it?

Art. IX.—No part of the foregoing constitution shall be changed or amended except by a majority vote of the members of the Brotherhood.

OFFICERS FOR 1885.

President, J. M. Weems, Enterprise, Miss.; vice-president, T. S. West, Woodville, Miss.; secretary and treasurer, Inman W. Cooper, Madison Station, Miss.

Sketch of the Life and Ministry of Rev. Geo. Shaeffer.

November 30, 1863: The Annual Conference commenced its session in Columbus, Miss., on the twenty-fifth instant. Bishop Andrew presiding. In consequence of the unsettled state of the country about one-third of the members were absent. We met under melancholy circumstances. Our country is overrun by our invading enemies. Our citizens have been huddled by thousands. The country is full of widows and orphans, and every neighborhood has marks of the ravages of war in some form or other. The land is in mourning. The churches are suffering; their best members are in the army. The resources of the country are diverted from the promotion of piety and civilization to the destruction of life and property. The citizens are heavily burdened, and all the best interests of humanity are sacrificed at the shrine of Mars. We have lost seven of the Conference since the last session, and most of us have loved ones in the army exposed to privation and death, and many are mourning the loss of those who have fallen in the field of strife. I deeply sympathize with my afflicted country, and am conscious that if we are unhurt, desolation and ruin will be the consequence; and I, with my fellow-citizens generally, will be brought to utter destruction. Yet I possess my soul in patience, and trust myself, my family, the church and country all in the hands of my God, who does all things well, and has promised that all things work together for good to them that love him. I was reappointed to the district.

January 12, 1864: I held quarterly meeting for the Crawfordville circuit last Saturday and Sabbath. It was extremely cold and we did not have preaching on Saturday, but held the Conference at the house of Bro. Minns; had a very harmonious session. I preached on Sunday to a small congregation in a very dirty house; no sacrament for want of wine. The church is very cold at that place and needs a revival very much. I thank the Lord that I felt that he was with me. I start into this new year in the spirit of consecration. I feel that I am not my own, and rejoice that I belong to Christ. May I honor and glorify him in all I do or say, and see his pleasure prospering in his hands.

May 9, 1864: We are now on the eve of tremendous battles in Tennessee and Virginia. The Federalists have concentrated their forces at both points, and to have won. The battle has commenced in Virginia already. It will be a fearful fight. I suppose the North will have between two and three hundred thousand men engaged in all. It will be the greatest battle of modern times. I dread the result; but I know that our men will do all that can be done by human courage; but the disparity in numbers is overwhelming. May the Lord deliver us and enable our soldiers to repel the invasion! I put the cause in his hands, knowing that he will do all things well, and overrule all for his glory and the good of mankind. My son, Charlie, will be in the Tennessee fight, and probably Brett. May God protect them and shield their heads in the hour of danger! We hear of extensive revivals in all our armies. This is very pleasing, and I trust that thousands of our brave soldiers will experience the saving power of the gospel. I feel that our civil and religious, our possessions and privileges of every kind are at stake. May the Lord protect us in our hour of great extremity.

August 11: I have held three quarterly meetings in succession recently, which have been greatly blessed; several conversions have taken place at each. The congregations have been very large and deeply interested. I have been blessed in preaching the word, and have seen many bowing under conviction and rejoicing under a sense of pardon. I feel that my own spiritual strength has been renewed and my faith increased. I feel that I am consecrated to the work of preaching the gospel, and shall endeavor to do my duty to God and the church. Our country is being overrun by the enemy, and dark clouds lower over our land. Multitudes of our best citizens have fallen victims to this cruel war, and the whole land is in sackcloth and mourning; but I thank God that my peace is undisturbed and I can resign all into his hands. I firmly believe in his special providence, and rejoice that God reigns. I shall trust in him, though he slay me.

What Should be Done?

MR. EDITOR: I saw in one of our papers, of Saturday last, an advertisement in doggerel rhyme that, for blasphemous impiety, was the grossest outrage and insult to the religious sentiment of a Christian community that I ever saw offered by what purports to be a family newspaper, circulating in such a community. It was entitled "The Gauge of Prayer," and portrayed the Almighty, on his throne, passing judgment upon the merits of the whisky it advertised before the assembled universe and pronouncing that the said whisky had done more good to mankind than prayer or anything else. The Christian people of every community have a power which, if intelligently and conscientiously exercised, would suppress many, if not all, of the open indecencies and outrages to which a mercenary press subjects them and their religious convictions. That power is the withholding of their encouragement and patronage from those who do so. United action in this direction would work a wonderful change. I commend the subject to their consideration and your elucidation. Respectfully,

"Safe into the Haven Guide."

We are all sailing over the sea of life; but in many different ways. We each have an individual craft which bears us along. Some of us find our course to be through calm and quiet waters, and are carried along by the gentle breeze of good fortune; others have to contend with rough and turbulent waves, and it is a continual struggle to stem them. Now, we are the builders of our own crafts, and they are constructed out of what we term character. Not made all at once, but is moulded slowly and steadily. If we wish to have it perfect and strong so that it may be shaken and tossed about without injury, we must see that this timber character is of sound material, and that it is arranged in a skillful and workmanlike fashion, and this must be attended with great care, for it is a very easy matter to slip in unstable and decayed timbers and thereby to disarrange the entire structure, rendering it unfit to weather wind and gales and tempests. If we wish to make a safe voyage our bark must be staunch and strong; it must be securely caulked and rigged with correct moral principles, and steadfast determination should grasp the helm and guide its course with unflinching firmness through the deceptive breakers of temptation over tempest-tossed billows of disappointment. Never wavering until anchored safely into the promise haven of rest. But if our bark is frail and we neglect to strengthen it, what a sad fate awaits us! We will have scarce entered upon the voyage when we will find that we are unable to buffet the heavy seas of sorrow and trials which gather thick around us. We will be driven by the winds of adversity to the onward shore and cast a wreck upon the hidden bowlders of lunaticism. Then only to drift, drift, without rudder along with the deceptive current that leads to the dark and yawning abyss of despair and remorse. There is a divine pilot who offers to guide us safe into the haven if we will only place implicit reliance in his advice and warnings. Have confidence in him and follow his commands and it will little matter how frail your craft happens to be. You will pass safely through the most formidable squalls and tempests; for his spirit will strengthen your courage, renew your hope and cheer you continually with the blessed promise of a future reward. He will place beacon lights off all the treacherous coast of sin. Only trust in him, and he will not only insure you a safe voyage, but will also receive you with joyful welcome into the harbor at last. Let me illustrate how he can under the most adverse surroundings, impart peace and courage to one who trusts in him, by an incident which I have gathered from a little poem called "The last hymn." Some of you have probably seen it. It was a Sabbath evening, on the rocky coast of Wales, and the good people tenderly touched by the uttered benediction was wondering their way homeward for "God's" blessed boon of rest; but they chanced to look out on the sea which washed their coast, and they perceived that the lately calm waves was disturbed by a storm that roared and shook and thundered. Soon they beheld a large vessel a short distance rising and falling with the raging billows. They thronged the beach anxiously peering out into the darkness and their hearts grew cold with dread, for full well they knew the fate of any ship riding so near that shore among such waves. It was not long before they beheld the vessel parted in the middle and a half of her sink beneath the foaming waves. As the wreck drifted nearer the watchers they saw clinging to a spar, one man only. They were powerless to help him; but they had a trumpet, so they sent a short message. The preacher took it and shouted to him:

"Look to Jesus! Can you hear?"
"And 'aye, aye, aye,' came the answer o'er the waters loud and clear.
Then they listened, he is singing, 'Jesus, lover of my soul.'
And the waves brought back the echo; 'While the nearer waters roll.'
Strange, indeed, it was to hear him 'mid the storm of life he sang."
Singing bravely o'er the waters, "Oh, receive my soul at last!"
He could have no other refuge, "Hange my helpless soul on thee."
Leave, ah, leave me not,"—the singer dropped into the sea.

So you see the vessel, shaped and guided by human hands, was unable to withstand the surging billows. And the brave sailor's voyage of life was ended amid the tempest's awful roar. But, oh, how bright and glorious must have been the eternal anchoring of his soul in the peaceful haven, guided as he was by the Savior who supported and comforted him through the storms of life. If you wish to anchor at last in this peaceful harbor, see to it that your bark be substantial and that you are following him who promises to you to "safe into the haven guide."

NATCHEZ, Mississippi.

From Lake Charles, La.

MR. EDITOR: As you see, we have reached our new field of labor. We "packed up" at Opelousas, after the Minden Conference, in the rain and mud, in the alet and ice, for they followed each other in quick succession. And, sir, in our haste we boxed up small fragments and loose bits of the storm; but they immediately lost their nettle as disconnected atoms of steam do their fire. So we have literally come through the storm and met brethren with their wives and children, trunks, boxes and valises in the same dismal canyon, and all suffering from its twisting, dripping, freezing winds.

Oh! that our Conference would in its better wisdom adopt the summer instead of the bleak, desolate winter for its seasonal! Let us have one long Conference year in order to reach this summer land where winter and storms are feared no more.

Our people here were expecting us. Bro. "Gue" Mayo met us at the depot with a big carriage and soon rolled us away to the parsonage, where were assembled several ladies and some of the brethren who gave us a hearty welcome, after which we were conducted into the eating department of the parsonage, where was spread a most excellent supper; and we were in a most appropriate condition to appreciate quantity and quality. Thanks to these good friends! We hope all of our moving preachers were treated as well. Alas, these friends showed the right sort of spirit, and the pastor, wife and even the youngest of his children realized it.

Of course, we have some live stewards here—no fossils. They hold stewards' meeting, have a breathing, moving secretary who keeps a big book—keeps it in order—and everything goes down in black or blue words and figures. They have printed envelopes and blanks, and the "assessment plan" and all of its machinery. And it looks like a big gun—is one. And they discharge it monthly, and it is heard all about this lake and the regions beyond, and the muck is hit. Then they have smaller artillery—all of which seems to be effective and doing good.

Lake Charles (the town) is made up of black smoke, hot steam and whizzing saws; hence there is a good deal of real fire here—the fire of substantial progress. The people are awake while the sun shines, and they do while they wake. I asked a gentleman of the growth of the town. He told me that twenty years ago he could have stood at the "hub" and hurled a cat (a live one) beyond the tire; but now he would despair even of an approach to the undertaking. Many new houses have been built in the last several years. Some of them are really costly and beautiful. Why, sir, we are to have a bank—a real bank, with all the appurtenances. The building, which is on the outside of the town, is well built, so I have been told, not less than twenty thousand dollars, and will not only be an ornament to our town, but doubtless of vast use to our business men.

Our town is crowded with stores and shops, markets and busy people, while churches and schools are not lacking. We have no cotton nor sugar to embarrass us, for which we should rejoice; but we have lumber—files of lumber, hills of it—enough to build up a right sharp planet and dot it over with "mooring-buoys." The late W. R. L. runs through the northern side of the town, and the beautiful Lake Charles forms its south and western border, while the flashing waves of the ending space forever roll over the zenith side. JAMES E. BRADLEY, JANUARY 28, 1885.

"Over the River."

BY REV. W. O. BLACK.

My youngest sister, Mrs. Frances Pandora Baskett, breathed her last, January 16, 1885. She was born February 1, 1852, and was, therefore, in the thirty-third year of her age. She had been connected with the Sunday-school either as a pupil or teacher since her infancy. She also became a member of the church in early childhood, and since that time her life has been uniformly consistent with the solemn vows she then assumed. I do not believe that she had for years been guilty of an intentional wrong. She may have fallen into errors; but, if so, they emanated from the head—not the heart. She was so exceedingly gentle and amiable in her disposition that I do not think she ever had an enemy. Though her religion was not of the demonstrative kind, yet her faith had laid hold upon the eternal verities of the Divine word and appropriated them.

Her last illness was of only one week's duration; yet during that brief period she suffered more than tongue can tell. These sufferings she bore with that calm resignation which is begotten of Christian faith. In the midst of her intense agonies she spoke of the manifold goodness of God. She realized some days before her death that the days of her earthly pilgrimage were numbered and expressed herself as being ready for the solemn change. During the last night of her stay on these mundane shores she sang several of her favorite hymns. Among them was "Rock of Ages." When she came to the words, "In my hands no price I bring," etc., she repeated them four times in a clear, audible voice. She also sang with great zest, "O! how I love thee," repeating it several times. She sang other hymns, and then said, "I want to go home to rest, rest, rest." After this she was able to talk but little. On Sunday, January 18, "the house she used to live in" was deposited in its last resting-place in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives. She is "in bright mansions above," watching and waiting for those she loves.

A Preacher "Pounded."

MR. EDITOR: When a preacher gets a "pounding" it is in order that he sound a note on his Conference organ. On last Thursday our little paragon, newly repaired, was pronounced ready. Our trunks were hauled over and we left the pleasant home of Bro. J. E. Smith, whose generous hospitality we had enjoyed for three weeks past. The moon, nearly full, was shining, and the weather was charming. A short walk after supper ended at "home." Now we had possession. What better employment, after prayers, than reading your paper just from over the lake?

Suddenly there was a surprise, complete, pleasant and profitable. A hymn was struck up outside as footfalls touched the floor. The door was hushed open, a crowd of good people, heralded by a steward of the church, filled the room and each one deposited a parcel. A general introduction to the astonished preacher and his wife was followed by anecdotes, speeches and hymns. Wit, beauty and liberality contributed to pleasure, and our first hour of paragonage life ended. Our company left us with a larger well supplied. Besides, about twenty varieties for the table and pantry there were sundries for the toilet and general use.

We have made one round of Sunday appointments. Our new field was partly surveyed. Can we cultivate it? Only one furrow turned and some precious seed sown. The soil is diversified, but the seed is warranted good for all soils and climates. But just now what a loss of efficient laborers in our section of the Master's vineyard! The demand for earnest work and prayer is increased. As we all respond, may the Lord give us an abundant harvest.

J. WILSON BROWN, COVINGTON, LA., Feb. 2, 1885.

Notice.

We are building a church-house for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Homewood, Trenton circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, and are greatly in need of help. We have the material paid for and have commenced building, but have no money on hand, and without help will be forced to delay the completion of the building for some time. We need the house very badly, and when finished, it will be a neat church. If any one reading this notice feels an inclination to help us, we will gladly receive any amount, and with the permission of the editor, acknowledge receipt through the Advocate, praying God's richest blessings to rest upon them continually, and that he may restore to them fourfold for any help they may give us in this worthy enterprise. Submit by registered letter to A. D. Miller, Trenton, Smith county, Miss. A. D. MILLER.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst. in relation to the above matter. I am sorry to hear that you are not satisfied with the result of the investigation. I have been unable to find any other persons who have been in the city of New York at the time and place mentioned in your letter. I have, however, been able to find a number of persons who have been in the city of New York at the time and place mentioned in your letter. There is a gentleman in your community who never attends a church service. Let some one venture to invite him next Sabbath. By so doing a soul may be saved.

A little attention to strangers in church will improve your congregations. A pleasant smile, a warm hand-grip and an invitation to come again will fill empty pews. Brother, you ought to be a member of the "committee on shaking hands."

The Catholic Examiner calls. Lent the "somer season of prayer and penance." We have a little song, entitled "Sweet hour of prayer," which more properly expresses the true Christian's experience. The hour a child spends with his Father—the communion of a grateful spirit with its adored Redeemer—surely ought not to be somber, but rather the brightest and best of all the day. This Lenten season, made dull and heavy by a little less fashionable folly, encourages the idea of a periodical play. And these forty days of fish diet, and no parties, are considered an adequate atonement for eleven months of sinful indulgence.

The authorities in Switzerland have treated the Salvation Army with censurable opposition, even to persecution; but their prompt disposal of certain Mormon missionaries is worthy of all praise. A number of these emissaries and a lot of their perverts stopped for the night in a certain town. They were arrested, the deluded people sent back home, and the leaders fined $100 each and twenty-five days imprisonment. A like application of the law in some of our States, even on a strained construction, would rid the country of a pest and avert greater evils in the future. As Joseph Cook well observes we are "face to face with Mormonism," and the issue must be settled in the next few years. Another decade of growing power allowed them, and nothing less than a civil war will ensue.

We publish in another column a timely letter from Bishop McTear on Centenary work for 1885. The proposition is so practicable as to commend itself at once to the good judgment and Methodist loyalty of every active pastor and intelligent layman. Those churches that failed for any cause to make a special offering last year will have another opportunity. And those that devoted all their collections to local objects can now show forth their connectional liberality. What was accomplished in the way of educational, church and parsonage buildings was not unworthy of the great centennial year. Indeed, we are on a better vantage ground for a forward movement than ever before known in our denominational history. And our responsibility is proportionately increased. The Lord will expect larger things at our hands.

Our article on "Proselyting in Mission Fields" has stirred the Baptist Record to make response. The brother says our statement about Baptist proselyting in Mexico "is not according to facts," and then gives what he "believes them to be." Flat denial and flouting assertion are very simple, but common methods of argument with that journal. We have not been to the City of Mexico, nor has this brother. But, on general principles, he says it isn't so. Well, we repeat that the facts were given us directly by a man of high position who has spent years of labor in that field and knows whereof he speaks. There is no use, brother, in losing your temper because this iniquity is exposed. Taking our people by the hand, calling them "brethren," acknowledging them to have a clear Christian experience and a sure hope of heaven, praying in our meetings occasionally for the prosperity of this church and its pastor, and then trying to disintegrate the membership and wean them away from the organization for which you have prayed, is an inconsistency that deserves rebuke and an inquiry that needs the censure that it universally receives. And then the brother proceeds to defend the missionaries—says "nothing could be more consistent." Proselyting, therefore, is a part of the commission under which those brethren proved. They pray for us as a church, and then try to prevent their prayers being answered.

Denominational and State Education.

On our third page this week will be found published in full Bishop McTear's letter on the relation of denominational and State colleges. As with everything he writes, our senior Bishop has stated the case with remarkable clearness, and has certainly caught the ear of the church. He is a faithful watchman and gives timely warning of real, and not imaginary dangers. As an eloquent appeal to the church in behalf of Christian education, it is a word in season. The educating function of the church, always prominent in our Methodism, needs repeated and special emphasis. Never in the history of the world has the question of mental culture received such conspicuous and universal attention. By many it is considered the great panacea for all our ills, social, political and moral. The relation of illiteracy to crime and pauperism has been the subject of profoundest investigation, and upon its startling revelations are grounded much of our legislation and our theories of public education. The Churchman, on the other hand, considers culture divorced from religion as a positive evil, and that the church must stamp the Christ spirit upon the curriculum of every primary school and university. Hence one of the earliest schemes of Mr. Wesley was the founding of the old Kingswood School, and of the American Methodists, the establishment of Cokesbury College. And it is indeed refreshing to read such an entry as this in Bishop Asbury's diary: "There is a great work of God going on among the students at Cokesbury." We want to exhort after the Bishop in his efforts to awaken the church to her duty in this regard.

But some words of caution we feel constrained to utter in the beginning of this controversy. Unless a cool, conservative pen leads in this discussion, we may expect excited speech and for the church to be forced into an unfortunate attitude. Under the plea of fostering a "sanctified education," the Romish Church is the avowed enemy of our entire public school system. Denying the validity of the underlying principle of State education, she seeks in every possible way to accomplish its overthrow. No language is too severe to be employed in characterizing her righteous contempt for these "godless schools." Into a like antagonism our Methodism must not be driven by a passionate, illogical advocacy of denominational schools.

Bishop McTear accepts and defends the principle of State education. As illiteracy is a dangerous element in the body politic, and the government is imperiled when ignorance rules at the ballot-box, the State claims the right to remove this evil by a system of free education. Accepting this as a correct theory, he would limit tuition to the rudiments—instruction in "the three R's." Academic, scholastic, professional and technical training, it is argued, should be paid for by the student, and not furnished as a gratuity. Logically, that position would dismantle every State college and university and convert every professor into a primary school teacher. The buildings, apparatus and appliances themselves would become an unjust expenditure of public money. Without considering the logical tenability of the position stated, what is the wisest course to pursue? What attitude should the church assume? This is a delicate question, and, unless carefully presented, harm will follow, and no good.

Some facts must be accepted:
1. State colleges and universities exist, and by the popular will.
2. They are sure to remain and be sustained.

3. They are factors of powerful influence in our modern civilization. Young men leaving those halls carry with them the stamp and spirit of the alma mater.

Recognizing these facts, the church has sought representation in their faculties and Boards of administration. She would fill these positions with religious men, that a Christian atmosphere might pervade the institutions, and the students start forth with characters developed and guarded after a divine idea. To sever all connection with State colleges would be to surrender positions of vast influence and opportunities of the greatest value. But if we antagonize their existence, in all fairness and consistency we must withdraw from any share in their endowments and administration. The Bishop's letter does not take this position; but, catching inspiration from it, one or two writers have already gone to that extreme. He argues against free tuition in State colleges; but they have attacked the colleges themselves. He would modify administration; but they seek annihilation. Into that attitude the church is not ready to be led.

Whether our denominational colleges will reap increased patronage from aggressive opposition remains to be seen. Our opinion is that an improved spiritual tone and a more distinctive church life in these institutions will be a surer guarantee of liberal support. By providing a better education we will get a larger patronage. Let us have colleges so wholesome in religious culture, along with thorough scholastic training, that parents will send their sons without fear of evil results.

Two Lines of Work for 1885.

BY BISHOP MCTEAR.

Of the $1,200,000 thus far reported on Centenary thank-offerings over $250,000 has been directed by the donors, as was their privilege, to education.

This cause is worthy of all that has been dedicated to it. New and better buildings have been secured, debts extinguished and apparatus and endowments increased—an achievement worthy of the occasion.

In the matter of church building local needs were urgent. The best Centenary offering in many places was a new or improved house of worship or a parsonage, and for these purposes it is estimated that three-fourths of the whole amount have been expended. Grateful monuments these for the year we celebrate, involving, as they do, an outfit for present and future usefulness.

In one sense this is church extension, but not according to the benevolent and aggressive principle on which a Connectional Board has been organized. We must go beyond ourselves to fulfill the commands and exemplify the spirit of Christ, our Savior.

The Sunday-school interest is growing, and we trust this system of godly instruction for the rising generation is improving in its methods and in its yield of fruit in conversion. The medal plan ought steadily to increase the income for helping the weak, while making Sunday-school membership cheerful and loyal.

The Foreign Mission Board has realized less than $10,000 from the special Centenary collections. Indeed, it may well be considered whether the stress laid on a few of the other collections the past year has not lessened the whole amount which otherwise had flowed into the connectional treasury for foreign missions and for church extension. Objects at a distance, however needy and worthy, are liable to be forgotten in the presence of those at home. Many of the assessments in behalf of these two objects, partaking so distinctly of a charitable nature, fell short at the late Annual Conference sessions avowedly for the cause stated. Their wants, therefore, are entitled to special emphasis during the remainder of the centennial year, which, it was determined by the Centennial Conference at Baltimore, should run through 1885.

Other branches of the Methodist family are now making their largest Centennial gifts. There is yet time and opportunity for us to give a more benevolent and, therefore, a more religious character to the offerings of Southern Methodism. Upon consultation of the Central Centenary Committee with the officers of other Boards, and with the Bishops, the following proposition and announcement is made:

All collections above the assessment for foreign missions, reported by any station or circuit at the next session of the Annual Conference, will be credited to the same as a Centenary offering for that cause.

Likewise all collections above the assessment for church extension, reported by any circuit or station at the next session of the Annual Conference, will be credited to the same as a Centenary offering for that cause.

Blank forms for statistics, containing these two in addition to the usual items, will be prepared, so that gifts so much in demand, and so justly measuring the true spirit of Christianity, may appear at a glance in detail and in aggregate.

Without neglecting other legitimate interests, it is earnestly requested that these two items be magnified for the time that yet remains, and before the memorable era closes let us respond to the call for help from "the regions beyond" in a way that shall place the church on strong vantage-ground for beginning the work of the next century, and shall demonstrate that in the history of our first century the original spirit of Methodism has not been lost or lessened.

FEBRUARY 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I want a report from each secretary of an Annual Conference Board of Missions within the bounds of your crenellation. I am nearly ready to put my annual report to press, with several southern Conferences not heard from.

Yours,

R. A. YOUNG.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 19, 1885.

Line upon Line.

Seneca tells us that nothing is too often repeated that is never effectually learned. This is eminently true of those great practical lessons which uproot long-established errors, and must, therefore, be learned slowly. Such is the lesson of the practicability and propriety of suppressing the liquor traffic of America and the world. To this great undertaking the minds of men are everywhere advancing in the daily increasing conviction that it ought to be done and that it can be done. Meanwhile the curse is but slightly abated. While men sleep and while they wake, in the darkness and in the light of day, the ravages of the chief of earthly destroyers are going on. We dare not hold our tongues or pens till the evil be abated.

That the traffic in ardent spirits is a source of great evil none deny. All agree that it would be a good thing if the traffic were stopped. Even the few who have written against the prohibition movement admit the evils of the traffic, and only doubt the expediency or practicability of the proposed remedy. The author of several strong articles against prohibition, recently published in The Clarion, at Jackson, Miss., concluded his arguments by admitting that he would have restrictive legislation upon the traffic carried almost as far as the advocates of prohibition themselves would ask. We have, therefore, this strong ground of hope—that a practical movement which commands the approval of the judgments and consciences of all men can never ultimately fail. As certainly as men continue to live, it must prevail.

But the forms of objection to actually doing this universally approved thing are many and wonderful. Some think the very word "prohibition" suggestive of an abridgment of liberty, forgetting for the time that the majority of all laws are prohibitions. I was surprised to find a learned theologian, who is distinguished as an author, announcing that he is opposed to prohibition as a principle, but, as a necessary expedient, he accepts it. How one who approves of the Decalogue can be opposed to prohibition in principle is hard to be perceived. Eight out of the Ten Commandments are simple and absolute prohibitions. Those who oppose prohibition as a principle fail to perceive that they have already assumed the right to prohibit in the act of permitting the liquor traffic. Let it be remembered that it is not intended to prohibit men from drinking directly, but to prohibit or stop licensing a traffic which has the sanction of the law.

Others believe that prohibition is unconstitutional. This position is erroneous both in thought and in fact, and is contravened by the entire course of legislation on the subject. In the first place, it is an error to suppose that an evil may be fastened upon a whole people by a constitution. Constitutions were made, and can be unmade and remade at the will of the people. In the second place, it is a fact that prohibitory legislation has been declared repeatedly to be constitutional by several of the highest tribunals of this country. In the third place, all the legislation on the subject, both national and State, has, from the beginning been and was intended to be restrictive and, in a degree, prohibitory of the traffic.

The first great rebellion which tried the strength of the general government was only a protest against what was believed to be oppressive legislation in the form of an exorbitant tax upon whisky. Bradford and his armed thousands defied the government, burned the excise officer's house and tarred, feathered and rode upon a rail the collector, in retelling the injustice of the tax. Troops called out by Washington terrified them into submission, but deepened their sense of the injustice of the government in discriminatingly taxing the fruits of their industry. Looking back upon that great conflict, are we not compelled to see the fatal error of the government's position. If whisky was as good a thing as its advocates claim, ought it not to have been as free from tax as the grain from which it was distilled? On the other hand, if it was as bad a thing as the exorbitant tax implied, ought it not to have been suppressed altogether? Did not the government virtually fix a bribe for which it would sell to its citizens the privilege of making and selling poison by the wholesale and retail? Prohibitionists to-day do not propose anything new in principle. They propose improved legislation upon a traffic which has been the subject of legislation from the beginning of the government. They propose that the government and the States shall cease to derive any portion of their revenues from licensed speculation in the fortunes, the health and the lives of our citizens.

zens. They propose totally to prohibit a traffic which has brought incalculable evil upon our country, and no good save the price paid for permission to do the evil.

But some fear that prohibition will not prohibit. That is the old source of do-nothing since time began. You can not; therefore, do not try. You can not do all you wish; therefore, do not do anything. We can make prohibition effective if we will. Men made whisky and the appetite for it. They can stop making both, if they will. It has been done in many places, and may be done in others as well. No law was ever known to prevent entirely any evil; but shall we, therefore, have no laws? The whole world is alive and moving on this great question. Money and political tricks may prevent the success of the movement for a time in some places; but the solemn convictions of men are everywhere in its favor and can not be long prevented from expressing themselves in the form of law.

In Mississippi the law is absolutely prohibitory, but provides that a majority of the voters may authorize the sale in any locality. The Legislature, like Pilate, washed its hands of the guilt of licensing the traffic and, like him, relegated the responsibility of the sin of doing so to the people. Will a majority of the voters in Mississippi continue to be partners in drinking saloons? Let them cease to sign petitions for license, and the traffic will be stopped. If to members of churches would sign petitions, no licenses could be granted. God save his church from the fearful guilt of perpetrating this monstrous crime!

Pastoral Courtesy.

A correspondent inquires of the New York Christian Advocate editor about the propriety of ministers accepting invitations to conduct funerals or solemnizing marriages within another charge without the pastor's concurrence. It is a delicate question, but of sufficient importance to be controlled by some well-known unwritten law. Pastors should discharge all official duties within their parishes, unless in peculiar and exceptional cases. When to gratify a mere fancy the pastor is ignored and another invited to perform such service, he suffers in influence. But Dr. Buckley has answered the question so admirably that we take pleasure in reproducing it:

This is signed by a preacher's wife. We can not guess from her question whether her husband had the invitation, or had to submit to some one else having been invited within the bounds of his circuit. Her name duly accompanied the communication, however, according to our rules. It is not courteous for any minister to perform any function of a pastor within the bounds of that church without an understanding with the pastor. Wherever it is done it tends to break down the influence of the pastor in the community where he lives. Observe, we do not say that friends should not have the privilege of choosing who should marry themselves or children, as the case may be. But when this is done it should be done in such a way as not to wound the feelings or diminish the influence of the pastor. A note to the pastor, or a verbal communication to the effect that the minister who is to be invited is an old friend, and it is the desire of the friends that he should perform the ceremony, and an invitation to the pastor to be present and take some part, cover the case on the part of the people. The minister who is invited can drop a note to the pastor, stating that he has received such a communication, and hopes that he will participate in the ceremony. Concerning funerals, the pastor should have charge, whether he do little or much, and the friends should notify the pastor that they desire such and such a person to be invited. Even when there is no good feeling existing between the friends and the pastor, a decent regard for propriety will lead to his formal recognition. All civilized persons pursue this course, though even the enlightened may sometimes be thoughtless.

The Bishop of Gloucester, in a recent address, inveighed strongly against the introduction of objectionable ceremonies in the Church of England. He sees in these Romanizing tendencies great calamities that will soon fall upon the Establishment. When her daughter on this side the sea begins to make monks and hood nuns, as was recently done in New York, the good Bishop's counsel ought to echo across the waves. He says:

"Such things are digging the grave of the Establishment; first by supplying arguments to ascetics, grown sick at heart by the tormented existence of such things, almost welcome disestablishment as, at any rate, carrying with it reconstruction; and some chance of maintaining some where the Articles and homilies of the Church of their baptism."

Commenting on these words the Guardian facetiously observes that, "The Church of England is in a state of ceremonial anarchy. Every man does that which is right in his own eyes."

—Bishop Wilson has so far recovered at Hot Springs that he was announced to preach last Sunday.

—Bishop and Mrs. Warren received two thousand Methodists at their home in Denver on the evening of January 29. Quite a grand affair for a successor of Asbury and McKendree.

—Bishop Parker preached at Carroll last Sunday morning and the Rev. Wm. Merritt, of Canada, at night. The Bishop leaves this week for the session of the Baltimore Conference.

—We regret to learn that Rev. G. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference, is still dangerously ill, and the gravest fears are entertained as to the result.

—The Rev. Josiah Lewis, D. D. for several years a professor in the Southern University, died in Sparta, Ga., on the thirteenth instant. He was a cultured gentleman and a faithful minister of the word.

—At the dedication of the Washington monument in the city of Washington, last Saturday, the Hon. John W. Daniel, of Virginia, delivered a magnificent oration. It was in all respects a worthy tribute to the "father of his country."

—We are sorry to see that our church in Vicksburg was damaged by fire on Sunday last. The loss was considerable, but we understand was fully covered by insurance. And that leads us to say that the insuring of churches and parsonages is much neglected by our people.

—After a long contest Judge Houston has decided to admit neither of the presented wills of the late Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines to probate. The obitography will claim to have been written the day before her death was pronounced fraudulent, and the other was declared informal.

—To all simple souls troubled about Methodism's lack of antiquity, Dr. Vincent says: "Go into the church that prides itself on a venerable liturgical service, then go into an old-fashioned Methodist prayer-meeting, then read the Acts of the Apostles and see where the antiquity is."

—Rev. J. H. McLean, acting Regent of the South-Western University, Georgetown, Texas, is in the city and made a pleasant call at the Advocate office. He reports well of the great institution over which he worthily presides and of our Methodism generally in the Lone Star State.

—Joseph Cook closed his first lecture in the present course with this magnificent passage: "Never in the world's history, since the apostolic age, has Christianity stood more proudly erect on the evidence of her rendered reasons in the field of exact research, than she does at the present moment."

—We see it stated that Gov. Robert E. Patterson, of Pennsylvania, will probably enter the Methodist ministry when his term of office expires. His father was an itinerant preacher, and he has been an active member in the church and an able representative in the General Conference.

—Rev. J. W. Ellison, of Greensburg, La., is having sad family affliction. All of his children have been sick, and on the night of the nineteenth instant his little daughter, Chesley, passed away to the better land. His wife is now quite ill. May the Father of all shield and comfort our brother in his sorrow.

—We have a note from Mrs. M. Belcher, of Raymond, Miss., requesting each auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference to send the name of its delegate to the approaching meeting in April as soon as possible. A cordial welcome awaits the ladies and the most generous hospitality.

—Mrs. Lowell, the wife of Hon. James Russell Lowell, American Minister to the Court of St. James, died in London on Thursday last, after a long and painful illness. She was an accomplished woman and worthily filled her position as the companion of a literature so cultured as her husband and so able a representative to a foreign government.

—Rev. Dr. Abel Stevens, the great Methodist historian, recently celebrated his seventieth birthday at Geneva, Switzerland, where he has been residing for the past thirteen years. He left America for that climate because of a chronic insomnia from which he had long suffered. That is much relieved and he is doing a large amount of literary work.

—Dr. William B. Carpenter, of London, a distinguished scholar and scientist, is the author of this striking statement. It compresses volumes in a few words: "I deem it just as absurd and illogical to affirm that there is no place for a God in nature, originating, attracting and controlling its forces by his will, as it would be to assert that there is no place in man's body for his conscious mind."

The Rev. Thomas Cook's evangelistic meetings in Dublin, Ireland, have resulted in a glorious Methodist revival. The Irish Christian Advocate reports that "some six hundred adults and more have been to the evangelistic room and professed to accept the Lord Jesus as their Savior. It was simply glorious to see the crowds of wanderers returning from the far country and finding such a welcome as the heavenly Father gives."

The preachers' meeting on Monday was well attended by brethren visiting the city, but several of the resident pastors were absent. Dr. Carter was confined at home by sickness and Dr. Ahrens president. Besides the ordinary reports Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews, of Jackson, Miss., Rev. J. H. McLean, Regent pro tem of the South-Western University at Georgetown, Texas, and Rev. Moses U. Payne, of Iowa, made short addresses.

According to Ex-Gov. Long, in his speech on the naval appropriation bill in Congress, last Friday, the United States has a pitiable prestige on the high seas. And he has hardly exaggerated the lamentable facts. He said: "Our navy is an alphabet of wooden washbuds. There is scarcely a nation so poor to do it reverence. There is not on these wooden ships a piece of ordnance of more value in war than a child's pop-gun. People laugh at the navy and relish the joke of the Tappanosa being run down by a coal barge. They laugh at it as a Falstaffian burlesque."

When Thomas Jefferson was inaugurated President of the United States, he rode unaccompanied on his own horse, "the magnificent Wildair," to the Capitol and latched him to the palfrey while he went in to deliver his inaugural address. Now what a change! Multitudes of thousands are spent in equipages, escorts, and paraphernalia. We do not advise President-elect Cleveland to take a horse-back ride on inauguration day after the illustrious example of the author of the Declaration of Independence, but we're only noting the progress of less than a century.

This from the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-School Magazine indicates the vast achievements of a hundred years, and is an appeal to American Christians to greater diligence in this department of church work: "Out of every five persons of the entire population of England and Wales one is a Sunday-school scholar. The present Sunday-school population of England is greater than the entire number of inhabitants of the kingdom in the days of John Wycliffe. There are more Sunday-school scholars in England than there are inhabitants in London and its suburbs."

A meeting of interest to all temperance people will be held at the Florida Chautauqua, Lakeland, Fla., on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 3 and 4. Among the speakers announced are Hon. J. N. Stearns, of New York; Col. Geo. M. Bain, of Louisville, Ky.; Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, of New York; Rev. W. W. Hicks, of Florida; Rev. C. H. Mead and Bishop J. M. Walden, D. D., of Kentucky. All the meetings to be held in the new tabernacle on the Assembly Grounds. To engage rooms or inquire about rates, write to C. C. Baulitt, Lake de Funik, Florida.

The International congress of educators met in Werlein Hall on Monday last for a formal welcome to this city and the South. Hon. Louis Bush, President of the Louisiana Educational Society, presided and conducted the exercises. Rev. Dr. Palmer offered the opening prayer, and addresses of welcome were delivered by Judge Penner, of the Supreme Court, and Col. Wm. Preston Johnson, President of Tulane University. The leading address in response by Hon. Jno. Eaton, LL. D., Commissioner of Education, Washington, D. C., was an able discussion of education as a factor in modern civilization. He was followed by Dr. A. D. Mayo, of Boston, whose lectures here last winter before the Educational Society attracted such immense audiences. Daily sessions of the Congress were held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in Tulane Hall. Such a gathering and the character of the proceedings prophesy a grander era in our national history.

The Southern Cultivator. From this date we will receive subscriptions for the Advocate and Southern Cultivator for two dollars and seventy-five cents, postage prepaid. Subscribers wishing Dickinson's "System of Farming," in connection with the above arrangement, will send twenty-five cents extra, or three dollars for the three publications, postage prepaid. Unless cash accompanies all orders, no attention will be paid to same. No reduction allowed for postoffice orders or registered letters.

CARVER & JAMIESON.

We met on the cars last week a Kansas visitor to the Exposition returning home, and had much talk about things social, political, educational and religious. He played the interrogation point, and we responded as we had utterance. Having come on a limited ticket which allowed no "stop-over" at any point, he was en route homeward with little or no knowledge of the South except what he gathered in the streets of this crowded city. Of our social customs, our agricultural resources, etc., he was entirely innocent. When told of the liberal provision made for the education of the colored people in our public schools, he looked a bit incredulous. He was amazed at such a possibility in this political Nazareth. But another Southern visitor, Col. A. K. McClure, of the Philadelphia press, was more careful to inform himself. His report to the North through the columns of his paper contains this paragraph:

The educational facilities for the blacks are better in the South today than they are in the North, in proportion to the facilities proffered to all. South Carolina employs and pays out of the State treasury more black teachers than are employed in all the states of the North, and Alabama employs 1,100 colored male teachers and 500 colored female teachers. And they provide the best means for fitting the colored people for teaching. The normal schools for whites and blacks in both Alabama and South Carolina are exactly equal, and the treasury of the State is largely drawn upon to qualify the colored race for teaching itself. North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and indeed most of the old slave States, each sustain more colleges for the blacks than do Pennsylvania or Massachusetts; and just as educational facilities have increased for the whites, whether in common or normal schools or in colleges, they have been equally increased for the blacks so far as State appropriations have aided them. In Georgia the colored university ranks with the white university, and even in Mississippi, presumably the most barbarous of the Southern States, the State does much more for the collegiate education of the black race than does Pennsylvania.

The Eucharist and Unfermented Wine.

At our last Conference the question of the use of unfermented wine was discussed, and it was agreed that it was safest to use the unfermented juice of the grape, and I was requested to give notice where it could be had. By writing to J. N. Stearns, agent of the National Temperance Society, 55 Read street, New York, he will send it in pint or quart bottles, as desired.

I give also the following information: If it is desired to keep the remaining portion of a broken bottle, this may be done by putting it in cool water, and bringing water and wine to a boil, corking and hermetically sealing it while hot.

My brethren will please excuse me for delay. I am necessarily very busy all the time.

"The Church: What It Is, and Whence It Is."

This is a neat volume of 192 pages by Rev. J. A. Parker, of the Louisiana Annual Conference. It is a historical outline of the church's origin, progress, and doctrines written in the catechetical form. It is a valuable contribution to theological literature. The size of the volume by no means represents the research and labor it must have cost its studious and scholarly author. He must have gone over a wide field of reading, biblical and historical. The author has not aimed to air his vocabulary, but to say the most in the fewest words—hammering down his matter until all the clusters of needless words were beaten out, and that which was left is good to the use of edifying. I know of no volume that contains so much that is valuable and clearly expressed in so small a space. The reader gets at what he wants without circumspection or loss of time. I heartily commend it to the favor of our people. I hope our preachers will buy it and give it a wide circulation among us.

J. B. WALKER.

The following from the New Zealand Methodist, in discussing the work of their late Conference will be interesting news to our readers from a far country. See how our Methodist prospers in the island of the sea:

A model died was drafted, on which it is intended to settle all the property held by the Australian Wesleyan Methodist Church. The importance of such a piece of legislation as this will be widely appreciated, and the steps have not been taken too soon. A flock of discipline, that has been in process of preparation for the past three years, was revised and finally adopted by the Conference, and we shall now have in our hands an authoritative and most useful compendium of the laws and regulations of our church. By the upholding of the two departments to the point of the law, we trust, to be done to conserve and foster our missions in the South Seas. The resolution adopted on the subject of Methodist Union will, if heartily taken up by the Annual Conference, stand out in the coming time as one of the most gratifying results of the New Zealand General Conference.

Books and Periodicals.

WITHIN THE SHADOW. By Dorothy Holroyd. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. This admirably written work we read to the end with profit. The plan is happily conceived and executed with artistic skill. Every page is replete with good, wholesome religious instruction.

The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., editor, is on our table. The first article, "The Freedman's Case in Reality," is an unsparing discussion of an exciting question. The author states his case extravagantly and offers no hint at a solution of the difficult problem. The paper by Dr. Long may be very learned, but it is intensely dry. Our literary young friend, Mr. Thomas Dabney Marshall, contributes a readable paper on "Matthew Arnold." The article on Preaching is exceptionally fine.

Always believe that those things which elicit the most patience and prayer and humility, are your best things, and those which the most please and excite your pride and self-complacency are your worst; let them come in what garb they may.

SEND $1 BILLS.—We wish our patrons to bear in mind that in payment for subscriptions we do not desire postage stamps, and that they should be sent only or fractional parts of a dollar. A dollar bill is much more convenient and safe to remit than the same amount in one, two or three cents stamps. The actual risk of remitting money is slight; if properly directed not one misarrangement will occur in one thousand. Inclose the bills, and where letters containing money are sealed in presence of the postmaster, we will assume all the risk.

A GOOD REPUTATION.—That enterprising plan merchant, P. Weylin, may be justly proud of the leading musical instruments for which he is agent, and especially so of the Mattosin piano. The appreciation of the public for this particular instrument has tended to prosper and increase its sale here in our country. It is the reputation of the Mattosin piano that has enabled the company to finish all their pianos in a most complete and perfect manner, using the best materials obtainable and their efforts to keep this piano ahead of all others in every respect is a commendable effort which the public has evidently appreciated by their extensive patronage. Judges of musical instruments say that the Mattosin piano is indeed of being old at eight years, like many others, lasts a life time and is kept in tune at a quarter less expense than any other make.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

THIS LIFE IS WHAT WE MAKE IT.

Let's often talk of noble deeds,
And rarer of the bad ones,
And sing about our happy days,
And none about the sad ones.

We were not made to fret and sigh,
And when grief sleeps to wake it;
Bright happiness is standing by—
This life is what we make it.

Let's find the sunny side of me,
Or be better in it;
A light there is to every soul,
That takes the pain to win it.

Oh, there's the slumbering good to all,
And we perchance may wake it;
Our hearts contain the magic wand—
This life is what we make it.

There's here to those whose loving hearts
Shed light and joy about them;
Thanks be to them for consoled gems
We've had known without them.

Oh! this should be a happy world,
To all who may partake it;
The fault's our own if it is not—
This life is what we make it.

System in Church Work—A Plan.

BY REV. D. B. RAYNER.

We believe it is possible to bring every member into the active systematic service of the church. And if this can be done, then farewell to sloth and death. The abundant success of the gospel will at once be insured. We may divide the church into two classes: 1. Those who are willing to work; 2. The indifferent—those in a state of careless satisfaction. Now, the first, for want of some systematic form of labor, and an account of general discouragement, can do but little. The second, of course, do nothing. Hence, the very little that is being done. We have thousands of faithful souls who are earnestly praying and anxiously waiting for an opportunity to do something for the church; but they know not what to do, nor how to do. We verily believe that our present inactivity, and embarrassment, are the result of the want of some systematic division of labor. Would not any manufacturing establishment in the world fail in which there was no more system than we have in the church? Can we hope to succeed while nine out of ten, or more, are doing nothing? And while the few who are doing, work under such great disadvantages? We believe that the trouble is more for want of proper organization than from unwillingness upon the part of the people to work. With these views we are endeavoring, in the Seashore district, to work our people up to an equitable system of labor. For this system we furnish each member with blank form, covering a thorough course of church service, for a month's report.

For the benefit of our people of Seashore district that they may, with uniformity, take hold and proceed with this work, we beg leave to here state the whole outline, which is as follows:
1. Divide each church into classes or class meetings.
2. Appoint a leader over each class.
3. Hold monthly meetings, in which the report of each member, including the leader, shall be read. If any member should fail to be present, it is the duty of the leader to see him at once, learn why he was not present and get his report.
4. The pastor shall hold a leaders' meeting monthly, in which the leaders shall make to him, in condensed form, the reports of all the members. (The classes should meet a sufficient length of time before the leaders' meeting, to give the leaders an opportunity to see any member not present and get his report.)

5. The reports made by the leaders to the pastors, in the monthly leaders' meeting, shall also be made by the leaders in the church conference.

6. In these meetings of classes and leaders more particular inquiry may be made into the spiritual condition of each member, experiences may be related, etc.

The meeting should be opened, conducted and closed according to the regular form of class meetings. Members may read, sing, pray, talk and shout as much as they please. In this plan the original design of class meetings will be fully met. Now the importance of this work is apparent. It brings the life of each member before the pastor and before the church. The spiritual condition of each is known. Any sick or disorderly are reported, and better than all, it brings every member into the active systematic service of the church. It gives a proper and equitable division of church work. And church prosperity must be the result.

"Turn on More Light."

BY REV. J. M. WELLS.

The fact is, the pastors must have more practical aid from those who are able, and whose duty it is, to aid them. I do not believe that any preacher who feels the obligation of the great commission resting upon him would or could fail of duty to the cause of missions. If there should be one among us who imagines he fills the measure of obligation by personal effort to save souls, he needs an Aquila and a Priscilla to "exhort unto him the way of God more perfectly." As well might he fail to teach his people to pray or to read the word and feel that he had discharged the round of duty as neglect the cause of missions and hope to escape condemnation of God.

I know it is sometimes hinted that pastors are afraid to press these collections lest it cost them their own salary. If there is one such among us, and he should be, I would not like to preach his funeral and be in possession of a knowledge of the fact; for has not Christ said of all such: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick and in prison, and ye visited me not." To say that I doubt the salvation of any person who would refuse to urge the claims or to support the cause of missions from any mere mercenary motive, is a mild expression of my interpretation of these words of Christ. Yet what is to be done? In my heart I feel ashamed of what our church is doing for missions. To say we are doing nothing would not be exactly true; but to say that what we are doing is unworthy of our faith is as true as it is to our shame. Still the question: "What is to be done?" Certainly no higher pressure can be put upon the preachers. In addition to the high moral conscience that must control each of us in this duty to God and man, we have a sort of blue-ribbon policy at our Annual Conferences, and those who have their congregations well in hand get a premium, while hundreds, who are just as true and faithful, go from year to year without one word of praise or encouragement. I want to say this is no disappointed lover's wall. I have been wearing one of those blue ribbons for five years, and to-day, as I look at the general results, I feel like I had been invited to a big dining table to be fed on syllabub.

I am hungry for larger results. I long to see these brethren who are bearing the heat of this mighty conflict for Christ receive the aid they have the right to expect and that the exigency of the times demand from those who are able to give it. We must have more light direct from the great centre with a less dependence upon intermediate reflection. Either this, my brethren, or else cease to devise larger plans of extension until the preachers work up their people to the measure of present obligations and proclaim a readiness for another advance. If you give them time these faithful pastors will preach, pray, talk and sing this duty into the people. But while they are doing this what is to become of the lost world and of the opportunities now open before us for bringing it to Christ?

"Turn on the light," brethren, by putting missionary information in a shape that it will be read, studied and prayed over by the whole church. "Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." I have nothing to say against the Advocate of Missions per se; for it is a good paper, and if it was read by the whole church would be the means of accomplishing the end proposed. But let it tell its own story: "The mailing list is being overhauled, and many presbyters' names added; a few laymen who have not paid will be left off the list for December, unless they indicate their wish to continue."

There are twenty-six thousand members in the Mississippi Conference, and without knowing certainly I will undertake to say, if you except preachers' families, there is not one for every three thousand who subscribes for this Advocate. If this estimate is not overdrawn it is certainly suggestive. Now, if the Advocate of Missions is a necessity (and I do not call the fact of its being in question,) let us have it at a subscription of ten cents, and then we can get our people to take and read it. But at its present price we can not. I do not think such a publication should be held at a price that a mere nominal subscription would prove a source of revenue. It is like taxing the salt in your bread to pay for the sugar that goes in your coffee. Indeed, I think it would be far better to make an annual appropriation to sustain it and let the people have it at a low price. But if this can not be done, give the paper an honorable burial and establish a missionary bureau that will give the whole church information through the several church papers.

Proselyting in Mission Fields.

Just before Bro. Powell left Mexico he received a very promising young Presbyterian into the church, who had been studying the subject of baptism for years. He will be a tower of strength to the work there.

—Texas Baptist.

WHO THIS TOWER OF STRENGTH IS.

He is a tailor of no education, and of very small capacity, who, less than three years ago, was an ignorant Catholic without the knowledge of God and his worship. Through the influence and great skill of the Presbyterian he was brought under the power of the gospel, professed faith in Christ and was baptized. Some months after his reception into the church it was rumored that he was dissatisfied on the subject of baptism, but after an interview with his pastor he said that all doubts had been removed, and should he have more trouble he would so inform his pastor. But instead of the interview he soon afterwards was found at work among the people trying to disaffect them, etc. As stated above, he was received into the Baptist Church, and while he has expressed doubts as to the inspiration of some parts of the Bible is almost mad on the subject of immersion. This is the tower.

HOW THE GREAT SUCCESS WAS ACHIEVED.

The Baptist version of the New Testament by some means was put into his hands. Perhaps this accounts for his doubting the inspiration of the Scriptures. Then he was loaded down with tracts on the Baptist doctrine, especially on immersion and apostolic succession. Then came buggy rides and dinners with the foreign missionary. All this well seasoned with flattery. If your readers desire to see the electioneering and patrolling schemes of a New York politician excelled, let them come to Saltillo. The impression was made that the Baptist Church is the richest and most influential church in the world, and that, doubtless, all Mexicans will soon be Baptists. Just see what a school-house they have bought with actual cash, and have, besides, anywhere from $25,000 to $150,000 to build in Saltillo, while the other denominations have nothing! It is understood here that their usual course in proselyting young men was not strictly adhered to in this case, i. e., a promise to send them to the United States to be educated; but the indications are strong that in this, as in other cases, a money consideration was held out as an inducement for him to be a Baptist. This case of making Baptists in Saltillo is only an index to the methods used.

TWO STRANGE THINGS.

1. "Do you believe that the Baptist Church is the only apostolical church on earth?" This question is put to the candidates for membership into the Baptist Church in Saltillo, Mexico. The strangeness of the question will appear when it is known that these persons have never seen a church history, that many of them can not read, and that many of them are so ignorant that they do not comprehend the terms used in the question. But they all said: "Yes, sir; I believe it."

2. For the purpose of forcing a controversy on the other missionaries of this place, or to make the impression that Presbyterians, Methodists and Roman Catholics are about the same, the Rev. W. D. Powell, of such wonderful fame, has offered to give two hundred dollars to any one who would show him a text of Scripture authorizing the baptism of infants or baptism by affusion. When asked if he meant this as a challenge to discuss these subjects, he said they were for the priests of Saltillo. If there had been a desire to provoke a discussion with the Catholic clergy of Saltillo, why did he not challenge the worship of saints, the mass, the confessional or some doctrine in which we could present a solid front? Shall it be inferred from this that the Baptists regard the mode or the subjects of baptism as of greater importance than the giving of God's word to the people? We might, with equal propriety, offer the same amount for one text from the Bible authorizing apostolic succession and close communion as taught and practiced by Catholics and Baptists. When told of this proposition one of our members said he would give a like sum if shown the word immersion in the Bible in connection with baptism. If our dear brother desired to do his own church and the Mexican people a real service he could do it by explaining and practicing the fourth and tenth commandments of the decalogue.

Our Baptist friends are very successful in making impressions. They have succeeded in making the impression in this part of Mexico that they are the richest and most powerful church in the world, and that they are doing everything for the conversion of the people. While judging from the press and private letters received, they make the impression in the United States that great men in Mexico are going into their church, that much property is being given, etc.

I regret to spend one moment in regard to others, but when our work here is being hindered and misrepresented I deem it just to let the public know what is being done.

Washington Letter.

The dedication of the Washington Monument, on Saturday last, was a memorable affair. It was a national event, and, I may say, the whole nation united in expressions of joy and gratitude over the completion of the memorial, for the ceremonies brought to the capitol military and civic organizations from every part of the country. It is a consummation which ten years ago seemed not likely to occur during the present century. To-day it is a perfected structure, piercing the sky, the highest monument ever raised by human hands, and it will be a wonder and delight forever to all who gaze upon it.

The dedicatory programme was admirably carried out, both at the monument and at the capitol. The procession presented a splendid appearance on the smooth, cleanly swept floor of Pennsylvania avenue, and a finer military display has seldom been seen, even in this city of memorable pageants. At the head of the line, mounted on a fine black horse, and enveloped in a large black cloak, rode the general of the army, "Little Phil. Sheridan," followed by four aids. Gen. Ayers marshaled another division of the procession, and Gen. Fitz Hugh Lee, on a large bay stallion, brought up another. President Arthur followed about midway in the procession. He was in an open carriage, the only one in the line drawn by four horses. He was cheered and jeered along the route. One uncouth individual shouted: "Hello, Chet! old boy, I am sorry I can't go fishing with you next summer." The sun shone upon the celebration, but the winter wind was piercing. The crowds on the streets begged the lee-side of the buildings in their efforts to keep comfortable, and seemed far more desirous of witnessing the military display than the ceremonies. The programme at the base of the monument comprised a prayer; remarks embodying a history of the monument by W. W. Corcoran, the first vice-president of the Monument Society; Masonic ceremonies; remarks by Col. Casey, the engineer of the commission delivering the monument to the President of the United States, and the dedication of the monument to the name and memory of George Washington by the President. Senator Sherman presided and prefaced his introductions by saying no one was expected to take off his hat, not even the speakers. The wind came to the monument from every point of the compass; from Virginia, across the frozen Potomac on one side, and across icy Babcock lake on the other, and the crowd seated on the grand stand kept their feet moving to get warm. At the close of President Arthur's speech, the assemblage broke into cheers, and at a signal from the chairman, Senator Sherman, the military wheeled into line, the civic bodies and distinguished participants in the proceedings of the day sought their carriages, and the pageant proceeded to the capitol. There it was reviewed by the President from the East front and dismissed. The procession was an hour in passing a point, there being about five thousand persons in line. The programme at the capitol was as follows: Prayer by the pastor of Pohick Church, near Mount Vernon; oration by Hon. Robert Winthrop, of Massachusetts, read by Representative Long, also from Massachusetts, oration by Hon. John W. Daniel, of Virginia, and benediction by the chaplain of the House of Representatives. Among the favored two thousands who were invited by ticket to these proceedings were the surviving kindred of Washington, thirteen of whom bear his name. They came in a body together, and naturally attracted curious observation.

The history of the national monument is almost coeval with that of the republic itself, for at the close of the Revolution the subject of erecting a memorial to the general of the Revolutionary Army was brought up in Congress. The corner-stone was laid on July 4, 1848, in the presence of President Taylor, both Houses of Congress and a vast concourse of people. At the outbreak of the war it stood for years and years forlorn and neglected, and while standing thus it settled an inch or two out of the perpendicular. This obliquity was corrected by one of the most remarkable engineering feats ever performed; a new foundation of broken stone and cement being placed under the entire structure. Hundreds of tons of weight have since been added, but it has not swerved a hair from the line. The structure is 55 feet square at the base, 555 feet high, its walls are 15 feet thick, and it has cost up to the present time $1,187,710 31.

THE SABBATH.

A bright spot, no oasis
And earth's desert drear,
The sweetest, but that blooms
Upon the rose tree of the year.
A miniature of heaven hung
Upon a chain of days,
Worn on the breast of Father Time,
To cheer his weary ways.

A soothing poem written in
A volume of dull prose,
A wisp of soft spring melody
Heard at the winter's close;
The golden clasp that binds the leaves
Of a day's episode
That God's own fingers shall unloose
Across the Jordan's flood.

Good Words.

He who doth teach the little birds
To find their nest in field and wood
Who gives the countless flocks and herds,
Each day, their needful drink and food,
Thy hunger, too, will surely satisfy,
And all thy wants in his good time supply.
Be thou content.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate,
KETS, HARRIS, CALLAWAY AND RUSH.

BY JAMES G. SHELLEY.

One in shades of evening,
One at dawn of day,
One in life's meridian—
They thus all passed away.

One, an aged warrior,
Of fame and skill and might,
Who in the blood of battle,
Put all his foes to flight.

One, like the rising sun,
In grandeur, shed great light,
Whose course was not to run,
Then set in death's dark night.

One, lamb-like in mildness,
Who worshiped God aright,
Strove to heal all blindness,
With science's purest light.

Alas! how sad my heart!
Great tears bedim mine eyes,
Dear brethren, must we part
To meet above the skies?

Alas! a forced farewell,
Dith swell my heart to say:
My grief no tongue can tell,
To see you fade away.

You've fought the fight of faith,
You've laid your soul down;
Give earth, this lovely place,
For heaven and a crown.

Your troubles are all past,
Your souls forever blest,
May we all meet at last
In that eternal rest!

AGUSTA, Miss., Feb. 11, 1885.

"The Church: What It Is, and Whence It Is," by Rev. James A. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South.

When one of the family group that warms itself at the hearth fire of the Christian Advocate commits the indiscretion of writing a book all the others should feel called upon to do something about it. Even if it is a bad book, each member of the family should purchase a copy and read it, and unless it should prove a very bad one, which could be supposed only in the case of a very recent subscriber, he should deal gently with its faults, hiding them, so far as possible, under the ample folds of his mantle of charity. And should it prove—as is, of course, a far more reasonable supposition—that rarer, production, a good book, why, then, every breast in this family group should expand with the pride of proprietorship, and every member who can write at all should proceed at once vigorously to assail the new production or to do anything else likely to increase its circulation. But, having planted ourselves upon these indisputable premises, we are not a little embarrassed by the conclusions that are their inevitable sequence. For if we proceed to say that the book in question is a "good book," our readers may conclude that we are merely expending our "mantle" in the most approved form; while, on the other hand, should we pronounce it a "bad book," it might not be altogether understood that we were speaking in a strictly Pickwickian sense.

So we will merely say that it is "a book," "a new book," not a very good-looking book, certainly, for, though fairly printed, and on reasonably good paper, yet it has a "store-clothes" look suggestive of inexperience, and a somber hue that repels rather than wooes to its perusal. A book, new and dainty from an experienced hand, in these latter days of artistic work need not be costly to be very attractive. And the book in question lacks that very essential factor in every book of this character—for it aspires to be a volume—for a large class of students—a verbal index. As a rule, we say, give us a house with all the doors and windows nailed up, and the only place for entrance or exit through the chimney, rather than a book without any doors and windows whatever—that is, with no "verbal index" or "analytical table of contents."

In the book before us, however, the fault is in a large measure excused by the brevity of the book—a quality, by the way, in which the author excels, and which is the more remarkable and commendable, perhaps, when we consider the inextricable character of the subject and the profession of the writer. In order to understand the case fully we need to be reminded that our author was a lawyer before he entered the ministry.

Still the remarkable fact remains, and the fact remains remarkable, that here is a church-history commencing with Adam and ending with Dr. Haygood, containing all the prominent facts printed not in a crowded, condensed style, and with small type, but with wide spaces, with large, clear, wholesome, eye-saving type, in the paper-consuming and, oftentimes, patience-consuming style of questions and answers; and all, including title page, dedication, contents, preface, introduction, forty-eight chapters, a conclusion, and the usual number of blank pages numbered by the printer as basis for a charge for nothing done—all this within the compass of one hundred and ninety-two small pages with wide margins.

Within this exceedingly brief space Bro. Parker has given us a very useful work, and one which will commend itself, we are sure, to every student of church history. The catechetical style, usually an encumbrance, here has not only the warrant of usage as being the first form of Christian instruction as well as being after the analogy of our Discipline, but really plays the seemingly paradoxical part of economizing space, as it dispenses with the necessity of connecting phrases and, by its point and staccato like emphasis, performs the office which the close observer will find hidden in the very word itself of "dinning down into one's ears" the truths thus sought to be conveyed.

And what are these truths? Of course we have not space to present them in detail. We have not had time even to verify the accuracy of their statement for the most part, though we have given to the book, both before and after its publication, a very considerable and well-paid degree of attention. Such verification is, in fact, rendered, so far as we are personally concerned, quite unnecessary by our knowledge of the author and of the conscientious, painstaking character of the work bestowed upon it.

The most important feature of the work—of more value by far than even the convenient arrangement of the historical facts—is the argument that was almost unwritten through the whole, half concealed by the arrangement of the less important facts—the argument which amounts in the end to a complete demonstration of the glorious truth that "the church of God is a thing of principle, and not of name and form," and that, as such, "the gift and means of applying the saving grace of God is not a secondary, but a primary thought in the Divine mind." In short, that the church substantially as it appears now was in existence no less at the time of the birth in Bethlehem than at the crucifixion upon Calvary; that the office of the Messiah was to continue an existent church rather than to plant a new one; that he came "not to destroy, but to fulfill."

But as a history and as an argument this little book merits an extensive circulation, and could be adapted with great propriety, we think, into the ministerial course of study. And really it doesn't look so very bad after all.

The Scriptures, the Authority for Baptism, and Not Direct Inspiration.

MR. EDITOR: A short time ago you noticed a reference made by a Baptist paper of some proselytes from the Methodist Church by a careful reading of the Bible on the subject of the mode of water baptism, and, as a result, they were convinced that immersion only was to be found. This occurs the more strange when the word "immerse" is not found in the entire word of God, and it appears the more absurd that immersion is contended for as a mode at all—much less, the only mode. It will be evident to every Bible student that the so-called careful reading did not include the Scriptures—that part of the Bible which contained the elementary principles and doctrines of Christ.

The course pursued by all immersionists and some commentators is to assume that our Lord instituted baptism when he was here on earth, and that baptism was never heard of before. This assumption has been repeated again and again by many great and good men, and as yet no one has ever been kind enough to point out the place and give any of the circumstances of its institution. Recently I saw in the Record the assumption that our Lord instituted baptism when he gave his commission; yet the would-be successful debater failed to tell who instituted baptism before this time. As this was among his last words on earth, it must appear evident that it existed long before this time. Could we go no farther than John's ministry on this subject, it is evident to all that John baptized for six months before our Lord assumed any authority at all. John and Christ both observed the law of the church and the authority of the Scriptures, the Old Testament, as to the time ministers were permitted to qualify for their ministry, which was at the age of thirty. Just at this point immersionists fail to tell us how and when John got his baptism, or how Christ directed John when as yet he had not entered upon his ministry or in any way made any pretensions to authorize any one. It would be well for the cause of immersionists that they settle this difficulty. They tell us that John immersed the people and Christ, but fail to produce any authority for it. Every person of any thoughtfulness knows that the New Testament was not in existence then, and yet they adduce no other authority for baptism, and generally no other authority is embraced in the so-called careful reading. Before I had paraded my overmuch earnestness and faithful effort before the world as a means of influencing others or settling Bible doctrines I should have prepared myself to account for the above discrepancies.

Those who hold to sprinkling have no such difficulties or discrepancies. We know that the Scriptures, the Old Testament, was the authority for Christ and John and the apostles. Our Lord's own words show that his course and doctrine were in conformity to the law and the prophets, even to a jot and tittle. As might be expected, St. Paul affirms that the principles of the doctrines of Christ were plainly set forth in the Holy Scriptures, and that, it was not necessary to lay the foundation of religion again or re-formulate his doctrines, for these were the first principles of the oracles of God. (Hebrews vi, 1-4.) Every Bible student knows that Paul's reference here is to the Old Testament and to the doctrines therein taught to the Jews. One of the most was baptism. Not only was baptism taught, but even its doctrine was well known, and for the purpose of baptism there was a brass laver made for the water.

We declare that baptism was instituted of God in the days of Moses as one of the prominent symbols setting forth a prominent doctrine—namely, the baptism of the Holy Ghost. In the first chapter of the Acts mention is made that the promise of the Holy Ghost baptism had been made by God, and this as much as the promise of the Lamb of God. This doctrine was set forth in symbol as well as the doctrine of a sacrificial Lamb whose blood took away the sin of the world. After reproving the Jewish Christians for his ignorance, "for when for the time he ought to be a teacher" of these doctrines, "he had need that one teach him again which he the first principles of the oracles of God"—the Scriptures which had been committed to them for keeping, he says: "Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." This shows that Christ taught only that which was set forth in the Scriptures, which is in accord with his own words that he came not to destroy the law or the prophets, not to abrogate what was taught there, but to bring to pass and maintain the word of God to man. For this purpose he was made "a minister of circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." (Romans xv.) "Not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith toward God, and of the doctrine of baptism," etc. After what Paul says here let immersionists, and especially the Baptists, cease to assert that the Old Testament does not teach baptism. Nothing is so plainly taught or its doctrine set forth as baptism. It was taught in the law of Moses and foretold by the prophets; the prophets foretelling even the mode of it—how John and others were to perform it. Ezekiel xxxvi, 25: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you," etc. Unless prophecy fails, somebody was baptized by the sprinkling of clean water. No immersionist can produce such clear scriptural testimony as an expression of God's will.

It is useless to argue that the Old Testament is done away with. This old cry, like that of babies, should be put away after becoming acquainted with the Scriptures. Immersionists try to evade the force of these facts by a flat denial, without supporting evidence, that baptism was taught back there. Say they: That was purification. But St. Paul settles this dispute at once, for he called it baptism, which establishes the fact that purification and baptism are one (and the same thing—namely, a symbolical washing, which is precisely the meaning of baptizo—the word used to relate the baptism that took place under the ministry of John and the apostles. If the word had no meaning but "dip," an argument would have been made that a change in the mode of baptism was designed; but as it carries the meaning, "to wash" or "cleanse," and as St. Paul called symbolical purification baptism, and that, too, as the doctrine of Christ, the idea set forth in the Old Testament is transmitted in the New. And, as God had expressed his will as to the mode of baptism by prophecy, it precludes the possibility of a change.

"Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you," etc., forever kills the immersionist idea as originating with John or Christ by inspiration, for the question of mode was previously fixed by the will of God. Nothing in this line of evidence and authority has ever been advanced in favor of immersion. As to baptizing the people in Jordan, being advanced as evidence in favor of immersion, it carries nothing as authority for the circumstance, as baptism by sprinkling could be performed in Jordan without wetting the entire person, which is entirely reasonable from the fact that they were in the wilderness without vessels; and, as the object of going into the wilderness was to establish the fact that spiritual worship in this wilderness of sin may be conducted anywhere, to carry out God's will and plan they, in defiance of any preparation, went right down into Jordan, to the water—one of God's natural basins—and upon a sandbar at the water's edge John stood, doubtless, with a bush in hand, fulfilling the prophecy upon which the people relied as scriptural evidence of spiritual baptism promised and looked for, sprinkling the clean water upon them, thus symbolizing the pure influence of the Holy Spirit upon the mind and heart, purging away the filthiness of the flesh—thus carrying out the other part of the prophecy: "From all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you." (Ezekiel xxxvi, 25.) This explains somewhat the nature of John's baptism. It was an assurance of something better—namely, "the baptism of the Holy Ghost and with fire."

For a short time, while sacrificial worship was being laid aside, baptizing in this crude manner was kept up (not immersion), but was to be no more a permanent rule of the church than worship in the woods was to be kept up. To hold to the one would force us to hold to the other, which was not the case, as is evidenced by the baptisms that took place in houses. This crude mode of worship does not seem to have lasted even to the close of Christ's ministry, as he baptized his apostles in the upper room that had been prepared for the eating of the Passover. A careful study of the washing of the disciples' feet will convince any one that it was performed as the symbol of the washing of the Holy Ghost baptism. For more light on this subject read "The Lost Key Found," to be had from me or Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Always Grand, Always Majestic.

BY REV. J. W. HARMON.

What volumes of meaning lie wrapped up in the word "faith," and what amazing results have been accomplished by its persistent and heroic exercise!

Countless volumes have been written and millions of sermons have been preached to explain its applications and its results, because the actors on the changing theatre of human life may pass away, but the inspired thoughts and the grand results of faith remain, shedding their light across the troubled bosom of a dark and guilty world, like beacon fires, lighting up the distant horizon, guiding the pilgrims to a heaven of rest. The grand utterances of faith in the ages past, as they were allied to God, goodness and truth, have outlived the battle-throes of the hearts and minds who gave them birth, and thus the garnered truths of the past, intensified by ten thousand lives and thousands of experiences, are still held as a cherished heritage to be again reproduced, and then roll on with increasing power to lift other minds and hearts into the pure realm of faith.

But the Author of all faith, and the Giver of all faith, and the Exemplar of all faith, humble, alone and on foot, the living embodiment and express image of God, the personification of the Father's love and the fullness of the Godhead, walked through the streets of Jerusalem, and none of all that living multitude, save the large-hearted Martha and the two disciples at Emmaus, invited him to the comforts of an earthly home. "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Humble, alone and on foot, he was rejected by the wise rabbis, the rich and the multitude, as he taught a band of fishermen, nineteen centuries ago, the eternal truths of a mighty faith that was to light up and gild the mountain ranges of thought in all future ages as the sunlight then gilded the Temple's blazing dome at Jerusalem and the mountain ranges and hill-sides of Judea. He then and there taught a majestic faith that was to change the thoughts, the customs, the habits and the hearts of mankind, working out a grand revolution in the worship of the world.

Wonderful epoch in the world's history when the supernatural gift and power of faith was to belt the earth with "the foolishness of preaching!" Wonderful teachings—so grand in outline, so wide in their grasp and so majestic in power—to live forever! Wonderful faith that called down cloven tongues of fire upon the head of humanity that was to beam and blaze in vestal purity in the gospel of the Son of God! And these grand truths and this majestic faith, which the divine Teacher taught in the Jewish synagogues, on Jordan's banks and at Siloam's still waters, have become our personal heritage, attesting their spiritual power and their Divine origin.

Age has not dimmed the lustre of these truths nor shaken the foundations of this majestic faith. These grand truths have held their triumphant way amid the perils of the field and fire and flood; amid appalling disasters and bloody deaths; amid the cruel strokes of plotted vengeance and the red blood of martyred millions, and still they stand serene in majestic faith amid earth's stormy scenes the only hope of perishing millions, and the only light that pierces eternity and casts anchor within the vale.

What we need now is majestic faith in the prophet and an intensified faith in the power, carrying us across the leprose of nineteen centuries, bringing us face to face with the divine Master; a faith that holds the omnipotent God at our right hand; a faith that rides upon the high mountain tops of redemption; a faith that holds fast by the truth "that heaven and earth may pass away," but the truth and faith enunciated by Christ in the synagogues, and by the sea-side and hill-sides in Palestine, "remaineth and abideth forever." O, for a sublimer consecration to the life-work of the great Master! O, for Christianity in earnest, with its tongue of fire and majestic faith!

PEARLINGTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: As some of our brethren have been writing about their reception I thought I might say a few things about mine. I was not received with a smoking dinner at the parsonage, owing to the fact that we were not expected. But if we did not find a sumptuous spread we found an abundance of provisions in the larder. A good sister invited us to take dinner with her. The people have been very kind to us here, which we fully appreciate. Owing to the bad weather and sickness we have not formed many acquaintances, yet we are well pleased. Our congregations are good. I do trust that the Lord will pour out his spirit upon us and that we shall have a gracious revival. Pearlington is situated on the bank of Pearl river, containing about six hundred inhabitants. The other appointments, Gainsville and Logtown, are small villages. J. D. HAYS.

Sketch of the Life and Ministry of Rev. Geo. Shaffer.

December 2, 1864: The Alabama Conference was divided at the last session into two conferences, to be called the Montgomery and the Mobile conferences. Ours is the latter, and consists of about one hundred and twenty members. The seat of our Conference this year was Tuscaloosa, Ala. We had a very pleasant session. Bishop Andrew presided. He is greatly venerated by the preachers. He preached on Sabbath from, "Take heed unto thyself, and unto thy doctrine; continue in them; for in so doing thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." It was very appropriate, and calculated to do great good. Dr. Garland, the president of the Alabama State University, delivered an address to the Conference on the religious education of children, which was a great thing. Dr. Summers was the pastor of the church in Tuscaloosa. He is very active on Sabbath-school, and devotes himself to the Sabbath-school, lecturing there every Sabbath. I was appointed to a new field—a mission to the hospitals and soldiers in Columbus.

December 5: I visited the hospitals on Friday and Saturday, and conversed with the sick. I found several professors of religion who seemed to realize the presence of God, and all received my conversation kindly. I preached Saturday night to the soldiers. There were eight or ten mourners at the altar, and two joined the church. We are holding meetings every night. The Baptist missionary, the Presbyterian chaplain and myself uniting and opening the doors of our churches at the same time. There are, perhaps, 1,000 men here now, and many more expected. The hospitals are in a fine state of discipline and kept in the most perfect order and cleanliness.

January 12, 1865: We are holding a meeting for the soldiers in our church in Columbus every night. Dr. J. B. McKerrin is preaching for us, and I trust we shall have a revival of religion. I feel great anxiety to see a revival, and am praying for it with great earnestness. The soldiers appear interested in our meetings, attend church well and many of them evince a desire for salvation, and have availed an interest in our prayers. There are quite a number of wounded Yankees in our hospitals at present. I have visited them and conversed with them on their beds. Many of them seem to regret the war. I tried to direct their thoughts to the subject of religion. A few of them appear pious, but most of them are very wicked. They seem pleased with the attention they receive from our surgeons and nurses, and I hope the kindness of our people will improve their wickedness and make them ashamed of their treatment of our people.

November 12, 1865: I have within the last five or six months been strangely affected. My first serious attack was after working in my garden before breakfast. I came in to hold family prayer, and while reading a chapter I suddenly became unconscious for several minutes. When I recovered consciousness I found my wife and daughter, Eliza, bathing my head with cold water, much alarmed. I did not fall from my chair, my eyes were opened I was informed; but I had no consciousness. Two physicians were sent for, who applied remedies, among other things putting a large blister on the back of my neck. I was only conscious at intervals during the whole day, although I was told I conversed with my friends who visited me. I recovered at the close of the day my right mind. It is a strange affection, and may result in sudden death or in the total derangement of my mind. I wish to record my gratitude to my kind and gracious heavenly Father for the grace which he has imparted to me under such trying circumstances. He has blessed me in an unusual manner. I was not only resigned, but happy and rejoicing. I am perfectly delivered from all foreboding apprehensions as to the result. I have placed my case in his hands entirely, and feel willing to die soon or live long, to labor or to be laid aside as useless lumber by the church. I have proved the faithfulness of my Redeemer during thirty-five years, in which I have been engaged in his service. I have found all his promises yea and amen. He has blessed me in health and in sickness. He has provided for me and my family. He has sustained me in trials and afflictions. He has given me kind friends. He has given me the comforts of life. He has educated my children. He has given me one of the best of wives to help me and sympathize with me. What have I to complain of? Nothing. On the contrary, who has so great cause of thankfulness? Not one. I would, therefore, call upon all that is within me to praise and magnify his holy name for his goodness to me and my family. God is good, and worthy to be praised and adored by all creatures in all places of his dominion. I can never be sufficiently thankful for the grace which brought me into covenant with my blessed Savior and for the spiritual blessings conferred upon my poor unworthy soul. Glory be to his holy name forever! I can be a witness for my Savior. I can testify, from my own blessed experience, that the Bible is true, and every promise will be fulfilled that is believed and tested. God help me to believe with all my heart, and feel willing to risk my soul and all I have and own upon the faithfulness of the God of the Bible. (To be continued.)

Retrospective.

SEVENTEENTH PAPER.

COLE'S CREEK CIRCUIT.

After the appointments were read out by Bishop Paine, at Vicksburg, I was interviewed by that good man, and consecrated preacher, Rev. Thomas Clinton, so long and favorably known as one of the pioneer preachers of the Mississippi Conference, who informed me that my colleague, Bro. Newcom, was a young man, inexperienced in the ministry, and in social life that, properly advised and cared for, he would, in time, render the church valuable service, said he would kindly any advice calculated to improve his mind and heart, etc. Bro. Newcom was early at his post of duty and applied himself to the prescribed course of study. At the ensuing Annual Conference was reported as having acquired a thorough knowledge of the books prescribed. He was modest and unassuming; for a young preacher, well received on the circuit; so youthful in his appearance, that when he called on old Bro. W., quaint, but clever man, to spend the night, he said to him: "You left your mamma too soon, when you came here. You will have to feed your own horse, grease your shoes and change your own tobacco." In reply, the "boy preacher" said: "If I fed my own horse, he will be well fed; I can grease my own shoes if they require it, and as for chewing tobacco, I never use the weed." On the tobacco question, our young brother furnished an example worthy of imitation by many of his seniors. Bro. Newcom acquired a reputation of being eloquent on the terrors of the law and the doom of the impenitent. As he is still an effective preacher in the North Mississippi Conference, and has had the advantage of thirty-seven years' experience in circuit work, I presume he has learned to "rightly divide the word of truth, giving to each their portion" in due season. No doubt he loves to dwell upon the precious promises to the faithful and the pleasing theme of heaven. While we read the fearful denunciation that "the wicked shall be turned into hell and all the unrighteous that forget God," We also read "Glorious things are spoken of the O city of God." In that glorious city there remaineth a rest to the people of God.

When my appointment was read out for Cole's Creek circuit, knowing that I was to succeed some of the best and most gifted men in the Conference, I confess to a degree of distrust as to my ability to fill so important a charge. Dr. B. M. Drake, Green Rogers, A. T. M. Fly and other leading ministers had traveled this circuit. When I joined the traveling connection I did so with a purpose of submitting my case to the judgment of my superiors. My greatest fears were that my ability to perform duties belonging would be ever, not under, estimated, and such I confidently think has been the case up to the present writing. More about Cole's Creek circuit in a next.

Starkville—Sardis.

On the afternoon of Thursday, November 11, we were in due time at the Illinois Central depot in Starkville. While stopping here and there to change a pleasant word with friends, getting tickets and looking after baggage, a shrill whistle gave notice of an approaching train. Hastily, yet cheerfully as possible under the circumstances, we say "good-bye" to a number of friends who had come down to take leave of us and to three dear ones who were to stay behind us. Boarding the train, we are borne away, and Starkville, with its comfortable district, its friends, its kind friends, its memories and warm attachments strengthened by a four years' growth, vanishes rapidly from view. We are alone; my other self, myself, three younger children, Baker, Sr. and Gertrude, who thus turn our backs toward the setting sun and toward the North—our destination, Starkville, in the South-eastern, Sardis, in the North-western division of the North Mississippi Conference.

A day at Grenada, the scene of former home and labors, is rendered most enjoyable by the generous hospitality of Bros. Thamba, Nowell, Markham and their pleasant family. Here we meet also Bro. T. Y. R. Jr., returned to his last year's tour of Grenada station, and Ritchie, just entering upon his field of labor, Grenada circuit.

Saturday morning, on scheduled we are at the Sardis depot. The opinion of younger members of the circuit is that the preacher's house found practical answer in the fact that we met us and conducted us to our parsonage where our friends were waiting to receive us. First, burning in the grates, tempered chill of the raw morning and giving inviting appearance to surround new and strange. A warm break-

The religious press is unanimous and outspoken in condemnation of the skating-rink craze. Some active pastors are taking hold of the matter with prudent, but firm hands.

The Christian Intelligencer calls attention to the fact that "the Wesleyans, who were cotemporary with Gibbon, Hume and Voltaire, never made more than a passing allusion to them in any of their sermons." The amount of flogging the modern apostles of nubbelf—Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall and Spencer—get every Sabbath by the average pulpiteer would astonish the staid old fathers of Methodism.

The great debate in the English House of Commons on the Egyptian policy of the Gladstone ministry ended in a victory for the premier. He was sustained by a small majority, but enough to demonstrate his marvelous power as a statesman and parliamentary leader. Other local questions caused an adverse vote of the Parnellites, or his majority would have been much larger. We hope Mr. Gladstone will remain in office until his policy in the Sudan shall have been fairly and fully tested.

In another column we publish some kind words about our Methodism from Bishop Huntington. And now Bishop A. Cleveland Cox, of the diocese of Northern New York, speaks lovingly of brethren in other communions, and deprecates a too ready disposition among some to change church relations. We reproduce the following, with a hearty Amen! "This is what I say always when brethren of other communions desire to receive orders in my own diocese because 'they admire the liturgy,' etc.: Nay, remain where you are while your conscientious convictions are that you can do so without spiritual loss; and even as to that be very sure. Grace has visited you where you are, or else your present impulses are worthless. Bless God for what he has given, and wait, I say, upon the Lord."

As we go to press the imposing ceremonies of inaugurating a new President of these United States are being conducted in the national capital. Always a great event in our political history, it is the more significant this year, as the new chief magistrate represents a party policy opposed to that which has been in power for twenty-four consecutive years. That the incoming administration may be unsectional, conservative and patriotic above mere party expedients is the earnest desire of every true citizen whatever his political affiliations. The fear that Democratic ascendancy would imperil the rights and liberties of the lately enfranchised colored race has already been proven the silly scare of the demagogue. The South has now an opportunity which will be eagerly improved to demonstrate her loyalty to the national flag and her devotion to the highest interests of the general government. Those who prophesied evil of our people will be known as alarmists and false accusers.

To the current number of the North American Review Archdeacon Farrar contributes an article on "Future Retribution." He restates his well-known views on that subject, doubting the eternity of future punishment and hoping that an after-death repentance will be accorded all who pass out of earth with no knowledge of Christ. He concludes with these words, "which are an admission that he has no settled convictions to support his charitable hope. We had better adhere to the plain words and clear inference of Scripture. To encourage a hope of repentance beyond the grave, when it may be there is no place for it, though sought carefully with tears, is perilous in the extreme. He says: 'It is clearly beyond our power to dogmatize with any confidence upon the whole subject; but we fall back with perfect faith upon the certainty that the Judge of all the earth will do right, and meanwhile we are true to the best we know when we guide our whole lives in accordance with his eternal laws and take our conception of his sovereign attributes of love and mercy which all of us believe that he has given to them in the Son of Man, the Savior of the world.'"

Ministers and Physicians—Their Code of Ethics.

The calling of the minister and the profession of the physician justly claim the highest places in the reverence and esteem of the world. So nearly are they related, and so beneficent their missions, that a like purpose ought to dominate both. Body and spirit are so intimately, vitally connected that they mutually react, and the condition of the one largely determines the state of the other. Physical languor produces spiritual lethargy, and vice versa. The relation between orthodoxy and good digestion is exceedingly close. This doubtless accounts for the fact that so many physicians become materialists. Studying physical phenomena for a specific purpose, and noting their influence on mind and spirit, they reach the conclusion that all of "man's acts are the result of organization." Or, as another writer declares, that "the soul is but the sum total of nervous processes." This is the error and danger of specialists. They become incapacitated for broad generalizations. All theories of life and morals must, quadrate with certain facts they have discovered and classified. But to the devout and more comprehensive student the human body, "fearfully and wonderfully made," is the world's most marvelous piece of mechanism. And its "maker and huilder" could be none other than a God of infinite wisdom.

Our purpose, however, is not to study materialism, but to consider the code of ethics that should be a bond of union between physicians and ministers and the authoritative law in their relations to each other. Both on errands of mercy, their paths often meet. Body and soul alike diseased, the healer of the one and the comforter of the other are frequently summoned to the same bedside. The physician, intent on the patient's physical health, sometimes deprecates the preacher's presence and deprecates the value of his ministrations. On the other hand, the earnest preacher, solicitous for the spiritual restoration of his parishioner, may have too little respect for the physician's prescriptions and proscriptions. And in various ways they are so related that an ethical law should be formulated for mutual control. As helpful to such a result, we offer a few suggestions born of a somewhat varied pastoral experience.

1. Pastors should never make invidious comparisons among well-accrued members of the medical profession. About nothing are people more sensitive than the skill and capacity of their family physicians. And if one should be successfully disparaged who has lost a patient in a household, sorrow will only be intensified with the thought that the result might have been different if other medical counsel had been consulted. The selection or retention of a family physician is a matter too delicate for even a pastor's interference. He sustains such relations to all members of the fraternity as to forbid his being the champion of either, only in so far as he exercises the right of selection for his own household.

2. Pastors ought never to sell or prescribe and rarely, if ever, endorse patent medicines. It is one of the sacred and inviolable laws of the profession that all discoveries in medical science should be given to the world; that it is wrong to conceal what may be good for the healing of nations; that a patent-right on any discovery in materia medica is merchandise in human misery. This doctrine is sound in morals and worthy of all praise. And then all physicians are uniformly kind and attentive to ministers and their families. They visit us day and night and esteem it a privilege, with no thought of money remuneration. Now, if we become the vendors, endorsers and prescribers of nostrums, elixirs and "old woman's remedies" among the people, we discount the physicians, undermine their practice and render ungrateful return for their benevolence to us. It always pains us to read in a patent medicine advertisement, "What a Minister Says." The people have a right to buy and use these remedies; but it is not becoming in pastors to be their agents or advocates.

3. Physicians, especially if they be church members, should inform pastors of the seriously sick in their congregations. Often the pastor is accused of neglect without cause. The doctor was called, but the preacher never thought of it. A thoughtful physician could in this way render the cause of Christ great service. It would cost them but little trouble, and might redound richly to the church of God.

4. Physicians should accord pastors all reasonable privileges in the sick-room. Here collisions occur, and nearly always because of the rigid and often heartless prohibitions of the doctor. We have seen the frown knit their brows as the minister entered the house. And most positive and repeated warnings were given against allowing the patient to become excited. When directly asked if the pastor could be admitted, he either promptly objected, or shook his head ominously and remarked that they would have to be responsible for the consequences. Multitudes have gone into eternity, hungering and crying for spiritual counsel, because the doctors feared for them to be excited. And not infrequently the very thing they fear is needed for the patient's reaction. We have acquaintance with a conspicuous illustration in the writer of these lines. It is doubted if patients are ever unfavorably affected by the presence of a prudent pastor. On this subject the following sensible words from a distinguished medical authority are commended to all physicians who may read this article: "By the very necessities of his profession, the physician must have authority in the sick-room. That he does not have it is often the occasion of discomfort and disaster. The minister, too, from the very nature of his calling, and by the common consent of society, has a place in the sick-room. It is not, however, one of authority; and if he would serve his cause to the best advantage, he should see to it that he makes no claim which shall interfere with what the doctor considers the patient's safety. Few people pass through severe illness, fewer still approach the hour of death without wishing to see some minister of the gospel and hear his voice. This fact does not argue, however, that the clergyman may be admitted to the bedside at all hours of the day or night, or even at all times when the patient desires. * * * The necessary concessions are not all on one side. If the physician does withhold the natural courtesies due to the sick or their spiritual advisers, he can find no fault if his wishes are disregarded and his authority circumvented."

If these suggestions were generally adopted, many of the embarrassments and unpleasantness of the sick-room would be avoided. The observations of every thoughtful pastor will endorse the above as worthy of acceptance and emulation.

Reflections on Methodism.

The New York Christian Advocate, of last week, contains an article with the above title by Bishop F. D. Huntington, of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is possibly the most polished writer in his church and a man of the largest classical and theological attainments. What he says, therefore, of a sister church is entitled to respectful consideration. Evidently he has studied Methodism in its genesis, genius and history with a broad, candid purpose, and not as a narrow ecclesiastic. We believe him when he says, "Any dividing sentiments are distant from all our dispositions toward these believing and brave and prosperous brethren; that it is approximation and not alienation that we long for; and that we pray their God and ours to give to them more and more the spirit of power and love and of a sound mind." That our readers may have the benefit of the reflections of a broad-minded Christian scholar of another communion on the spirit and mission of Methodism, we make some extracts from this article:

To a Protestant Episcopal Churchman the primal and overmastering merit of the disciples of Methodism must be that they hold by the root, and from the root draw their life. Their King is our King, their Savior our Savior, their Jesus our Jesus. In the Methodist belief and worship and piety there is for the Son of God no substitute or rival. In as complete a sense and to as great an extent as with any class of Christians from the beginning, not excepting the Continental mystics, the aim and end of their training and preaching have been to bring the soul into an affectionate personal relation with Christ. It is a relation of gratitude for a personal deliverance or redemption, of trust in a personal friend. To whatever degree of confidence, assurance, or whatever sense of absolute immunity from spiritual evil this faith may have mounted it has never been wanting as a fact in any fair representative expression of the Methodist mind. From the Christy sermons of John Wesley, and the Christy hymns of Charles, it has passed into the succeeding generations of preachers and slingers in all the organized societies and mission fields where they have appeared. Their literature, their homiletics, their statelier or more emotional documents, their more thoughtful or least considered exhortations, are lighted and redolent with the burning incense of the name which is above every name. So far as it was included in the vast sum of the Divine purpose—in the coming of the Lord of the earth in the second Adam, that the distant God should be brought near, that the sovereign God should be made a brother, a bridegroom and a companion,

That he, the old eternal Word, Should be a child and weep, that the hand of the Almighty Creator should be felt by his child reaching after him and lifting him out of misery, and that the Majesty of heaven should be known by man as walking at his side and speaking tenderly to him and covering him with the lavish tokens of his love—so far as this the Methodist movement is conspicuous in holding fast the deposit of faith once for all delivered. Whether or not in some cases or modes this intimacy passes into familiarity, so that endearment encroaches upon reverence, depends, we think, chiefly on temperament and taste.

Already we have implied a tribute to what is probably in the general mind, regarded as the predominant virtue of Methodism—its buoyant, sanguine, indefatigable earnestness. Be it more the faith of emotion, or the faith of conviction, Methodism believes in its principles, in its message, in its vocation, in its capabilities, in itself. As long as men are men they will look with sympathy and admiration on this quality, and will pardon to it many extravagances and mistakes.

Methodism works for results, and they are generally results worth working for. It makes an imposing numerical and geographical exhibit. Its trophies react upon its feelings and reinspire it. The solemnity of its errand does not becloud its joy. It is prevalently good natured. Even in controversy, though it may sometimes miss the mark, reason is consequently, or slight history, it very seldom becomes sour or vituperative, and there is a common tone of sweet temper in its social gatherings. Of course we wish that Wesley's veneration and love for the Church of England had left a deeper mark on his followers on both sides of the seas—as we wish many other things; but wishing is not the business of the present writing. The actual foremost peril of all Christian bodies at this moment is one and the same—secularity—the enticing and overbearing power of this world, the temptation to a plausible, but degrading materialism, that mad passion for superficial goods and frivolous pleasures which is not far from idolatry and sensuality. Judging by the "pastoral" to which we have referred, our Methodist friends perceive and deplore these corrupting tendencies in our modern life. Their frank self-censure relieves us of any occasion for strictures which might have only a sound of supercilious patronage or partisan contention.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate says:

The national government keeps Sunday at the New Orleans Exposition. Secretary Frelinghuysen ordered the Government Building closed on Sunday, and wrote to the director-general that President Arthur suggested that all the Exposition be closed on the Sabbath, that an observance established in the United States by custom and religious principles might not be violated.

Our brother is mistaken about the keeping. True, the order was issued by Secretary Frelinghuysen; but the entire Exposition is open on Sunday as other days. And what is more, Christians from abroad—deacons, elders, stewards and class leaders—come to New Orleans and give sanction to Sabbath desecration by their attendance. By what logic or casuistry they reconcile their conduct with the Lord's commandment we have no means of knowing.

Thomas Jefferson's Charities.

The March number of Harper's Magazine contains a very readable paper on the private and domestic life of Thomas Jefferson. Among other things noticeable in the admirable discussion is the fact that Mr. Jefferson gave so liberally of his income to church, educational and charitable institutions. Indeed, it is doubted if any of his successors, with a larger salary, have emulated his good example. As Mr. Jefferson's name has so persistently been associated with unbelief, and the statement repeated that he was a skeptic, it will be interesting to our readers to see the following entries in his expense account. No entry appears more frequently in his diary than "charity," ranging in sums from twenty-five cents to one hundred dollars.

Socialism.

BY REV. J. B. A. ARRENS, D. D.

Socialists refer us to the first Christians, who had held all things in common. Ananias and Sapphira had even been punished with death because they retained some of their property for individual purposes. But this notorious couple did not suffer death because of the retention of their property, but because of their lying in connection with it. The apostle expressly declares that they could have retained all without any blame attaching to them. The apparent socialism of the primitive church does not seem to have been of Divine design, but was rather one of those excesses like the one of substituting feasting for the Lord's Supper, and to correct which a special Divine revelation was necessary. When Christ declares that the poor are always with us, he leaves us plainly to infer that the rich, too, will continue always to form part of society. Strange that socialists claim biblical authority for their evolutionary programme since, indeed, at least ninety and nine of a hundred of their membership are downright atheists! Without equalizing possession and station, all men may, as Longfellow teaches, make their lives sublime. Such equalization is contrary to nature and would make life very monotonous. The insignificant violet is not less beautiful because it is not as large as a bushy sunflower; the charming forget-me-not is not less beloved because it is not showy like the tulip and rose. A forest is made up of large and little trees; earth's surface is embraced by large and little streams; the landscape contains hill and dale; even the stars differ from each other as to size and lustre.

Man is not less man because he owns less money than his neighbors. Nor is a man happier or less exposed to human ills, sleeps better or has to work less, because he owns a few thousand dollars more than his employee.

Socialism is impracticable. Let the rich be massacred and their possessions sequestered and divided. Would it be long until those of superior intellect, industry, and frugality would accumulate more than their original share? But their increase would be at the expense of the decrease of others. It would not be long until another pro rata division would be necessary. Certainly, practically, socialism is Utopian.

I have heard it remarked that socialism is an exotic plant, and will not thrive in republican soil; our free institutions prevented the adoption of anarchical theories; dynamite and the dagger would not be brought into requisition in a country where the government is representative. Nay; socialism is not so much opposed to monarchical or even despotic government as to social inequality and inequality of possessions. In our midst socialism has secured firm foothold and gathers strength with alarming rapidity.

It is well for us to look for the fertile source of this fiery stream—for the cause of the possible existence of socialism among us. It is true, we have no military oppression, no governmental tyranny, nor have we the arrogant aristocracy of the old country. But, hold! have we not of the latter a certain species—shoddy aristocracy, or, as some one has aptly called it, "snobocracy"? It is lamentably true that many of means look disdainfully down on the less fortunate, the rich on the poor, the high on the low, the employer on the employee.

I hold that the common conception of the difference between employer and employee, between mistress and servant, is founded in error. The difference is not what it seems to be. The servant serves us for a stipulated consideration. It does not make him a menial; it is not inferiority doing homage to superiority. Work, service, is a commodity of fixed market value. No more disgrace attached to selling our labor than selling a mule or a bonnet!

If this was generally understood, and the treatment of servants be in accordance with this understanding, it would not be so difficult to secure "help" as it now is, nor could socialism find any adherence. But, alas! snobocracy is painfully rampant in the land. Very recently all "good society" was shocked by the news of a daughter of an upstart New York millionaire marrying her father's coachman. "Horrible!" exclaimed all snobocracy. Wherein lay the disparity? Of course, the waywardness of the daughter deserves censure; but who will say that the coachman is his wife's inferior? His schooling, I dare say, is superior to that of his wife. And he is manifestly an honest man, for he was selling his labor for a livelihood. No doubt about it: it is the coachman, the servant, the laborer, the artisan, the mechanic, who are considered as inferiors by the snobs.

I fear that what I here say is but as a voice crying in the wilderness. The wealthy will not hear nor yield. Their arrogance will increase. The masses will organize, oppose and combat. Fair means and foul will be employed to demonstrate that all men are born free and equal.

ONE DEAD.

BY J. W. INCHBOLD.

Is deep sleep, or is it rather death?
Not any how it is, and sweet is rest.
No more the doubtful blessing of the breath,
Our God hath said that silence is the best,
And thou art silent as the pale moon,
And near thee is an birth's great mystery—
Alas, we know not thou wouldst go so soon!
We can not tell where thy soul is rest;
But only find life's bark to come and go.
By wondrous Nature's hidden force impelled—
Thou metest the wake in sea, and none shall know
For certain which the course the vessel held—
The daily ship by us no more is seen,
And sea and sky are just as they have been.

Illustrating.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER—RARE STRANGE—A SNOW STORM.

The itinerant system keeps Methodist preachers traveling, and if they do not see and learn much of interest and importance, it must be for lack of eyes and ears well set for correspondence with the world without. A trip from Port Gibson to the northern terminus of Vicksburg district is made by rail and water as in the days of yore—the railway being twenty-nine miles to Vicksburg now, instead of eight miles to Grand Gulf as formerly, and thence about one hundred miles by water to the upper end of Issaquena county.

Rising at four o'clock and taking the train a quarter before five, Vicksburg is reached by six in the morning. The day having been spent in visiting with Bro. Woodward among his large and interesting flock, the setting sun leaves me on board a steamer on the bosom of the Mississippi, registered for Mayersville. This great river is just as wonderful now as when it was first discovered by DeSoto and his comrades in 1541. None of its majestic grandeur and awful power has been taken away by the many millions of eyes which have gazed upon its rolling waters. It is the ficklest wonder of the world. Like a huge stream of molten metal, it scours its bed from side to side. Neither respect for the fine houses which have been built near its banks nor regard for the long lines of levees which have been thrown up along its sides have taught it to keep to one fixed channel. It is a vagrant by nature and an outlaw by the consent of the government—not of the United States, but of the universe. The swiftest part of its mighty current rebounds perpetually from one shore to the other, underwashing levees and houses; here carrying off the earth from under a whole town or stealing away by no slow nor secret robbery entire plantations of thousands of acres, and there bulging up with great sand banks as many acres of dry land and covering it with trees on the opposite shore. Unfortunately, the man who loses his land on one side of the river can follow and identify his migratory acres on the other. He can only hope that the great land robber may, under the far-reaching laws of retributive justice, replace, if not his own, some other land in the place where his was taken.

The rebounding of its current has a constant tendency to crook the channel and change the course of the river. Convulsions thus produced have in several instances resulted in the current meeting itself, after a circuit of from five to thirty miles, and, by what is called a "cut off," forming an island and shortening the river by the circumference of the island. The town of Waterproof has been moved several times within recent years. Grand Gulf has been filled up, Vicksburg has been left more than a mile from the river, and the earth on which the city of Greenville now stands is imminently threatened with a watery dissolution. These awful tricks are the constant work of the Mississippi river. Overflows are its occasional holiday displays whereby listless, amaze and terrifies the inhabitants of the great valley. As for levees, they seem only to delay and intensify the destructiveness of overflows. When from abundant rains or melting ice and snow the water comes down in great quantities, it breaks the levees and spreads far and wide over the land, where it long remains to the immense inconvenience and damage of the people, because the levees prevent it from returning into the channels of the river. Many thoughtful people believe that if all outlets were opened, so that the water could pass out and return without obstruction, much less harm would result than from the present expensive and inadequate system of levees.

Early in February I saw a break in the levee about two miles below Lake Providence, just opposite the elegant residence of Judge Montgomery. The old levee had caved into the river, the new one had given way, and the water was rushing out and running, as if frightened away from the river, and spreading over all the land beyond. A hundred hands were building a new levee and might stop the overflow if the river did not rise any higher.

It is a curious characteristic of the dwellers in this valley that, as a rule, they never expect an overflow. If the water is slipping under or through the levee, or dashing over its top at every approach of a steamboat, or creeping up over their plowed or planted fields, or half way up the door-steps, or just entering the door, or half way up the legs of a bedstead, they never anticipate a rise, but think the water will go down in a few days. Neither do they generally build their houses with any reference to high water, though in many places the lands have been submerged three times in the last four years. There seems to be something in the atmosphere of this region which, if it does not inspire hope, at least deadens the sensibility to fear. The air and other surroundings appear to steal away one's bodily energies and dull even the moral sensibilities to sleep. That elastic vigor of body and mind which a bracing atmosphere promotes is wanting, and a sluggishness which seems akin to drowsiness affects both man and beast. The climate is said to be favorable to consumptives.

Not many of the owners occupy their lands. The population is constantly changing, and it is exceedingly difficult, for this and other reasons, to maintain a healthy growth of the church. Vice of many kinds, especially that of intemperance, is prevalent. Indeed, such are the surroundings that it requires a strong faith to even imagine a high degree of piety common among the people. Yet they are kind to ministers, appreciate their services, and usually support them well, though they are reluctant to enter upon a zealous Christian life. For this there are, doubtless, reasons, into which I shall not enter now.

The water and mud between Mayersville and Anguilla I found much less fearfully obstructive to travel than I had seen them in former years. The Mississippi Valley railroad from Memphis to New Orleans is producing marked changes along its course in this region. We have two brave and earnest young men in Issaquena and Sharkey counties who are holding up the banner of the cross with courageous hearts. They deserve and, doubtless, have many prayers for their success. Christ surely can save the people in the valley as well as the dwellers in the hills. But the conditions in this valley are at present unpropitious, and require peculiar adjustments of countervailing forces.

At Bovina I found reviving life, and two young stewards who reported that they had collected something from every member of that society for the support of the ministry. When and where in America has the like been done before?

Going to the Meadville charge, last week, I had a rare experience for this Southern country. Setting out with Bro. John G. Grace, the abiding friend and helper of presiding elders, early on Saturday morning, February 21, for Oak Grove—ten miles distant—we rode through sleet and snow, falling fast and falling faster for three hours. Fingers ached, feet grew numb, talking was suppressed by snowflakes as large as a quarter of a dollar filling our mouths whenever opened, hats were pulled down for protection over the eyes; we tried a "high cut," found many divergent roads, missed the way, made a complete circuit, got directions, reached the church a few minutes after eleven and found nobody there. The preacher in charge and other members of the Quarterly Conference were soon discovered at a house hard by. Here we alighted from our horses, shook the snow bands from our hats and the icicles from our beards, and were soon comfortable by a blazing fire. The appointment for Quarterly Conference, at two P. M., was heralded by the living voice of the brethren from hill-top to hill-top, and we had the largest attendance of the year, so far, that afternoon.

Preached after Sunday-school, the next day, to a goodly company of men, women and children. There was no lack of fresh air, as three doors and six windows were wide open, and there was no fire in the room. Sidney Smith's saying, that extremes of heat or cold suspend all activities of our emotional nature, was not wholly realized; for, though the thermometer stood low, some tears were shed before the service closed.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

BY REV. W. T. J. SULLIVAN, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: In the line of Christian education, I wish to say a word in your columns about Grenada Collegiate Institute, located in Grenada, Miss., the Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., president. It is the property in fee simple of our church, and is in efficient operation under the care of the North Mississippi Conference. The property consists of an ample enclosure of suitable grounds, well set with forest and other trees, and on which rises to the height of three stories a stately brick building for the purpose of a boarding-school. It therefore has the halls, music-rooms, recitation-rooms, sleeping-rooms and parlors requisite for a boarding-school, such as is now conducted there. The location is healthful and of easy access. The building itself cost more than thirty years ago $40,000, and is now intact and presents a handsome and attractive appearance. Through the windings of fortune it has come into our hands at small cost, and was organized under the present management two years ago. Bro. Newell and his faithful co-laborers have achieved a remarkable success in the scholastic work of the institute. The revenue from board and tuition pays current expenses, but does not meet all the demand. At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees it was resolved to raise $800 for immediate use in the interest of the school. The good people of Grenada have already done liberal things for this institution to save it to the use of education, and they are yet willing to do what they can; but they have recently suffered great material losses, and many of those relied on for help in the work of this school are unable now to respond. This is by far the most considerable school property and the most valuable school enterprise that claims the attention and support of the North Mississippi Conference. If we are to have any part in the work of denominational education, we should seize with vigor the opportunity given us in this school. If the members of this Conference, clerical and lay, will recall what was reported at the last two sessions concerning this school, they will, I think, see the propriety of the following proposition, viz.:

That the time for centennial contributions shall be extended through the year 1885, and that whatever is given to education be devoted to the use of Grenada Collegiate Institute.

Such extension of time has been made in some of the Conferences and is approved by the central authority, and special direction is allowed to any donor.

Let no one say that he can not give unless the school be at his door. A good school is at every man's door in the land. And it is of paramount importance just now that the denominations shall move right on with their own Christian schools to save the young of both sexes from the materialism and secularism consequent on much of the non-denominational education of the times. It must be firmly held that this Christian element is essential to complete education and can not be left out of the school-room. Now, here is an opportunity for us of the North Mississippi Conference to do in some good measure our part in this great work. Let us first see that this school is equipped for service, then we can move in another enterprise when it is well to do so. Whether contributions are made as centennial offerings or not, let them be made. And let pupils be sent there, the daughters of our people and of their neighbors, for proper education. The school is now, as heretofore, in vigorous and well-organized operation. President Newell and his estimable wife give devoted attention to the scholastic and domestic needs of their pupils, and both by instruction and example are they led to be Christians.

From Arcadia, La.

Since our last we have been to Vernon, Forksville, Downsville and Farmersville. In our church where we preached twice, one whole sash and a number of panes of glass were out and there was no stove; the weather was bitter cold. In none of the churches did we find stoves, and in some no glass windows. We found generally that the Sunday-schools had gone into winter quarters while the day-schools were kept up in spite of the severe weather and the measles. However, considering all things, the people turned out well to the preaching and did their best to listen, though they looked uncomfortable, many were shivering, and we imagined that we detected the chattering of teeth on the part of some. We do not know that much of the gospel found its way into such frozen ground. It is hard work for even a red-hot preacher to keep from cooling off under such circumstances. It is passing strange that those who have warm fires at home should consent to worship in a stoveless church when a small sum that could be easily raised without burdening any one would make God's house comfortable during the cold days of winter. We trust that on the Homer district there may be on this line a "revival of religion, pure and undefiled," resulting in stoves bought and used and missing glass put in wherever needed in all the churches. This is "a consummation devoutly to be wished." While at Farmersville we thought of our Grand Cane brother; for in one of his Conference talks he immortalized a certain indefinite part of that circuit when in his own felicitous style he told the presiding Bishop of his year's labors in the land of "Nip and Tuck," "Big Hungry," "Little Hungry," "Opposum Walk" and "the regions beyond." We are likely, before this year is over, to itinerate through and become personally acquainted with that now classic ground. The new church at Farmersville ought to be completed and not allowed to remain as it is. The Methodists are a "feeble folk" in that place, and our people there, having themselves done nobly, and the citizens generally having added liberally, it is right that help should be sought from abroad. We do not look for much to be done in Farmersville until the church has been finished and dedicated. We believe that Bro. Williams and Carll, the committee appointed by the Quarterly Conference for the purpose, will be successful in their efforts to raise the $800 needed. The over twenty-five miles of horseback riding in the cold rain and sleet on our return from Farmersville was somewhat trying, but all sorts enter into a Methodist preacher's life. Yesterday we held the Arcadia Conference and preached in another fireless church to a good, but cold congregation. This town, or rather New Arcadia, is to be our home. The new church undertaken by our Bro. Billingsley last year will be finished this year, the delay having been caused by waiting on the builder who is still at work on Col. Standifer's elegant residence at Ruston.

Last night's train brought a precious lot in the shape of wife and children, and we were met at the parsonage by Capt. Bree and his pious lady, and found a warm fire and supper prepared and other tokens of the kindly interest of this people in our welfare. This is the home of Bro. W. P. Thens, well known throughout North Louisiana as a successful merchant, devoted Christian and uncompromising friend of prohibition. Arcadia, like Ruston, is said to have a future. It is equidistant from Shreveport and Monroe, and is well located for a large and increasing trade. It is supposed that the North and South railroad, occasionally spoken of, will cross the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific railroad at this point. As of Ruston, so of Arcadia, we pray that God may take possession. The church of Christ should keep pace with the lines of railroad as they are being laid all over the land. In this, however, the saloon shows the greater enterprise. The devil works while Christians sleep, and he is found to be "wiser than the children of light." "Thinking things over" is well and necessary, but the great duty of the church is to be "up and doing" in every open field, putting her thinking into ceaseless work for God. Lincoln parish voted against license, and we look for all the district to follow suit.

Gubernatorial Quilt for the Exposition.

During the past year a neat and commodious Methodist Church has been built at this place through the energetic efforts of the Ladies' Mite Society. For several months past it has been used for the purpose of worship; it is painted and seated, but it is not yet ceiled, and there is no pulpit. The ladies have been working hard to complete it, and their latest effort promises to be as successful as it is original.

Mrs. Gov. Ireland, of Texas, suggested to the society a plan for a crazy quilt. Request to be made to the wife of each governor in the United States to furnish a block, seventeen inches square, which were to be joined together and form a quilt, to be sent to the New Orleans Exposition and there sold. Mrs. Ireland furnished the first block, which is handsomely embroidered in silk and satin, and eight other ladies responded. The quilt is now completed, and will be forwarded to New Orleans this week. It is a beautiful and harmonious piece of workmanship. Each square has appropriate emblems to represent the State from whence it comes. The following is an accurate description of that from Mrs. Gov. Stockley, of Delaware:

The center of the square is white satin, with a fac simile of the great seal of the State done in India ink, whilst the other pieces are of bright colored satins and brocades, with rich designs scattered over the whole. An embroidered peach and two peaches with leaves painted, to represent the famous fruit for which Delaware is noted, are both striking and appropriate. A very handsomely embroidered full-rigged ship is typical of one of the important industries by which our ship-yards in Wilmington, Smyrna, Frederica, Mifflin, Milton and other towns, have made our State famous in all parts of the world, as well as typical of our commerce, our facilities for navigation, and our valuable timbered lands.

The design would be imperfect without something to designate the soldiers and citizens of the State. A veritable blue hen's chicken is therefore prominent on the square. This has become a common designation of Delawareans now, and originated during the Revolutionary War, as follows: Capt. Caldwell of the Delaware regiment, who was a great lover of the now obsolete sport of cock fighting, was a firm believer that the best game cock should have for its immediate maternal ancestor a blue hen, and took a great deal of trouble, to procure this particular species of fighting roosters. Frequently when, away from his regiment in the performance of his duties as a recruiting officer, his men would say, the captain was away looking for blue hen's chickens—referring to his well known sporting proclivities. Hence the name first applied to Caldwell's recruits, was afterwards applied to all of the Delaware soldiers, and has finally come into general use to designate our citizens.

Delaware is one of the original thirteen States, and a United States flag with only thirteen stars on the azure field reminds us of this important fact in the history of our little State, whilst a beautiful rose-bud and spray of peach blossoms reminds us of our fertile lands so peculiarly adapted to horticultural and fruit purposes. In one corner appears the name of the donor and the name Delaware.

The others are equally good. There is thus placed before the eye the distinctive features, both historical and agricultural, of the respective States represented; nor is this all, for it sets forth as well the taste and genius of the ladies whose fair hands have wrought this work. This is its highest recommendation, and we may well imagine that future generations will gaze upon this lovely piece of workmanship with similar respect and admiration to that that is to-day bestowed upon the embroidered tapestries of Matilda, the conqueror's wife, in the South Kensington Museum in London.

The following are the names of the ladies who responded to the request, and to those whose courtesy and kindness our church is indebted: Mrs. Gov. Ireland, Texas; Mrs. Gov. Crittenden, Missouri; Mrs. Gov. McEnery, Louisiana; Mrs. Gov. Hamilton, Illinois; Mrs. Gov. Stockley, Delaware; Mrs. Gov. Gillick, Kansas; Mrs. Gov. Dawes, Nebraska; Mrs. Gov. Moody, Oregon; Mrs. Gov. Jackson, West Virginia.

North Mississippi Conference Minutes.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say to the members of the North Mississippi Conference that they may look for their Minutes at once, as the publishers promise positively to send them to Rev. J. M. Boon to-day. I want to say further that the delay is not the result of any negligence on Bro. Boon's part, but of the publishers to keep their promises; they having failed, as I am told by Bro. Boon, five or six times. I now move, if I can get a second, that Bro. Boon be appointed to publish the minutes of our next session, and that he be requested to make his arrangements with this printer so as to prevent the provoking delay which we have had to endure from year to year for the past several years. All in favor say, Aye; all opposed say, No!

J. D. CAMERON,
STARKVILLE, MISS., March 6, 1885.

When the prophet, Amos, was faithfully preaching the word in Israel, Amaliah complained to Jeroboam, the king, saying, "The land is not able to bear his words." Just so. When the gospel condemns wickedness and rebukes wicked men, they get very patriotic and wall about the suffering country. The liquor dealers are echoing the very words of Amaliah about this temperance agitation. They insist that the country is being ruined—that "the land is not able to bear his words." But the humble herdman of Tekoa continued to preach.

At the preachers' meeting, last week, the brethren made special report of the communion services on the preceding Sabbath. One of our German pastors stated that every person in the congregation communed except a few small children. That is an item worth prominent mention, and an ideal unto which all congregations should attain. Much is lost by a current sentimentalism that keeps many souls from enjoying this means of grace.

A Roman Catholic Church in Fall River, Mass., is in a state of rebellion. The Bishop placed over the members, almost entirely French, a pastor of Irish descent, hence this tempest. The matter has been appealed to the Pope. Everything is not lovely behind high walls and closed blinds as many innocent people suppose.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
THE PERFECT DAY.

BY SUSAN WILLIAM KILGOUR.

Life's glow with youth's glad freshness flies,
The dew upon the rosebud dries.
Kiss half the day is fled;
The flower in the night-time born,
Unfolds its leaves in early morn,
To evening dew lies dead.

The perfect rose, with blushing grace,
A while lifts up its fragrant face
Beneath a joyous sky;
Then bright hues fade, the petals fall,
And silent night-dews ebb and pull
Both o'er a dead rose life.

But though life's first glow leaves the sky,
When twilight's hues shall pale and die,
From a distant shore
A glad day dawns where coming night
Will never make its hues less bright,
Or cloud its rose tint o'er.

A Century of Methodism.

(The substance of a centennial sermon preached by special appointment to the Mississippi Conference, at Yazoo City, December 19, 1884, by Rev. J. G. Jones.)

Preliminaries: I am not going to preach a sectarian sermon to-night, but a Methodist sermon to Methodist preachers and people. In imitation of many preachers, both of the Old and New Testament, I will take no text, make no formal introduction nor conclude with a long peroration, but take up and discuss the subject in hand, and quit when I am done. Nor will I give any historical sketch of the rise and early history of Methodism either in England or America. This has been done, more or less, in all the Centennial sermons I have heard or read since our last Conference, so that we now need nothing further on the subject. My remarks will be confined mainly to what has been the history of the church since its organization on this continent, one hundred years ago, and what we may reasonably suppose its possibilities will be during the incoming century. In doing this we shall rely mostly on the logic of facts.

I. It has been estimated by some of our best statisticians that since our organization, in December, 1784, to the present time ten millions of souls have gone to heaven from our church in America, including the United States and the Canada, and including the white, colored and Indian races. I was somewhat startled when I first saw this estimate, but after looking at it carefully in detail I am satisfied it is not an over estimate. Our members have been dying all the time through the whole century, and to assist us in making our estimate let us simply look at what has been and is now occurring every week. I suppose that in American Methodism we have at least 75 weekly church papers. Each of these weekly papers has in every number from 3 or 4 to 20 or 30 obituaries of Christian men, women and children who have lately died in the Lord. It is no uncommon occurrence to find from 6 to 10 or 12 obituaries in the New Orleans Christian Advocate every week, and from 20 to 30 in the Nashville Christian Advocate. In addition, many of the obituaries are not published. This is indeed an exhilarating thought! Could we but see as God and angels see, we would see vast flocks of our people, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, rising up every hour from the bosom of our militant church and ascending to the place prepared for them in the church triumphant. Ten millions saved in the closing century is not an over estimate.

We may notice without egotism what may be called the annual overflow of Methodism. That is the uncounted numbers who are converted in our revival meetings, who for family, social or other reasons unite with other churches. This is so common that some of our sister churches look to our revivals to recruit both their ministry and membership. An eminent city pastor of a sister church did not conceal his anxiety to see his Methodist brethren have another revival, as he always had a gain in his church as the result. Where this result occurs spontaneously we do not regret it. Indeed, we are glad to help our fellow-Christians in this way. But there are some who hang around our revivals merely to mislead and proselyte our young and inexperienced members. They seem to know that they have not spiritual power enough either in their ministry or membership to be successful in the conversion of souls, and they must depend on proselyting. From my heart I detect a sneaking proselyter.

II. In view of preaching this sermon, and in order to ascertain the possibilities of the church in the next century, I submitted the following sums to two of the best arithmeticians in my knowledge: 1. If at the organization of our church, in December, 1784, we had 15,100 members, and, after deducting all losses, we had in December, 1884, 4,000,000 members, exclusive of the Canada, by the same ratio of increase how many members will we have in 1984? 2. If in December, 1784, we had 81 preachers, and they increased by December, 1884, to 25,913 traveling preachers and 34,123 local preachers, by the same ratio of increase how many will we have of each class in December, 1984?

They each arrived at the same figures in their calculations, which led me to believe they were correct. But they went so far up in multiplied millions of members and millions upon millions of preachers that I hesitate to give the aggregates. If the church has the same ratio of success in the next century as it has had in the past, there will be far more Methodists in North America than there are now inhabitants, including all of every race, creed and color. This is the logic of figures, and show the possibilities of the church. What the facts will be is yet to be seen.

III. God is unchangeable in all his ways, and what he did for the forefathers he will do for their descendants. If they adhere to the doctrines and polity of the church as their fathers did, and have as much personal piety and zeal as they had, and labor as diligently for the salvation of souls as they did. Let us then search for the old paths and walk thereon. In other words: Let us be true Methodists in doctrine and discipline, experience and practice, and God will prosper the children as he did their fathers. Let us pause here a moment to retrospect the past and look prayerfully and hopefully to the future, and then betake ourselves, with a full consecration, to the work before us.

IV. Let us now inquire what must be done to maintain the ground already won and make the same ratio of progress the incoming century that marked the past. I may answer this inquiry by quoting the language of Paul to the Philippians: "Let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." We must have the deep spiritual experience and imitate the example and zeal of our forefathers in the ministry and membership of the church. If we would have their success in winning souls to Christ.

V. In order to continued success we must persist in keeping a truly converted and wholly consecrated ministry. We have excellent tests and rules for the reception, graduation and perpetual purity and efficient usefulness of our ministers if we will only enforce them, without respect of persons, in every case. With all our care to keep our ministry pure and efficient, we are sometimes deceived and disappointed; but then we have rules by which we can soon clear our pastorate of all who either can not or will not discharge the duty of an itinerant pastor. The disabled can be retired and the indolent and inefficient can be located. We owe it to the purity and perpetuity of the church to have only a truly converted and consecrated ministry. What were the Wesley brothers, with all their college and theological training, worth as preachers until they were themselves converted and had an experimental knowledge of justification by faith? In our annual examination into the lives and official administration of our pastors we should be scrupulously exact and honest lest we retain among us those who will be a curse instead of a blessing to any work assigned them.

Our itinerant plan is, without doubt, the heaven-ordained plan of spreading a knowledge of salvation among the people and nations of the earth. The Old Testament preachers, such as Samuel, Elijah and Elisha, and others, were traveling preachers, and so was John the Baptist, our Lord and the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament. The final commission given by Christ to the ministry is: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." And their authoritative commission implies perpetual and universal itinerancy. Our itinerant system is of divine authority, and should be as esteemed by our people. We have, however, another very important department in our ministry which we believe is equally of Divine appointment. We have a worthy class of men who have the piety and all other qualifications for the work of the ministry, whose providential circumstances are such that they can not become itinerant preachers; yet they are moved by the Holy Ghost to give their services to the church as local preachers, and where they are faithful we can not too highly esteem their piety and zeal and overestimate their usefulness. They have often introduced Methodism into out-of-the-way places, where it has flourished as a tree planted by the rivers of water.

VI. Another thing of indispensable importance to our success as a church is for our ministers to clearly understand and fully preach all our cardinal doctrines. When Mr. Wesley and his coadjutors commenced the great Methodist movement the theology of Christendom was greatly befogged and clouded with almost every form of Antinomianism; but they eliminated all that was heretodox from our Articles of Religion and gave us a pure Arminian creed, and the preaching of those doctrines, under the blessing of their Author, has given us our unparalleled success. It is not necessary for me to do more at present than to name our cardinal doctrines. Each of our ministers should become familiar with them as to be able to state them clearly and enforce them earnestly both in his public and private intercourse with the people of his charge. They are: The fall of man; the universal depravity, guilt and helplessness of sinners; an unlimited atonement; the free agency of man; repentance; justification by faith; regeneration by the Holy Ghost; adoption; the witness of the Spirit; entire sanctification, both as a growth and an attainment; possibility of falling from grace; the general judgment, with eternal rewards and punishments. The faithful preaching of these doctrines is what God owns and blesses to the salvation of souls.

VII. In the face of all opposition and the jeers and sarcasms of some of our co-religionists we must adhere to our revival system. The church can not live and prosper without frequent revivals. A large proportion of our best members have been converted in our revivals. We must not abate our altar work nor give up our revival songs and choruses, but keep the revival flame in full blast.

VIII. I have only time in conclusion to call your attention to our great connectional interests which are doing so much to extend and perpetuate the prosperity of our beloved Zion. The first in importance is our domestic and foreign missionary system. By legitimate missionary work the world is to be conquered to the cross of Christ. The next, perhaps, in importance and usefulness is the general circulation of our book and periodical literature. In view of their happiness and usefulness, we wish our people well read, religiously. Next comes in review our educational interests, colleges, academies and uncounted number of high schools. We do not ask anybody to educate our children for us. We are responsible and propose to educate them ourselves, because we feel the great importance of educating them religiously as well as intellectually. In connection with this I invite prayerful thoughtfulness to our great and growing Sunday-school system. It has been immensely improved of late years; but it greatly needs some additional improvements to make it all the church desires to see it. Last, but not least, I invite your attention to our Church Extension association. I am so enraptured with the success of this new movement of our church, I wish I had time to tell you all I hope about it. But Bro. Morton, our Church Extension secretary, is here, and we shall have the pleasure of hearing what he has to say about his success before Conference closes.

Finally, brethren, I am permitted to reckon myself among the happiest of old men. I take a most hopeful view of the piety, permanency and progressiveness of our church. I sometimes hear it spoken and see it written that the church is going into an eclipse; is not now what she used to be; is perceptibly going down in piety and zeal, with many other expressions of declining healthfulness. This is a strange talk when every interest of the spiritual and material is rapidly advancing. The revival department of our Advocate shows how the church is advancing in her spiritual department, and our general minutes demonstrate her advancement in numerical strength, and I have never seen the like before of building new churches and parsonages and advancing all our connectional interests. To say in the face of all this that the church is on the down grade is strangely absurd. When I joined the church I knew there were some untrue members in it, and I have seen with regret too many such since that time. This chaff will be burned up in due time. By the grace of God I have been in the church over sixty-three years and in the ministry sixty years, and I rejoice to believe and feel that it is a better church to-night than ever before.

I am now done preaching semi-centennial and centennial sermons. In 1839 I devolved on me, as a presiding elder, to arrange for and hold a centennial meeting in my district to celebrate the first centennial of Wesleyan Methodism in the world. This I did at Pleasant Grove Camp Meeting, in Madison county, having to preach the leading sermon myself and read an essay on missions. When I had been in the ministry about fifty years I was requested to preach a semi-centennial sermon to the Vicksburg District Conference on the rise and progress of Methodism in the Mississippi Conference, which I did at Fayette. Soon after this, by a vote of our Conference, I was requested to preach to it while in session a semi-centennial sermon, which I did at Canton, and by the request of F. M. Featherston, my presiding elder, afterward repeated in Port Gibson. During this centennial year, by the special request of those in authority, I have preached one centennial sermon, respectively, in Hazlehurst, Wesson and Magnolia. At our Conference, in Natchez, last December, the Centenary Committee selected me (I suppose because I am the oldest man and the oldest preacher in the Conference) to preach this centennial sermon, which I have endeavored to do in my usual extemporaneous way. I conclude by invoking the blessing of God to rest in all coming time on my dear old Conference from which I have received so many tokens of love and in whose bosom I spent a long and happy life.

The Question of Pastoral Support.

MR. EDITOR: How intensely have I enjoyed reading the Advocate during the last few months! With what unruffled composure do I take up each number and with what gratitude do I lay it down!

Can it be the effects of the prevailing monetary stringency or the result of previous discussions in the church papers and elsewhere that all the brethren of the patronizing Conferences are paid up in full and have no more need to vent their dissatisfaction through the columns of the Advocate to the exclusion of more edifying matter? I speak, sir, with a full appreciation of the duty of the church to her ministry. In years past I have known the trials of boarding myself and horse, buying books and clothes, and going to Conference on a salary of $145 per annum. I repeat, sir, that I, too, have views upon the duty of the church to reward her servants. Indeed, that is a matter upon which there can be and there is but one opinion, and in that opinion all are agreed. It is rather with reference to the attitude of the ministry upon this question that I, as one of their number, would speak.

I do most solemnly deprecate the spirit in which this subject is spoken about and written about and published about by the brethren. No man of ordinary sense can enter the ministry in ignorance of the fact that its pecuniary rewards are small—smaller than those of any other calling requiring the same ability and culture; and the world, seeing the apparently voluntary choice of the calling, has little disposition to excuse complaint at inconveniences which have so easily been foreseen. And, again, if a minister enters the calling under the sense of duty which alone entitles him to entrance, how easy for him to provoke the retort, "Shall the professional seeker after souls spend his time in complaints at inconveniences which beset all?" It is my deliberate conviction that complaints and demands for pay on part of the preacher seldom have the intended effect. As a mere matter of policy, they are useless; and not only so, but actually harmful. To many men such conduct seems to put the preacher in the light of one who has entered upon a high calling for the commonplace end of obtaining his bread. So outsiders are prejudiced and cut off to that extent from the preacher's influence. His people conceive the idea that, no matter what is done by them, their pastor will not be satisfied. So they will relax their efforts.

And again, Mr. Editor, the preacher who is worried and worried others about his salary is impugning the doctrine of faith in God, which it is his duty to preach and to practice. Can a man believe that he is called of God to preach his gospel, and yet not believe that God will provide for him if he obeys his conscience? Is a preacher uneasy about his support, and always talking about it, an attractive illustration of faith in God and his providence? Are not the two rather contradictory of each other?

The mere fact that one man falls in his duty is no excuse for another to fall. If the church falls in her duty, shall the minister bring the cause into still further contempt by adding his sin of discontent to the sin of the church? Is this not to abandon his vantage-ground as a teacher from God and to descend from that height to the common level of the mere seeker after the good things of the world? The true minister of God can know no other motive save the salvation of men, and I am free to say that this is the motive of all the brethren with whom I am acquainted.

Shall a man be so imprudent as to willfully cause men to forget the higher motive of his life, and attribute to him a lower one? Is this the wisdom "of serpents"? If a man is called to preach, he is called without reference to his salary. Let him take the salary if it offers; but, above all, let him preach the word, and preach it in the most effective way, not suffering the fears and weaknesses and wants of the flesh to interfere. Let him not forget his commission in wondering what is going to become of him. Such doubting never converted the world, and it never will! OLD FOXY.

Sketch of the Life and Ministry of Rev. Geo. Shaeffer.

(Concluded.)

December 19, 1867: I attended the Mobile Annual Conference at Marion, Ala. We had a full attendance of the preachers and quite a number of lay delegates. There was more than a usual attendance of our aged men, and they appeared almost to renew their youth in association with their younger brethren. It was pleasant to witness the marked respect shown them by the younger ministers. This is peculiarly gratifying to the old men, who are easily tempted to regard themselves as needless lumber, and rather in the way than otherwise. The business was conducted with great harmony and dispatch under the presidency of Bishop Wightman, who is a most admirable presiding officer. The session closed on Monday night with the reading of the appointments. We had several admirable sermons, and I trust, a favorable impression was made. The presence of our highly venerated Bishop Andrew was very gratifying to the Conference. He was able to preach on the Sabbath, and frequently occupied the chair and gave the Conference occasionally some excellent advice drawn from his long experience. He looked well, but evidently began to feel the weight of years. I was much pleased with the lay representatives. Several of them were quite prominent men. They appeared quite pious and unassuming, and their practical common sense views were highly profitable. We found their business talents of great service on the committees.

We were most hospitably entertained. The Baptists, who are predominant there, were remarkably courteous, insisting on our occupying the body of their elegant church for our sessions. All the denominations opened their houses and churches for our service, and the preachers left with a high impression of the redemption and courtesy of the citizens. The preachers were all in fine spirits, their pockets were light; but with the love of God in their hearts and strong faith in the providence of God they went to their appointments cheerfully. May God bless their labors abundantly and make them angels of mercy to thousands!

October 19, 1868: I attended preaching in our new church, in Columbus, yesterday. It being our last quarterly meeting for this year. Bro. Ramsey, our presiding elder, preached a delightful sermon from Psalm xlii, 12-14. We had a good congregation and an unusual number of communicants. I felt reproved and profited by the discourse. I sincerely pray that I may be a better man from having heard it. I feel that I am a very imperfect creature and need much grace to preserve me from backsliding. I have no work assigned to me this year in consequence of my physical infirmity and am, therefore, in danger of becoming discontented and censorious, from which I pray God to deliver me. I have much to be grateful for. God has been very good to me. He has provided for me and my family, and we have not lacked any good thing. My health is much improved, and I hope that God will find a suitable field for me to labor in next year. I do not wish to be laid aside, but would desire to cease at once to work and live.

The Temperance Reform.

MR. EDITOR: Great reforms are usually slow in development and progress. Any attempt to change the general order of things, or the customs of society, or the habits of life, meets with opposition. The presentation of new ideas, which would unsettle the received principles in science, would provoke antagonism. And any important reform which would contemplate the overthrow of any system of religion, or any form of government, or any long established usage, must expect to be strenuously opposed, and must win its way by earnest efforts and by contending for every step of its advancement. The progress of the temperance reform movement has been slow and gradual, and every inch of ground obtained has been won by the most constant exertions on the part of its friends; sometimes gaining most glorious victories and sometimes suffering defeat with their banners trailing in the dust. Under such circumstances, though vanquished, the cause was not lost. Feeling their cause to be just, and that they were fighting for truth and the welfare of humanity, their arms were never for renewed efforts.

Knowing that,

"Thrice he is armed that has his quarrel just,"

new exertions were put forth and the enemy attacked from a new standpoint the advocates of temperance, having learned from experience the tactics of their foe and from the light thrown upon the principles of the cause in which they are engaged. Although in this movement the prejudices of the heart, the rapacity of appetite, the power of habit, and often the mistaken views of professed friends, had to be met and overcome, the cause has made steady progress. Its real friends had to become learners, and as one point was gained, they saw another step forward should be taken; that higher grounds and a firmer stand must be assumed if they ever secured what was truly desired—the rescue of their fellow-men from the jaws of the devourer and the overthrow of his power. They moved slowly and demanded but little at first, because they thought this the best plan, or most probably for the want of information in this contest. They were forced to learn from real conflicts and the experience of trials. As the enemy was driven from one position he fortified himself in another. One step had to be gained before another objective point could be brought into contest, and the position, now occupied by the temperance reformation, has been secured by slow degrees through constant and persistent efforts. When we look back over the ground at the progress of the cause we are surprised at the obtuseness, shall I say, which possessed the minds of those engaged in this noble cause and wonder that they could not see the subject as we now view it. Light had to be thrown upon the subject and they had to work by the light they had. After all, we ought not to be so much surprised, as such has been the course of all great moral reforms. Luther did wonderfully well in unchaining the Bible, and in presenting to the world a few grand truths which had been hid for ages under the rubbish of error, ritualism and superstition; and the star of Christianity once more arose above the horizon, but not unclouded. He could not, at that time, turn upon the moral world the electric light of the present century. It required the genius and clear perception of a Wesley to bring out what still remained obscured and to furnish what Luther had begun. Each should have his due used of praise. Thus let the temperance laborers all along the line of progress be applauded for their work. For we of to-day are enjoying the fruits of their efforts and reaping the benefits of their experience.

When a few were awakened to see the evils of intemperance, and efforts were made to stay the tide of ruin, pledges were obtained to abstain from the stronger kinds of liquors, leaving cider, beer and wine to continue their work of death. It was soon seen that this was almost a sanction of their use, and such pledges had but little power or influence in staying the tide of intemperance. Another step must be taken, and persons were pledged to abstain from wine, leaving cider and malt liquors still to feed the appetite, cultivate the taste and fire the thirst for stronger drinks. Then organized societies arose more fully to carry on the good work, and through them one more step was gained, and the pledge embraced all intoxicating liquors. This was progress. But it reached only those thus organized and some others by their example. The great benefit of such associations was to agitate the question to create public sentiment, and to educate the people upon the subject. They brought the cause frequently before the people, and by public demonstrations kept it constantly in view, while they endeavored to rescue individuals from the snare of the deceiver. Much good was done by these societies, but they were powerless to stay the demon in his work of desolation and death. Moral suasion was the great argument and the means used from platform and pulpit. But after years of earnest effort this mode of warfare was found ineffectual. The enemy was still fortified behind his ramparts, and the friends of temperance saw by the light of experience that something more than moral suasion was needed, and the cause of humanity demanded prohibition by legal enactments. For still, after all that had been done, wrecks of immortal beings were strewn everywhere, the groans and wallings of crushed hearts were borne on every breeze, tears of anguish flowed down the cheeks of orphanage and the blood of innocent victims stained the slabs of the insatiate Moloch. All this, and more, was done by the unsatisfied demon of strong drink. Moral suasion was then found to be ineffectual without its coadjutor, legal coercion. Now the truth has burst upon us, that erring, suffering, humanity can not be saved from this destroying adversary unless upon the principle and practice of total prohibition. Yes, the total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. With all the light that experience and common sense have thrown upon this subject there are those—and some of them professed ministers of the gospel—who still flout the thunders of moral suasion, and assert its potency to be sufficient in this contest. We have gained the position that it is constitutional for a State to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and the practical application of this right must be pressed and total prohibition secured.

This is the battle ground, and upon this line the battle is now being waged. Though the contest there, there will be no compromise on the part of the prohibitionists. Our weapons are moral suasion for the drinker and legal coercion for the dealer. It should cheer the heart to strengthen the nerve of every worker in this cause to hear from every part of the compass that prohibition is advancing. Though sometimes we are defeated in a skirmish, and occasionally in a pitched battle, we are not dismayed, for even then light is thrown upon the principles we advocate, and the friends of prohibition become confident of success in the future. The light deniers, though they have cried out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," so that their occupation will be gone. They tremble as they see the cause of prohibition gradually undermining their fortifications. Though the progress of this great cause is slower than an enthusiast would desire, yet it sure to triumph. It is manifest to all eyes. I heard Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, in a public address, say that he was the first to present a petition on this subject in the Senate of the United States. At first he did not get a hearing, but by persistence in presenting the subject session after session he finally succeeded in having the Committee on Temperance raised in the Senate. Though much has been done, a great deal remains to be accomplished before we shall see the full prohibition float over every State capital in this country. I have not attempted to portray the evils of intemperance, but to glance at the progress of temperance. It is impossible to pen to portray, or tongue to describe, or imagination to paint its terrible diabolical evils. It would require pencil of an archangel, dipped in gall of perdition, to present them in their true colors.

Death of Bishop Parker.

Again the church is called to mourn the loss of one of her chief pastors, and this time the blow falls upon our own community. Bishop Linus Parker is no more. As was his wont when in the city, he visited the ADVOCATE office on Monday morning and had a pleasant conversation with the brethren who dropped in from time to time. He was down again on Tuesday, and Thursday afternoon, at six o'clock, his gentle spirit had passed out of the body into eternal rest. We were shocked beyond expression to receive the first alarming bulletin from his sick-chamber on Thursday, at noon, and that so soon to be followed with the sad intelligence of his death. We could but look up into the opening heavens, and exclaim, "My father! my father! the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!" While our connectional Methodism will weep over the untimely fall of a noble, heroic leader, the churches in this city, where his life was mostly spent, sorrow for an intimate, personal friend and a genial, sympathizing, helpful pastor. In this narrower circle, where his rare virtues shone with their full radiance, he was loved to devotion. Old and young, rich and poor, mingled their tears over his loss and thanked God for his beautiful life.

Bishop Parker was born in Rome, N. Y., on April 23, 1829, and was, therefore, nearly fifty-six years of age at the time of his death. When a youth of sixteen he came to the city of New Orleans in quest of his fortune. Little then did he know what a history he was to make and what a blessed memory Providence would bequeath to the world! But his ways are not as our ways. He who converted a dreaming shepherd boy into the prime minister of a great government, and made him the princely benefactor of his people Israel, guided the steps of this lad into a pathway that grew brighter and brighter with the lustre of a holy purpose and consecrated zeal. He found not riches, but the pearl of great price. He became not a merchant prince, but a prince and leader in Israel. Forsaking the counter and ledger, he entered the pulpit and pastorate, and, with tongue and pen, became a messenger of life and peace to multitudes thousands. The Exchange lost a conspicuous figure, but the Church gained a hero and martyr. While diligently engaged in his clerks'hip, the Spirit was preparing him for a higher calling and nobler destiny. That thirst for knowledge which compelled him to rise early before business hours and sit up till the high noon of night, studying so unweariedly, was used by Providence in developing one of the ablest exponents of the gospel known to the history of our Methodism. Even then, under the tuition of the Holy Ghost, he was strengthening and disciplining mental muscle and fibre which in after years made him the master of great thoughts and the masterful defender of the truth.

Converted at an early age and called to the ministry with a call so clear and Divine that it could not be mistaken, he surrendered all his cherished business plans and entered the Louisiana Conference in 1849. That was a willing sacrifice without reservation or subsequent regret. He kept back no part of the price, but for all time gave himself entirely to his divine and loved employ. And from that fresh, hopeful young morning of life, through a varied ministry of thirty-six years, to the gathering twilight of Thursday last, when he "ceased at once to work and live," he never turned aside for a single moment to lay an offering upon any other altar. There were no other gods before him. A life of more perfect consecration we have never been privileged to know.

His first appointment was Algiers, then followed Lake Providence, Shreveport and New Orleans. Here he labored as pastor, presiding elder, and editor of the NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE until the General Conference of 1882 elevated him to the episcopal office. And now, when scarcely three years had passed in this higher and more responsible place, where he was meeting the largest expectations of friends and demonstrating his eminent capacity for leadership, the summons came, and he entered his Master's joy. Yet in the vigor of a splendid manhood, with all his noble powers in perfect equipoise, fitted for yet greater achievements and only bent on glorious toils, we can not understand the meaning of this midnight voice. But why he was no longer spared to feed the flock of Christ we are not permitted to ask. We can only cherish the words of his own graceful pen, which, like the fabled touch of Midas, turned everything thought into gold: "It is well for a world of sinners that God has attempted his revelations to their purblind condition, and that in mercy to human weakness only the skirts of the awful form are seen in its majestic march."

There were no imposing scenes in his death. He was not privileged to talk with friends and loved ones at the hour of parting; but such a life needed no dying testimony. No triumphant exclamations then uttered could have given so glorious and cloudless an assurance of his heavenly coronation as the stainless purity and transparent beauty of his daily walk and conversation. He did not have to secure a ticket of admission at the gates of the celestial city, because for more than thirty years he had carried a "title clear" to a fadeless crown and an incorruptible inheritance. Every day he caught "revelations of God's paradise" and lived in the conscious presence of invisible.

Bishop Parker was a humble, symmetrical Christian. He had a rich experience and a ready testimony. In the class meeting he loved to sit and was generally the first to speak, though in few words and with becoming modesty. On his rounds of episcopal visitation he never failed to attend the Conference love-feast and witness to the regenerating and sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost. There were no gaps or chasms, no abrupt heights or dark gorges, in his religious life. Whatever were his inward conflicts, he seemed to be ascending a regular incline. There was no demonstration, no ostentation, but a calm, constant, blessed glorying in the cross. His light burned with a steady flame. To outward seeming there was no eclipse—no, not even an obscuring cloud. Bishop Parker had a generous, catholic spirit. Every good cause found in him a helpful friend, and every Christian, a brother beloved. No narrow enclosure of ecclesiasticism could confine the wealth of his fervent sympathies. Though well defined in his convictions, theological and ecclesiastical, and abundantly able to defend them, he was never a partisan or a sectarian. For controversy he had no taste, but a real aversion. Born of this broad catholicity were his generous judgments. He had a genius for discerning and commending the better elements in every character, and an almost divine forgetfulness of deficiencies and unavoidable errors. Never condoning wrong, he loved to discover and applaud the right. In all our long and intimate acquaintance we never heard from him an unkind criticism or an unsanctified judgment of another. And yet withal he had the fearless courage of a hero and the unflinching purpose of a martyr.

His was a character of singular modesty and unaffected sincerity. He coveted a quiet ministry and shrank from conspicuous position. His promotion resulted from the persistent power of great merit, though against his own sincere protest. He always thought more highly of others than himself and found pleasure in their success. He was perfectly transparent. The light shone through at every pore. He had no hidden motives, no ominous concealments, no diplomatic reserve. Envy and jealousy found no place to plant a foot in his generous bosom; hence the devotion of his old Conference comrades. He was beautifully innocent of ecclesiastical politics. He never projected plans or abetted schemes for personal and ulterior reasons, for he never had enemies to punish or selfish friends to reward. His brethren honored him against his own judgment and desires. More than once, with characteristic humility, has he remarked to us that he feared the church made a mistake in his election to the episcopacy. But her call was to him the voice of God, and he obeyed with apostolic fervor and zeal.

Bishop Parker was an eminently wise counselor. He possessed an even poise of character that exempted him from partisan bias or prejudice. This enabled him to look at all sides of a question and render an unclouded, unprejudiced opinion. We have known no man whose counsel was more frequently sought and whose judgments were so readily and entirely accepted.

Bishop Parker was an able preacher. As a sermonizer he stood among the first in the Southern pulpit. His style was expository and eminently practical. He opened the Scriptures to the people with a rare, luminous exegesis, and was peculiarly happy in discovering the hidden meaning of a text. He dwelt on great spiritual themes and studiously eschewed all mere speculation and parade of learning in the pulpit. It was his profound conviction that the best cure for doubt and the surest corrective of scientific skepticism was positive gospel preaching. And all his ministrations had the aroma of the closest and the overshadowing of the Almighty. Living much and intimately with his Lord, he testified of that which he knew, and with a confidence that carried conviction. Without the talkmanic gifts and graces of the orator, never soaring into the doubtful realm of popular eloquence, he was an instructive, analytical, suggestive, profound preacher, rightly dividing the word of truth. And the oftener he was heard, the more was he appreciated. His was a vast treasury of spiritual knowledge, and out of it he always brought something fresh and savory—"food convenient" for the nourishment and enrichment of the people. In this aspect of his ministry he strikingly resembled Canon Liddon and Dr. Joseph Parker, of London.

As a journalist, the Bishop was best known to our connectional Methodism. For twelve years he presided over the columns of this ADVOCATE with such distinguished ability that he increased the high character it had already achieved under his illustrious predecessors. His taste for journalism began with his ministry. Over the nom de plume of "Woodman" he wrote many articles for this ADVOCATE in 1851—then almost a boy-preacher—that displayed the graces of style and vigor of thought which in after years gave him Connectional fame. They were the prophetic outgivings of journalistic genius. A choice extract from a letter, written in the summer of 1851, giving an account of his first visit to a camp meeting, we can not but insert: "The rural pulpit is the light artillery of gospel warfare. Readily brought into action, and admirably adapting itself to circumstances, it tells with lasting effect upon points which could not be reached through the instrumentality of church and chapel ministrations. Here I saw the peculiar adaptation of Christianity to man as the religion of the world. It finds a rostrum and an altar everywhere. Christ taught upon a mountain, a well-curb, the sea shore and the deck of a fisher's boat. With the same felicitous independence evangelists of every age have occupied the field of the world and have sowed beside all waters." During that year he conducted a controversy with the celebrated Dr. Clapp on the subject of future punishment, and demonstrated marked polemical skill and logical power. But that was the one exception in his long ministry. His was a gospel of peace. Conscientiously and constantly eschewing controversy himself, as far as possible he carefully excluded it from these columns. He was a religious journalist, and nearly all of his editorials were on spiritual themes. As a writer, he had the classic elegance of Addison perfumed with the devotional spirit of Jeremy Taylor. Some of his "leaders" were as stately as "Corinthian monid," and others as beautiful as "Doric chiseling." If collected into a separate volume by some skillful hand, which we hope will be done, it would hold a conspicuous place in any library of religious literature, and be a perpetual memorial of the Addison of American Methodist journalism.

As a Bishop, he was conservative in administration and unwearied in his labors. He traveled much, preached frequently and did all the work of a Methodist Bishop. The burdens of the office oppressed him and the care of the churches was a constant strain upon his sympathies. In making the appointments he earnestly besought Divine guidance, and keenly felt the possible privations of each preacher. There was no austerity about him. He was the same genial, companionable, modest man as a Bishop as he was in the quiet pastorate or in the editorial chair of this ADVOCATE. Had length of days been granted, he would have grown upon the church as a wise administrator and worthy successor of the apostolic men whose historic names are a precious, priceless heritage to the church.

His home life was beautiful. In that inner, sacred circle his gentle virtues shed a fragrance sweet as the breath of heaven. Of strong domestic attachments, he found the hearthstone his earthly paradise. Among the hardest trials of the episcopal office were the necessary and long absences from home. An ideal husband and a fond, considerate father, he illustrated the harmony and consistency of faithful public service with the holiest domestic duty and happiness. There's a vacant chair in that lovely cottage home; but the aroma of that saintly life will linger as a spiritual presence and joy forever.

And now this editor craves the privilege, personally, of laying a flower on the peaceful grave of his glorified friend. How he relieved our embarrassment in succeeding one so distinguished and successful, and with what generous words he encouraged our initial labors in journalism, are among the blessed memories that can never fade. He was fond of repeating commendatory expressions of the old ADVOCATE in new hands, and in every way made our introduction most agreeable. But, alas! those Monday morning visits have ceased. We shall listen in vain for the well-known footfalls, which can only be heard in distant echo. Methodism has had more conspicuous, but no saintlier, nobler spirit than Linus Parker. We feel richer in having shared his friendship and now in cherishing his precious memory.

HIS LAST HOURS.

On Sunday morning he preached to his beloved little flock at Louisiana Avenue, from the text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek." After the sermon, which was characteristic in freshness, suggestiveness and spiritual power, there was a most impressive and delightful communion service. That was the Bishop's last sermon, and doubtless if his own desires had been expressed, he would not have ordered otherwise. He would have sought that modest little chapel to deliver his last will and testament. At night he attended service at St. Charles Avenue with his family and was a helpful hearer to the sermon preached by the pastor, Rev. Beverly Carradine. And what a hearer he was! Not critical, not censorious, but prayerful, sympathetic, attentive, encouraging. On Monday he came down in the city and spent two hours or more in the ADVOCATE office. He was never more genial and companionable, and talked cheerily of his work, the Baltimore Conference he was to attend this week and his long line of District Conferences during the year. Again on Tuesday he came down to Camp Street, and, as was his habit, walked all the way home, a distance of three miles. During the night he suffered great pain in one ear, but after the application of some simple remedies relief was given and he fell asleep, resting comfortably during the early morning of Wednesday. There was no apprehension on his part or his family's that any serious illness would result. But as his symptoms seemed not to improve in the afternoon, a physician was summoned, who arrived about seven o'clock. Mrs. Parker met him in the parlor and explained the case in a few words—her entire absence from the room occupying not more than five minutes. But when they returned the Bishop was unconscious and never again uttered a word or gave any sign of recognition. In that condition he lingered until Thursday afternoon at 6:30 o'clock, when the silver cord was loosed and the glorified spirit ascended to the house of many mansions. Bro. Carradine was with him during the entire day and other preachers came and went with softened step and anxious hearts to inquire after their beloved collaborator and revered chief pastor. Pervent prayers were offered that our Father might spare his precious life, but he chose to crown him early. When he had ceased to breathe, for a moment there was a holy calm in the room. Not a word was spoken—not a sigh was heard. There seemed to be the vanishing sweep of wings and the faint, distant echo of an unearthly music. At length the silence was broken by Rev. T. B. White, who said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away." Dr. John Matthews said, "He has fought a good fight and kept the faith." Some one then observed, "It is a fitting time to pray;" and at once all knelt around the sleeping Bishop and Dr. Matthews fervently led in the devotions. He died peacefully and the broken-hearted widow and fatherless sons, and for the church so suddenly and sorely bereaved of the councils and labors of a trusted leader. And just here how suggestive are his own beautiful thoughts in an editorial entitled "Our Friends in Heaven." "The death of one very dear to us seems to rend the veil that our faith had not hitherto quite penetrated, and the line of separation between earth and heaven, however narrow it was, becomes less now. * * * We can not but follow the spirit, just now breathing in our ears the words of a loving good-by, as it moves out into the mysteries and sublimities of the better life. Surely heaven is not any more a bright abstraction, nor the subject of speculative thought, nor of curious imaginings. It becomes as real as our own souls, and it is brought as near to us, and is as clearly discerned as our own heart-throbs. * * * And thus it comes to pass that this ordeal of affliction, under the ministry of grace, gives the highest touches and finish to the heavenly-mindedness of the children of God. It sets the riches of grace with brilliant and gems of an incomparable lustre."

THE FUNERAL.

He was buried from St. Charles Avenue Church, where his family worship and which is but a square from their residence. The funeral services were held at three o'clock on Friday afternoon. Long before the hour arrived hundreds came by every line of cars and filled the spacious temple. The pall bearers were representatives of the several Methodist Churches in the city, and each was a special friend of the Bishop. They were Messrs. R. M. Walsley, John G. Parham, B. D. Wood, Dr. J. J. Lyons, Dr. John W. Adams, W. B. Thompson and John Thompson. These were preceded by all the ministers resident and visiting in the city. As the procession moved down the aisle the pastor, Rev. Beverly Carradine, read, with trembling voice, the words of Scripture. The church was heavily draped with crape, and just in the rear of the pulpit were the words, "Our Beloved Bishop." Within the chancel two tables were covered with flowers arranged in beautiful designs. One was a magnificent arched gateway, on the top of which sat a white dove with wings spread for flight. The gates beneath swung back and stood open, ready for the triumphant entrance of the redeemed of the Lord. The other was a large cross of white flowers, with a heart and anchor on either side. After a touchingly rendered voluntary by the choir Dr. Matthews read the thirtieth Psalm, Dr. Carter read the lesson from Corinthians, and Rev. S. Halsey Werlein offered prayer. Rev. B. Carradine then announced the 730th hymn,

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ."

which was sung with tremulous tones and weeping eyes. Dr. J. B. Walker, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, and the intimate friend and collaborator of the Bishop for thirty years, delivered the funeral address. His loving portrait of a spotless character and glorified comrade was as follows:

My brethren, we come to bury a good man, an old, well-tried friend; a faithful pastor; an honored, beloved Bishop; an affectionate husband and father.

The death of this man seems to us a mysterious providence, for he was not worn by age nor wasted by lingering disease, but was in the full vigor of his many prime; he was in a position of great usefulness, which he was filling with distinguished ability. It seemed but a fair prophecy that he would enjoy ten or fifteen years more of extended usefulness to further the church, and the world seems imperatively to need such men, and can ill spare them. But we must suppose under the government of the All-wise that a good man, all things considered, dies at the best time; God makes no mistakes. "The Judge of all the earth will do right."

Bishop Parker was born in Rome, N. Y., in the year 1829, and came to this city in his sixteenth year. He entered the Sabbath-school of the old Poydras Street Methodist Church as a member of the Bible class of the venerable and lamented William Sherry. He also entered a business house as a clerk. He was early the subject of religious awakening, but did not make an open profession of religion until after his settlement here.

During a season of religious interest he was converted in his own room, while on his knees reading the Bible. He was, while yet a youth, called of God and moved by the Holy Ghost to take on him the office and the work of the ministry. The church recognized this inward call and gave him authority to preach the gospel. Not long after this he was received on trial by the Louisiana Annual Conference as a traveling preacher, in which work and relation he continued to the end of his life, filling the several works of Algiers, Lake Providence and Shreveport; then was stationed in New Orleans, where he filled the pulpits of Felicite, Carondelet and Louisiana Avenue Methodist Churches, and was appointed several times presiding elder of the New Orleans district.

He was twelve years editor of the

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

As a pastor he was most punctual, faithful and useful, visiting from house to house and acquainting himself with the spiritual condition of each member of his flock. As an editor he stood at the head of his class as a religious journalist; he wrote in the purest English; his editorials were models of their kind, were eminent for ability, most instructive and useful, and had a wide and well-earned popularity.

As a presiding elder he was prompt and constant in his attendance on the duties of his office, carefully looking after the temporal and spiritual interest of the district confided to his care.

As a Bishop, though young in office, reports from all parts of his widely extended work said that he had won all hearts by his urban manners and kindly sympathy. He filled the chair of the Annual Conferences with dignity, ability and wisdom. The appointments of the preachers, the greatest of the Episcopal prerogatives, was done with painstaking and prayerful regard for the glory of God, the good of the people and the welfare of the preachers.

As a student he was diligent in a number of studies, and considering his various and pressing duties he attained a respectable scholarship. He was widely and variously read, especially in biblical literature.

As a preacher his methods were clear and simple; no time was thrown away in the discussion of abstract and unprofitable speculations, but always practical and useful.

As an expositor of the Scriptures he excelled, and impressed you that he had drunk in the Spirit's deepest meaning and must himself be one who daily walked with God.

Bishop Parker, though regarded by all who knew him as an advanced and eminently spiritual Christian, had the humblest opinion of his own spiritual attainments; his piety had not a rigid feature, nor any ostentatious display; not saying to others, "I am holier than thou." He was among the most modest of men, shrinking from, rather than seeking, places of distinction. The large pastorate, presiding eldership, the editorship, the episcopacy, all sought the man, rather than the man seeking them. The public sentiment of the church indicated his eminent fitness for these places of responsibility and distinction, and imposed them upon him.

In all his relations he was a man of peace, no controversialist in the pulpit or in the editorial sanctum, and carefully excluded, as far as he might, controversies from the columns of his paper, and sought to fill it with matter "good to the use of edifying."

He was eminently charitable in his judgments of men, manners and opinions, allowing to others what he claimed for himself, the sacred right of thought, but with all his liberality and broad margin for others, he was a Methodist in doctrine and discipline.

He was notable for his firmness and consistent devotion to duty and to principle. He was remarkable for his equanimity and chastened cheerfulness; his conversation was sparkling but always pure.

He was so gentle and affable that the most quietest and humble felt easy and at home in his company. "He spake evil of no man," and endeavored to extenuate and excuse, as far as truth would allow, the shortcomings and derelictions of others, and if there was anything good in a character under criticism, he called attention to it and gave the man credit for it.

He was a man of frequent and fervent prayer and mighty in faith.

I remember an incident that illustrates this characteristic of our beloved friend. It occurred during the fearful epidemic of 1878. Our esteemed Bro. Matthews, as many of us well remember, was stricken with a second relapse of the yellow fever. Bro. Parker called on the morning of the critical day. He met the attending physician, who remarked: "Bro. Matthews will die, for I have never heard of a man recovering from a second relapse of the yellow fever." Bro. Parker said to the doctor: "Go back to his bedside and exert yourself to the utmost of your ability, and I will go to the parlor and pray God to spare his life." "For over two hours did Bishop Parker plead with God to grant this favor, and on his approaching the sick chamber the physician met him and said: 'There is a marvelous change in Bro. Matthews. It was not wrought by human skill; it is the hand of God.'"

Altogether his character was most symmetrical, beautifully rounded and lovely to contemplate.

Bishop Parker's last sickness was short, his death sudden and silent. It needed not that he should speak;

THE BANNER OF LOVE.

"His banner over me was love."—Sol. Song, II, 4.

O, Miriam! by the sheltering sea,

The Lord hath led thee forth at last

Into the land of liberty.

And all thy wanderings are past.

Thy joy let harp and timbrel prove,

His banner over thee is love.

O, gentle Mary! by the grave

Whence rose the loving Nazarene,

Thine and the world to live and save

From sorrow, suffering and sin.

Following the way to heaven above—

His banner over thee is love.

O, blind Barabbas! help is near,

Jesus of Nazareth passeth by;

The blind shall see, the deaf shall hear,

This is his promise from on high.

Wherever his feet footprint leave,

His banner over thee is love.

O, weeping Mary Magdalene!

Thy tears, thy sorrows, all shall cease.

The sinless One forgives thy sin.

And gently bids thee "Go in peace."

No longer will his voice reprove,

His banner over thee is love.

At midnight Paul and Silas sing,

The prison doors stand open wide;

O, Peter! on the waters, cling

To Jesus standing at thy side.

Behold him to the rescue come,

His banner over thee is love.

Still to the world the Savior speaks

To-day as when at first he came,

The bruised reed he never breaks.

No scorn to-day the meekest name.

But looks in pity from above,

His banner over thee is love.

Organized Effort.

BY REV. ANSON DOWLING.

All church effort is organized effort, else it is not church, but individual effort. The very spirit of the church is to help each other in the work of human salvation. The more perfect the organization the more mightily the spirit and power of the body. This is true of all organized bodies. It is true of an army in military warfare. When the army is perfect and courageous it is said to have a spirit of the body. Hence the military phrase, esprit du corps—spirit of the body; fellowship and brotherhood. When this is true of the church of Jesus Christ the addition of members is an increase of courage and power; otherwise of weakness and defeat. The three hundred united, brave Spartans, held their ground successfully for a time against the attacking millions under Xerxes. In like manner Gideon dismissed the timid, disorganized thousands, and, under the command of God, went out against the hosts of the Midianites with his true and brave three hundred Israelites and wrought wonders. It is true the church of the living God is not organized for the purpose only of holding the ground already conquered; but of going on from conquest unto victory till she shall come out more than conqueror. Every member of the church, therefore, is a soldier of an aggressive army.

Therefore every child of God is a missionary of the gospel of the grace of God—not only gospel, but grace. Maybe less a true missionary than the home worker; because he may not have the spirit of the church of Jesus Christ. No man can realize in his heart the spirit of life and salvation and not be a missionary—a missionary in deed. The Apostle John states this case in such light and power that his meaning can not be misunderstood. He says, "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whose hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him; how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." According to this statement of inspired authority no man can enjoy the love of God and withhold help from a needy brother, a fellow of the same nation. Besides, it is possible for a man to be very talkative and eloquent in regard to missionary work, and at the same time be wholly defective in the work itself. But it is out of the question for any person to enjoy the salvation of his own soul and not manifest it in doing good according to truth. As Christ laid down his life for the world, his true follower must lay down his life for the brethren. This is unity of spirit.

Two facts will illustrate what I am saying: During the month of June, 1862, a soldier, by the name of Arthur Glimmer, fell from the steamer Selma into the river at the city of Montgomery, Ala. He fell into the water about twenty feet from the bank of the river. On board the Selma were 800 soldiers of the Thirty-Seventh Alabama Regiment, and about 1,200 other soldiers out on land. Although there were 2,000 fellowmen at hand, and all anxious for the noble young man, struggling in the water, to come safely to shore, yet no effort was made to help him, except a few men, by word and tongue, tried to direct him how to save himself. He perished in the waters, and plenty of help within reach! How sad and really heart-sickening the event! I was present and saw it all.

In the same river at the same place, a short time from this event, about two hundred Federal prisoners were permitted, under guard, to bathe and swim. They were swimming and chattering all along from the bank out in midriver. At once all hush! What is the matter? A fellow is drowning. Almost as quick as thought the swimmers form a line of hands clasping hands, from the shore to the drowning man. With united effort they came to land, saving their sinking fellow from a watery grave. This is organized effort.

"A Mutilated Gospel."

MR. EDITOR: The very day that I read Bishop Huntington's kindly "Reflections on Methodism," published in your paper of fifth instant, I was handed a copy of a very small paper published in a Southern town and edited by a Protestant Episcopalian clergyman. In that small paper was an editorial in very marked contrast with Bishop Huntington's truly Christian views of a sister denomination. I enjoyed the Bishop's "reflections," as quoted by you, not a little, and thought, I saw in them the dawn of a brighter day for the Protestant Episcopalians as well as the Methodist Episcopalians—a day when not so much stress shall be laid upon military religion and prayer books upon vital religion and the Bible, a day when men, no longer blinded by prejudice and passion, shall recognize as the true churchman any humble, converted person, by whatsoever name he may prefer to be known, whether he be Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, or what not—the one thing needful being his having been "born again." But my pleasant thoughts were marred by that editorial in the small paper. Evidently that editor was of a different cast of mind and heart from Bishop Huntington, and had no very clear idea of the commandment which reads: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

The entire editorial is quoted for insertion in your columns, that it may have a full and free circulation among intelligent readers, so that our Methodist people may see what bigotry and intolerance and ignorance lurk in our midst. Here is the article in question, with running comments:

"APOLOGIZING."

"The Church can not prosper until our Clergy and Laity learn that she need not be apologized for. In many places in our own Diocese members of the Church take a position of timidity and act as if they thought they ought to ask the pardon of other people for being Churchmen.

"It is true our membership is few in many places compared with other bodies. (Let bodies begin with a little 'b.' They must be snubbed.) But there is no need for apologies. (Not even for selling whisky, dram drinking, card playing and wallizing for the benefit of the Church.) We have just as much right to exist under the constitution and laws of Mississippi as Baptists or Methodists. (What a pity that rhetoric required the big 'B' and the big 'M'!) We propose to exercise such right and offer no excuse and beg nobody's pardon. (Wait till you are asked.)

"Neither do we apologize for our peculiarities. It is not the way to recommend the Church to attempt to show that we do not differ very much from these bodies, and that we are half sorry we differ that little. (The difference is not little. It is vast—as vast as the difference between the 'form' and the 'power of godliness.'")

"The fact is the Church differs by a world's width from them in various vital matters of Christianity. (What fool did not know that? It does not require the wisdom of a Solomon to detect the difference between a Church called into being by an act of the Parliament of Great Britain and a Church raised up of God and existing by the power and his grace.) We are here because we believe these bodies, (not Churches) respectable and estimable as many of their members are, are teaching a narrow and deficient Gospel. (The italics and "!" are mine.) Our ways are not their ways, (Thank God!) nor their ways ours ways. (What a misfortune to the Protestant Episcopal Church!)

"If the bodies (not Churches) about us preach a true Gospel and have an unimpaired Creed and Order, then there is no excuse for our separate existence. (The introductory "!" is rich.)

"We ought to disband. (That's so; for if God is dependent on the Protestant Episcopal Church for the conversion of the world, his omniscience might be questioned.)

"But just exactly because we know they teach a mutilated Gospel, (How utterly untrue!) and have a man-made Creed and Order, (Henry VIII was peculiarly inspired, and acts of Parliament possess singularity,) we are here to stand for both in their apostolic power. (That editor must have been the man who wrote a sermon on the Apostles Creed (so called) and divided his sermon under two heads: 1. It is inspired; 2. It was written by the Apostles.)

"There must be a thorough rising in many places to teaching and a knowledge of the vital and unalterable ground (shifting sand) on which, as Churchmen, we stand. (A knowledge of experimental religion would be better.) No intelligent Churchman distrusts his position. (An intelligent Churchman.)

Nashville Notes.

MR. EDITOR: The great loss our church has sustained by the death of Bishop Parker is no where, save in his own loved home, New Orleans, more poignantly felt than in Nashville, where he had a large circle of devoted friends and a host of admirers. The resolutions which I forwarded you, some days since, were an expression of the high appreciation entertained for him by Nashville Methodists. With the entire church we mourn the loss of a good, pure, noble Christian man; a devoted minister, a talented writer, and an honored Bishop. Peace to his memory.

The latest tidings from Bishop Wilson, at the Hot Springs, are not favorable. He is not doing so well.

Great concern is felt for him in our church circles here.

The calling of Senator L. Q. C. Lamar to a place in President Cleveland's Cabinet is favorably received everywhere throughout the South, and is especially gratifying to his fellow trustees of Vanderbilt University, which institution highly prizes the services he has rendered it. Dr. W. M. Leftwich, of this city, has accepted an invitation to preach the commencement sermon at Logan Female College, Russellville, Ky., in May next. An eloquent discourse, may be looked for on that occasion.

Our Legislature is being strongly urged to pass a law prohibiting the playing of base ball on Sunday. The States of Arkansas and Indiana now have such laws, and Tennessee should not be behind in the work of preventing such outrageous desecration of the Christian Sabbath as are these base ball games.

Dr. McFerrin is attending the Baltimore Conference. Dr. Harrison was prevented from going on account of the urgent demands upon him in preparing the Centenary volume of the Baltimore Conference.

The recent commencement exercises of the medical department of the Vanderbilt University were very interesting. A large and brilliant class received their parchments. This is one of the leading medical schools in the land.

Dr. Haygood was recently bere on an educational mission. He is busily engaged on the dual biography of Dr. Lovick Pierce and Bishop Pierce. Any materials in the possession of your readers touching the lives of these eminent men will be gratefully received by Dr. Haygood.

It is gratifying to note that the biography of that great and good man, Bishop Paine, is being widely circulated. He was indeed a tower of strength in the Southern Methodist Church. No nobler name than Robert Paine's adorns the history of the church. The memorial of his life, by Dr. R. H. Rivers, his chosen biographer, will be highly prized by every one so fortunate as to possess it. For sale by Southern Methodist Publishing House. Price, $1.

Rev. Sam Jones, the greatest revivalist the South has ever produced, stopped over in our city on the tenth instant while en route to Lebanon, Tenn., where he is conducting a revival. He preached to an immense congregation at Tulip Street Church in East Nashville. It is desired that he return and conduct meetings in this city. The people are ready for his coming.

Dr. O. P. Fitzgerald, editor of the Christian Advocate, is just back from North Carolina, where he was called on a sad mission—the death of his brother, Rufus Fitzgerald, who died on the seventh instant. The tender sympathies of a wide circle of friends is extended to Dr. Fitzgerald in this hour of sadness.

"Parker Memorial Church."

MR. EDITOR: At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Louisiana Avenue Charge, of this city, held Wednesday evening, the eleventh instant, it was resolved to call the new house of worship, now being erected, the "Parker Memorial Church," in honor of our lamented Bishop—Linus Parker. His connection with this charge has been so intimate, his pastoral work such a blessing, and the fact that he was its pastor when made Bishop, preached his first sermon here after his elevation to the episcopacy, (except one in Nashville,) preached his last sermon here, and often expressed his great pleasure in worshipping with us, make it most proper that this charge should do his memory this honor. His long and very successful career as editor of one of our church papers, and the high esteem in which he is held, as one of our chief pastors, will commend the action of the Board, and doubtless thousands will eagerly avail themselves of this opportunity to evince their high esteem for departed worthy by contributing of their means for the completion of this noble enterprise. The church will be a beautiful Gothic brick structure, with capacity for four or five hundred persons. We intend it to be a fit memorial for one we truly loved. Circulars will be sent to pastors throughout our connection, who will please bring it before the people. Those wishing to contribute can address me at 378, Colliseum street, New Orleans, La.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference.

At the request of Sister Belcher, president of the auxiliary society at Raymond, where the Conference Society will meet on Wednesday, after the first Sunday in April next, I wrote to the various railroad companies, whose lines run through our State, asking for reduced rates for the delegates, in every case enclosing a postal card for a reply. From three roads no response has come, and a fourth refuses any reduction. The other roads are more courteous and more generous. The Vicksburg and Meridian will sell round trip tickets to Jackson, or to Bolton, for six cents a mile; the New Orleans and North-eastern for five cents a mile over its line, and the Illinois Central, including the Yazoo City branch, for full fare going and half fare returning. The Illinois Central road will require the certificate of the Conference secretary from those desiring half fare return tickets.

Mixing the Pronouns.

The authorities on rhetoric forbid the mixing of metaphors—such as she and he. Edwards committed in last week's Advocate, and the editor in his Scottsville letter, and confessed in the act.

We do not now recall any special deliverance against the mixing of pronouns. Perhaps the rhetorical authorities trusted to common sense to keep men from that error. They trusted that no man would undertake to fill both the grammatical numbers at once, and like a bird hopping from one twig to another and back again, he "I" in one sentence and "we" in the next, or use "my," "our," "us" and "me" interchangeably concerning himself in speech or sermon. Nevertheless, it happens that there are such sins and slanders.

A correspondent writes: "I heard a city pastor on a funeral occasion, not long since, say, 'Our deceased friend sent for me, and when we saw him, I was satisfied that he was near his end, but it rejoiced our heart to know that he was ready.' He also says, 'I heard the other night a distinguished D. D., and it was 'I' and 'we' over and over again."

Perhaps one occasion of this error may be that preachers often speak of themselves and their congregations as about to do a thing jointly: e. g. "Let us pray." "We will sing the 600th hymn." "If the sexton will lower the windows it will promote our comfort." "Next Sunday is our first quarterly meeting," etc. From such frequent use of the plural the pastor falls into it when it should not be used: "We will preach next Sunday night on Shauger's Oxi-goad."

Perhaps another cause of error is the imitation of the editorial style. Editors can say "we" and "us" and "our." A preacher has no right from custom or precedent to do so, but he reads much of such language, and ere he is aware of it slides into "we" and "us" and "our," and, waking up, steps back into "I" and "me" and "my," to the confusion of his speech and the annoyance of his hearers.

Now and then a somewhat uninformed man, not educated in the proper sense, though not illiterate, may fall into this impropriety from straining after greater precision and correctness of speech. If he would suffer himself to go along naturally, he would say "I" and "me" but imagining that somehow these expressions are less elegant and precise, he blunderingly lays hold upon the reserved right of editors, and appropriates the plural, but can not steadily hold it. It is a sword of Goliath which slips out of his hand time and again, hence he mixes the two modes of speech.

We have occasionally heard a kindred error, the mixing of "you" and "thou." We knew an able man who would begin in the old-fashioned second person in solemn passages of rebuke or appeal, and spoil all by letting himself down before he got through into the familiar "you" and "your." We advise all our brethren in the pulpit to watch these points. There may be only a hearer here and there who will take particular notice, but his mistakes will offend, and harm will be done thus far. And it will be done for the sake of error, since the things mentioned are unquestionably erroneous. Why should we commit mistakes, and so do mischief and hinder our usefulness, if we can help it? Especially let the young preacher avoid such mistakes in his youth, that he may form no habit of incurable error ere he is aware.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Memorial Resolutions.

The members of the Board of Missions and Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, together with the resident Methodist ministers of Nashville, having intelligence of the death of the Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., one of the Bishops of said church, which sad event took place at his home in New Orleans, March 5, 1885, have convened for the purpose of giving expression to the profound sorrow and sense of loss caused by this afflictive providence:

Resolved, That the suddenness of this bereavement, following so closely upon the death of his senior colleagues, for whom the grief of the church is still fresh, intensifies our sorrow.

Resolved, That in all the positions to which our honored and beloved brother was called, as pastor, presiding elder, editor and Bishop, he was always the same faithful and efficient servant of the church, giving himself wholly to its work, and discharging every trust with such ability and fidelity as to elicit its fullest confidence and to win unsought its highest honors.

Resolved, That in his transparent purity, attractive social qualities, warm affections and fidelity to friendship, were blended elements that caused us to feel that, with the general sorrow for the great loss sustained by the church in his death, is mingled a poignant personal grief for a man whose private life was as beautiful as his public career was honorable and fruitful.

Resolved, That we magnify the grace of God as exhibited in the life of our deceased chief pastor; and, while we mourn for him, we rejoice that his rounded career furnishes such convincing proof of the refining and exalting influence of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Resolved, That to the sorrowing family of our lamented Bishop we extend our sympathy in their deep affliction, and tenderly commend them to the sustaining grace of God.

Resolved, That a memorial service for our deceased Bishop be held at McKendree Church, Nashville, on Sunday, May 3, 1885, and that the College of Bishops be and are hereby requested to select one of their own number to deliver a discourse suitable to the occasion.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be published in all our church papers.

Publishing House History.

A subscriber writes to ask when the publication of this Advocate was commenced, who have been its editors, and who have been the book agents of the church. The following data supply the desired information:

The Western Methodist was established in Nashville in 1833 by Revs. L. Garrett and J. N. Mallit. This was a private enterprise, and was superseded by the South-western Christian Advocate, established by order of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1836. Rev. T. Strickland was the first editor, and continued in office from October, 1836, till October, 1840. He was succeeded by Rev. J. B. McFerrin, who edited the paper from October, 1840, till May, 1858. The paper took its present name in 1846. He was aided part of the time by Revs. M. M. Henkle, D. D., and C. B. Parsons, D. D. In 1858 Rev. H. N. McTear, D. D., was elected editor, and continued till 1866. During a few years of the war, however, the paper was suspended. In 1866 Rev. T. O. Summers, D. D., was elected editor, and continued in office till 1875, when Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., was elected editor. In 1882 he was re-elected.

From 1845 till 1854 Rev. J. Early was book agent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, but had no printing establishment, all work being let out by contract. Dr. Stevenson, located at Louisville, Ky., was his assistant. The Publishing House was located at Nashville in 1854. Revs. E. Stevenson and F. A. Owen were elected agents, and (with the exception of a short period during which Rev. J. R. Evans served in place of Rev. F. A. Owen) they continued jointly in office for four years. In 1858 Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D., was elected book agent, and continued in office eight years. The war, however, suspended operations for nearly three years. Rev. R. Abbey, as financial agent, was connected with the House, and had charge of it a portion of the time during the war. In 1866 Rev. A. H. Redford was elected book agent, and continued in office two years. In 1878 Dr. McFerrin was again elected book agent, and was re-elected by the last General Conference in May, 1882.—Nashville Advocate.

During the present century 150,000,000 copies of the Bible have been printed in 226 different languages.

[illegible]

What is the great hindrance to a civilizing and Christianizing work? The injustice of the whites in seizing Indian lands, and the bad will of government in brooking all its troubles and forcing them to perpetual removal from place to place. Many agents are greedy, unprincipled, immoral persons, and a large part of the supplies furnished by government to the tribes are worthless or stolen and sold by the agent. Liquor is sold at many of our agencies.

What do the Indians need? Disbanding of tribes, allotment of lands in severalty, permanent homes and protection against invasion, citizen's draft

"The world is not to be reformed or elevated into holiness," says Dr. John Hall: "it is to be converted."

Sir William Thompson says that the ratio of the light of the full moon to that of the sun is 1 to 70,000. Alas! what pale crescents many of us are in a spiritual sense.

Italy devotes the rentals of the confiscated church lands to public education. Its present outlay for the schools is $6,500,000, and the schools number 42,000 with 2,000,000 of children. What a marvelous monopoly the Roman Church had in real estate! And the solid blocks of buildings, yielding large revenues in some of our cities, warn us of coming danger.

Reports of marked success in the various mission fields ought to thrill the faith of the home churches. This time of universal triumph is hastening. Here is an item which reads like the Acts of the Apostles: Sixteen years ago the island of Antigua—one of the New Hebrides group—was the abode of cannibals. In eight years all had become Christians, and family worship was observed in every house.

These ringing words of Joseph Cook need to be written on the conscience of every citizen: "Nothing can be predicted with greater surety than that American political ideas will not succeed, on the broad scale or on the narrow, without exalted personal character in office to carry them out." Let the partisan who said he would vote for a mule for office, if nominated by his party, read and reflect.

It is a significant fact in English politics that any independent action of the House of Lords has no influence. In the recent vote on the government's policy in the Sudan Mr. Gladstone gained a victory in the House of Commons and retails power. But the motion of censure in the House of Lords, which was carried by a vote of 159 to 63, attracted no attention. That venerable "upper house" has a name to live, but in practical administration is moribund, if not really dead.

A great revival is in progress in Trinity Methodist Church, Chicago, conducted by Rev. Thomas Harrison. About 250 had been converted up to last reports and the influence was spreading throughout the city. This success has been achieved in face of tremendous odds. Some city preachers of national fame, notably Prof. Swing, has discouraged and spoken contemptuously of it. There is imperative need for old fashioned Methodist revivals in our large cities, for the salvation of souls, the crucifying of the worldly spirit in the church, and to warm up the temperature in some pulpits.

In a recent Centennial address Bishop Warren made the following statement in regard to the denominational educational institutions of this country: The Protestant Episcopal Church has 12 colleges, with $8,700,000 endowment; Congregationalists, 28 colleges, with $9,000,000 endowment; Presbyterians, 41 colleges, with $7,000,000; Baptists, 46 colleges, with $10,300,000 endowment; Methodists, 52 colleges, with $11,000,000 endowment. Thus it appears that Methodism, though last in the field, has outstripped all others in the higher educational institutions. And thus she is perpetuating the spirit that gave her being. Born in a university, and while pre-eminently evangelistic, she is emphasizing the obligation of the church to educate.

Some quierist recently proposed this to the New York Advocate editor: "Is it right for ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church to use any other than the Methodist Hymnal in the regular services of the church? I know a place where a change is made every year and it falls heavily upon poor members." To which the editor made wholesome answer as follows: "It is not right. Where they change books as often as that, if you will look into the matter, you will find that somebody is making a commission in their introduction. Look it up. A Methodist Episcopal Church without the Methodist Discipline, the Methodist Hymnal and Methodist usages is a mere crowd or collection. It is not anything else, and is not a Methodist Church."

A Revival of Justice.

The close of the celebrated Murphy murder trial, in this city, resulting in a verdict of "guilty" by the jury and the solemn sentence of this court, is an epoch in the history of our criminal jurisprudence. From the ample and reliable testimony but one conclusion was possible—that the brutal murder was accomplished by a foul and dark a conspiracy as fiendish malignity ever conceived. And yet this conviction was only secured after a second trial, and by the terrible lash of an aroused and indignant public opinion. Under such circumstances suspicion may be cast upon the righteousness of a verdict. Affected by the vindictive spirit of a community, jurors may be blind to palliating facts and fall to temper judgment with mercy. We do not intimate this was the case in the trial just concluded; but it may and does occur. It is, therefore, an argument for an impartial, inflexible, uniform administration of law, at once protective to the community and a terror to evil-doers. The people sometimes become aroused and take the law in violent hands because the courts fail to punish criminals, and allow them after committing dastardly deeds to go unwhipped of justice. And every such instance is a public calamity, however great the provocation.

A reform in criminal jurisprudence is the demand of the hour. According to present processes the State is at sad disadvantage in the conduct of every case, while the defendant, with the aid of skillful attorneys, has nine chances in ten for escape. The disqualifications of jurors are practically in the interest of crime. If a man has "formed or expressed an opinion" from reading the newspaper accounts of the case, he is challenged "for cause." Hence in this reading country, with an enterprising press, we suffer the disgrace of ignorant jurors, and they are proverbially tender with offenders against the laws of the land. And then with the number of peremptory challenges allowed the defense, it is exceedingly difficult to secure a competent and conscientious jury. In nothing is the success of a criminal lawyer so apparent as in manipulating the jury-box. So great has grown this abuse that grave statesmen and constitutional lawyers are discussing the wisdom of abolishing the old traditional "trial by jury." It has been heralded as one of the sacred rights of citizenship that a man should be tried by "a council of his peers." The history of past years has certainly demonstrated this to be a mere sentiment. If not abolished, radical modifications must be made, or mob law will become more alarmingly frequent.

And then again, justice has been wounded in the house of its friends by legal quibbles and technicalities. When all material facts have passed beyond dispute and the correctness of a verdict approved, an ingenious attorney secures a reversal or a new trial on a pure technicality. Thus the inferior court is put on trial before the superior, while criminals escape and society suffers. These distinguished jurists may be very learned in the law; but in such cases as recited above they resign the guardianship of public morals to an undotted "I" or an uncrossed "L."

Another enemy to justice and public morals is the readiness with which good citizens affix their names to the bonds of criminals. When a man is admitted to bail, his acquittal is almost assured. Then he is free to manufacture testimony, corrupt the State's witnesses, or secure a continuance of his case from one term to another on the flimsiest pretenses, until his prosecutors are dead or moved away. And when it transpires that a bond has been made as a financial bargain—that the required amount of money has been deposited to secure the signatures of certain gentlemen—the act can only be characterized as a treasonable outrage upon the peace of society and the sacred rights of patriotic citizenship. Shame on the man who would shield a criminal for the sake of a few paltry dollars! This matter of making bonds is a test of the good citizen. A little inquiry into it would result in a revelation.

As helpful to this needed revival of justice, and in order that the forms of law may command confidence and respect, and that society may have the surest safeguards, every citizen ought to take pride in the full and free discharge of his public duties. Some we enumerate:

1. He ought to attend the primaries and secure the nomination of good men for office.
2. He ought to vote, and cast his ballot with a conscience.
3. He ought to give moral support to every executive and judicial officer, observing that Methodist prohibition "against speaking ill of magistrates."
4. He ought not to shrink jury service.

5. He ought not to sign bonds to shield criminals.

A due observance of these suggestions would clear our criminal dockets and usher in a reign of peace.

Temperance Week.

There has been a notable gathering in our city of the leading apostles of temperance and prohibition of both sexes. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union held a series of meetings, and distinguished gentlemen identified with the great cause of constitutional prohibition conducted the exercises of the temperance days at the Exposition. At each meeting there was a vast attendance, and the interest fully sustained to the end. The addresses were of a high order, and we verily believe that the good cause received an impetus which will speed the day of glorious victory. The first grand meeting at Music Hall, on Tuesday, was presided over by Mr. J. N. Stearns, of New York, corresponding secretary of the National Temperance Society. His opening address was eminently appropriate and full of valuable information. His graceful tribute to the Exposition was heartily applauded. The report of work accomplished through this organization ought to cheer every doubting disciple with stronger faith. The basis of the society is total abstinence for the individual and total prohibition for the State. There was a thrill of power in the declaration that "this country can not exist half drunk and half sober." We may depend upon it that this is the most momentous question before this Christian Church and the American people. That the "irrepressible conflict" will end in a triumph of the home over the saloon, of society and sobriety over the grog-shop and the gutter, we have no doubt. But the battle will be long and fierce, and every hero must fearlessly stand at the post of duty.

Mr. Stearns was followed by Col. George W. Bain, of Kentucky—an eloquent orator of national fame; Prof. A. A. Hopkins, of New York; Luther Benson, of Indiana; Hon. S. D. Hastings, of Wisconsin; Ex-Gov. St. John, of Kansas, and Rev. C. H. Mead, of New York.

On Friday the meeting in Music Hall was in the interest of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Frances E. Willard presided and delivered an admirable address. One fact stated revealed a happy coincidence unknown to many good temperance workers—that while the World's Exposition is a celebration of the centennial of cotton the temperance people were celebrating the centennial of temperance reform. It was in 1785 that Dr. Benjamin Rush, a friend of George Washington, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, wrote the first work on temperance. Gov. St. John spoke at considerable length, and made an address packed full of startling figures and solid argument. He stated that the government was a full partner in the iniquitous liquor traffic, and has an interest of 90 cents in every gallon of whisky manufactured and in every gallon of beer brewed, and exacts $25 a year blood-money from each of the 200,000 retail dealers in this country. His reference to whisky-cursed Louisiana was not a pleasing picture, but a mighty appeal for redoubled effort to secure her redemption from the damnation of the doggeries. She has 5,350 liquor dealers, while Mississippi, with 200,000 more population, has 931. We hope to see both sides of the river so aroused that the migration of the saloon keeper will speedily commence, and that he will not stand upon the order of his going. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, of Michigan, also spoke, and with great edification. Thus closed a second successful day in behalf of the great reform of modern times.

Saturday was devoted to a prohibition conference in Werlein Hall. At the morning session Dr. McDonald, of California, a temperance millionaire, presided. He has been a generous friend of reform, and both by speech and cash has contributed much to its present success. In Miss Willard's address beautiful reference was made to Bishops Wightman and Parker, of our church, and to her love for the South. Nowhere, said she, was she more at home than in New Orleans. In the afternoon Miss Willard presided, and addresses were made by Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina; Mrs. Wells, of Indiana, and Mrs. Lathrop, of Michigan. Thus the several sections of our common country met on the same platform and grasped friendly hands in the same great work. This, after all, is the issue that will most surely cement the sections lately sundered by war. In the evening Gov. St. John spoke again, and received a perfect ovation. Mr. Luther Benson also delivered an address with telling effect.

City of Mexico.

Mr. Editor: On Monday night, the second instant, the Central Mexican Mission Conference adjourned. It was held in the "Mesas" Church—the one built by Bro. Daves. The preachers from distant points of Mexico were not present on account of the great expense and time required for the trip. Still we had a goodly number. There was a marked advance in the personnel of the body, and in its spirituality. Dr. Kelley was with us, and preached and talked much to the edification and delight of the audience. On Sabbath morning three preachers were ordained deacons—L. Calleja, T. Valle and D. Paz—men whose intelligence and piety would do honor to any Conference. On Sabbath afternoon we had the Conference sacrament and the love-feast. In tears, prayers and songs the abiding glory of the Holy Spirit was manifested upon our Mexican Zion. At night I read out appointments for forty-nine preachers, including five Americans. The list I append. The statistics for the past year show some advance in membership, making 1,920 members; 65 Sabbath-schools, with 1,290 scholars; 27 day-schools, with 553 scholars. Excepting in the purchase of our Mission House, but little money has been spent upon the material of the mission. We greatly need a fuller Spanish Methodist literature for Conference classes and our day and Sabbath-schools. During this past year our school for the instruction of young men preparing for the ministry and for those on trial has been discontinued for the want of funds; but we hope to resume the enterprise presently.

The trip from New Orleans to El Paso and from El Paso to Mexico was all that could be asked in the way of comfort, speed and security. Steel rails and palace cars unite these widely separate points, until the City of Mexico is scarcely farther than San Francisco from the Mississippi Valley. The scenery by the way is more striking than that of the plains by the Union Pacific route. The Rio Grande at the point where the road first strikes it is sublime in its rocky, black, perpendicular banks. On each side it is confuted by a wall of rough whitish grit which becomes black with time. Out of this rock, 100 feet above the river, the bed for the road is hewn out for many miles, and which occasionally curves out in a tunnel for some hundreds of yards, and then returns to the river's wall. It filled my idea of the shore of Gadar and of the black coasts of the Red Sea.

For many hours before reaching Mexico the scenery becomes very full of interest. Towns fed by silver mines, vast plains cultivated with wheat and irrigated from mountain streams, large herds of cattle pass under review before the swift flight of the locomotive. Near the city of Mexico the plains become picturesque with well-watered gardens, fields of alfalfa, hamlets and avenues of trees. It was the time for harvesting barley; yet the ploughs were running. Two oxen, a log of sharpened wood, with an upright piece inserted for the handle, and a goad some ten feet long constituted the whole machinery of the Mexican farmer for breaking the glebe. The cultivation is probably as thorough as this alkaline soil needs, and has not changed for 500 years.

The churches which are at work in Mexico are full of enterprise and hope. I imagine that I can see the effect already of the diffusion of the Holy Scriptures among this people. Enterprise, strangely enough, of every kind keeps pace with the preaching and the reading of the word of God. The Protestant Church here was in the advance of the railroads, and is the soul of progress. The want of all the missions and the expectation is a sweeping Methodist revival. The Lord hasten it!

The last twelve years give a noble record for the church of God in this country. It has shown the spirit of the first three centuries in its courage and endurance. I listened to the recital of Bro. D. F. Watkins of a night spent, two years ago, in the church at Atengo with women and children and a few men—one of them Crisanto Zapata—when surrounded by a mob of 500 raging Romanists, who shot volley after volley into the windows and doors of the house, shouting, "Death to the Protestants!" The roof was tumbled repeatedly, and put on the inside; but at last one-half of it was consumed. The walls fortunately were adobe. The children and women laid down close to the floor to escape the bullets. In the morning relief arrived; but the preacher and several others were carried to the prison of Tennesatlan and confined for three weeks. One of our men is now lying ill from a stab received during an attack made on the congregation at Ayotla. To their faith they have added "virtue."

The fortunes of mission work in this period have not been always smooth. It is a saying among old missionaries that "we must never be surprised at anything in missions." But in all the providences of earth the general law is, Progress with improvement. The waves may go and come, but the tide rises. This is certainly true in regard to the Central Mexican work. The labors of Hernandez and of Daves have not been lost, but are largely expressed in the triumphs of to-day.

Truly yours,
 J. C. KEENER.

Tributes to Bishop Parker.

We reproduce extracts from some of the many appreciative tributes paid to Bishop Julius Parker. The press, religious and secular, has been generous in eulogistic mention of his death, character and public services.

The Nashville Advocate spoke of him as follows:

Bishop Parker was a strong, willing worker who never shirked any labor put upon him. He kept a steady gait during all the years of his ministry, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left. When he gave himself, in his early manhood, to the work of the Lord, he did so without reservation. The completeness of his consecration gave unity, vigor and success to his career as a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ. This will be the first thought of all who knew him as he was when they make an analysis of the man and his work.

He left his deepest mark as a writer. His style was as pure as Addison's, and his spirit was as devout as Fletcher's. His editorials were models of the best English. They had the rich flavor of ripened thought. The charm of his style was not greater than the religious fervor that glowed in his melodious periods. His educative influence as an editor was in a direction opposite to the tendency of the times. He was profound without being shallow or coarse, spiritual without being mystical, bold without being rash or violent. As an editor, he did a work and won a fame that will endure.

The following is from the Times-Democrat, of this city:

The character of the deceased was one of great humility and modesty. His charity was unbounded, and he was noted for his dislike of controversy both in the pulpit and in the conduct of the journal which owe much to his earnest and well-directed efforts. With all this, he was a man of great firmness, and pursued the work he had chosen to perform without swerving ever in the least from the rigid line of self-imposed duty. He was a graceful speaker, and possessed the happy faculty of bringing out the latent meaning of the text selected for his discourse. In his personal intercourse his manners were urbane and easy, and he was ever ready to sympathize with the sorrows and troubles of his fellow-men. As a pastor, he was always diligent and faithful.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate concludes a notice with these well-chosen words:

Bishop Parker was remarkable more for the uniformity and steadiness of his Christian character and the easy, but respectable elevation of his intellectual efforts than for any brilliancy and dash in the pulpit or on the platform—a man to be loved and that was loved, and very safe in administrative judgment. His episcopal career has been brief; but it has been marked by the usual signs of hard work and deep devotion to the church of Christ, which have all along characterized the episcopacy of American Methodism. His portrait, when fairly sketched, will detract nothing from the satisfying ensemble of Southern Methodist Bishops.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate thus voices the sentiment of North Carolina Methodism:

There will be great sorrow in North Carolina at this news, for no man ever impressed himself so favorably and so indelibly upon our Conference in so short a time as did Bishop Parker.

The Southern Christian Advocate says:

His editorials were strong and dignified, and always exhibited a fine Christian spirit. He seemed to have a genius and love for hard work, and leaves a noble record of a life well filled. His sermons are reported to have been strong, clear and full of food.

The Texas Christian Advocate contains a wood cut of the Bishop and an extended sketch. He loved his Texas brethren and often spoke gratefully of his labors among them. The Advocate says:

His first two years of episcopal labor were spent in Texas, where by his courtesy, his faithfulness, his humility, his modesty, his firmness, his abounding charity and his ability in the pulpit and on the platform he proved himself well fitted for the office and work of Bishop in the church of God. His death, after one year more of such labor, seems to us a strange providence. He was not worn by age nor enfeebled by disease. He was in the full possession of all his physical and mental powers. Why was he not spared to perform for many years to come the duties of that high office which he had thus far filled with such great usefulness and distinguished ability? It may be that God would teach us how little he needs the best human counsel and the strongest human arm. He buried his workmen, but carries on the work.

The South-Western Presbyterian, whose editor, Dr. Smith, was a long-time friend of this Bishop, pays this beautiful tribute:

An acquaintance which has extended through a period of many years brought us into relations of personal friendship with Dr. Parker. It was a friendship highly prized by us, for it made conspicuous a character in which gentleness and manly courage were beautifully blended. Amiable and unostentatious to a remarkable degree, he possessed a steadiness of Christian character and an unwavering loyalty to principle which commanded respect and admiration. His humility as a Christian was evident, and it was just as evident that, when the occasion required it, he could be firm as a rock.

The Richmond Christian Advocate has the following just estimate of his great worth:

He was a clear, forcible preacher, a man of culture and refined taste, a pleasant and affable presiding officer, a discreet and faithful custodian of the interests of the church; and his loss will be much felt in the whole church, but especially in the South-west. The whole church will unite in prayer for the consolations and sustaining grace of our Lord Jesus Christ to descend upon the bereaved family.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate makes this brotherly mention:

He was a faithful, able and laborious minister of the gospel, and won his way up step by step to the highest office in the gift of his church. His loss will be keenly felt because of his great worth and also because, at this time, the working force of the episcopacy in the Church, South, is getting so small.

The Rev. Dr. Felix R. Hill, in the South-Western Methodist, writes a just and discriminating memorial of his honored friend. We quote some extracts:

Bishop Parker was one of the most lovable of men. While his natural abilities were great and his culture thorough, it was the heart in the man that endeared him most to those who knew him. He was not at all demonstrative. Indeed, his outward

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate, AT PEACE.

BY T. A. S. A.

All through my heart a calm repose
That says the world to sleep! All o'er
The sky a new radiance glows
Whi' e'er in all the past it wore.

There's a light now glimmering through the trees
As if it were an angel's wing
Hovering o'er slumbering child a breeze—
To bring to life the sleeping things.

Thine own Decoration Day—
Easter of hope and faith and love.
Peace waits for banner o'er the way
That leads from earth to heaven above.

What use for sword or helmet now?
Give up the armor for the loof!
Grape clusters ripen; bring the plow,
I would the peaceful harvest sow.

Bring me the shepherd's staff and stay
Here in the shade beside the spring.
Around me let the lambkins play
Above me let the birds sing.

Come from the glowing summer heat
Ye tolling million! Come and rest!
Come ye who with disaster meet
And live with me at peace and best.

Till the days end and storms shall hush,
Till strife be laid, till toll's release,
Far from the selfish crowd and rush,
Here let me dwell and be at peace.

China Letter.

BY REV. W. W. HOVALL.

The prayer meeting that is usually held at the residence of Bro. Lambuth has been, of late, unusually interesting. It is a sort of weekly reunion intended for all the missionaries, and most of them come and seem to enjoy it. A few days since Rev. G. W. Painter, who has just returned from his home in Virginia, gave an interesting account of the state of affairs in Canton Province. The people of that province have the reputation of being the most energetic and industrious; but also the meanest and most spiteful in China, as a rule. So it is not surprising to hear that the native Christians in that province have suffered a good deal. There have been a great many rows; some of which have resulted in the pulling down of houses and the stoning of foreigners and natives. The Chinese soldiers too, as they march past the chapels, take great pleasure in firing off their guns and making themselves generally as disagreeable as possible. This, however, is not so wonderful. The Chinese have a proverb, Hao ti hu lang ting; hao jen pu too ping, which means, "Good iron is not made into nails; nor do good men become soldiers." Such being the popular estimate of his calling, it is not wonderful that the Chinese son of Mars (rather of Kwan-Ti) should be rowdy and a blackguard, a thief on occasion, a gambler always, an opium smoker frequently, and generally speaking a bad lot. But not only the soldiers, the inhabitants generally, of the two Kwang Provinces, Kwang-Tung and Kwang-Sze, seem to be very ill disposed toward all foreigners. It is not, by any means, wholly owing to the French difficulty.

The preaching in street chapels is much hampered, the boarding-schools have been injured, the day-schools are carried on in but a feeble way, and all live in constant subjection to threats and abusive language. The old cry of "Pan-K'wei," (foreign devil), has given way to the new one, "Shat," (kill him). The missionaries are able to do a most nothing in the way of active work outside of their own compounds. The native Christians are subjected to remorseless and constant persecution. They are sometimes, it may be, passing along a narrow and crowded street with a load of vegetables swinging across the shoulder, when, just mayhap as they are passing some market-stand full of fruits or of eggs, they find themselves pushed, load and all, upon the table of the huckster. Of course, there is a row. The angry huckster scolds and abuses, a crowd gathers, and the poor Christian gets plenty of cuffs and curses, and finally has to pay for all damage done. We were rejoiced to hear from Mr. Painter that they are bearing it all manfully, and we pray that "the trying of their faith, though it be tried with fire, may be found unto glory and honor at the appearing of Christ."

Efforts to obtain redress have succeeded but poorly. The situation is complicated for Protestants by the course of the Romanists who, it can not be denied, often give their converts a kind of protection (that is a source of vexation to the officials and an occasion of some real scandals). The Chinese say that it is virtually an imperium in imperio, and introduction of foreign rule. Of course, it is easy to see how this could grow into a great and serious abuse. Fancy how it would do for a man in Richmond, who had professed Buddhism, and who was afterwards caught in any seditious act, to be protected by the Chinese or the Japanese government! Without going further I may point out the mischiefs of Mormonism, even apart from its deplorable morals, in setting at naught the authority of the laws.

The situation is a delicate one. It is utterly impossible but that troubles will sometimes arise, and it is not to be expected but that missionaries will side with the native converts in some cases justly; but, no doubt, in others ignorantly. Appeals to the consuls and ministers cause embarrassment and often hard feeling. Yet I am not one who would blame the consular and diplomatic officers in every case for not doing more than they do. For, really, their position is sometimes quite embarrassing. I will say, also, to the credit of my country, that her consuls, so far as I can learn, show much more courtesy and respect to missionaries than do those of the English. English diplomatists and German also, look out keenly for the rights of merchants; but they seem to care nothing as to whether missionaries get killed, eaten, or what not? So that efforts at redress, as I have said, succeed but poorly. Some time ago, it is said, a memorial was prepared by some missionaries at Canton and given to a Chinaman, a graduate of Yale College, to translate into Chinese. Some of the missionaries wished to see it; but he objected, saying that if they could not trust him he would wash his hands of the whole matter. Examination proved that he had designated two missionaries as two "servants." The fact that this man felt constrained to use a word so condescending in his translation clearly indicated the extent of hatred and hostile feeling among the officials. Some of the missionaries complained of the state of affairs to one of the American officials. The latter could not do anything himself, but kindly sent along one of his Chinese secretaries to the ya men, in order, at least, that the missionaries might gain a hearing. But they were ignominiously driven away, and would, it is said, have been beaten but for the presence of the secretaries.

Despite, however, of all these things, missionaries would be quite content to say nothing if there was any prospect of Chinese Christians being dealt fairly and justly with by the native officials. But the latter are known to be such an unprincipled set of sharks after money and tigers after blood, that no one can possibly feel that native Christians would get even a shadow of justice at their hands. One source of security most of them have, namely: their poverty. A wealthy Christian would be fat game for a Chinese mandarin, such as the notorious Peng Yue Ling, the man who proposed to have all converts wear a badge, to have a special sign posted on their houses, to be periodically registered in the ya men, etc. There is one encouraging thought in this whole matter. It is what an old preacher once expressed, thus:

"The devil's mad,
And I am glad!"

The rage of the evil one is great may be because he knoweth that his time is short. God speed the day of his bruising in China! In some of the home papers I notice a remark to the effect that there is not really enough of persecution in China. Yet I hear of beatings and decapitations, and I should think these should be enough to satisfy even the most fastidious. But even without these no one who reflects can fail to see that he who becomes a real Christian and gives up ancestral worship in this country does in some cases almost "die daily." Any sickness befalling the family to which he belongs is laid at his door. He is the base ingrate who risks the welfare of his whole clan by leaving unappeased the manes of his deceased relatives.

I have been much interested of late in reading for the second time a most interesting paper on this subject—Ancestral Worship—by Dr. Yates, of the Southern Baptist mission. He has made the subject a special study, and has put into a lucid and systematic form, information of the utmost value to all who would understand the problem of missions in China. The essay is to be had here, in Shanghai, for ten cents, United States postage stamps, by addressing Dr. M. T. Yates, Shanghai. It is worth ten times the money, and is, at that rate, practically gratis. But I must not make my letter too long, or I shall impose upon good nature.

Letter from Washington.

On the night of March 3, the galleries of the Senate and House were crowded to their utmost capacity, with visitors anxious to be present at the last session of these bodies. For some days it had been feared that the precipitate expression of his views on the silver bill by President-elect Cleveland would so complicate affairs as to require an extra session of Congress, and in many ways embarrass the new administration. This had caused an increasing interest in the Congressional debates, and hence the vast crowds who visited both houses. In the House of Representatives the usual disorder prevailed. How like school children are these law-makers of our land! It is distressing to a pedagogue to see this body in session, and sometimes amusing to witness the frantic endeavors of the Speaker to gain a moment's quiet. How the grave questions of national import are ever duly considered by this noisy, disorderly body is a mystery to my mind. But happily all business has been disposed of, and the dreaded "extra session" avoided.

In the early morning of March 3, I was aroused by the sound of sweet music close by, and to my surprise learned that the Arlington Hotel, our near neighbor, had already received its distinguished guest, President-elect Cleveland, in whose honor the sweet strains I had heard were discoursed. Thus quietly and privately had he arrived, twelve hours before he was expected, and no one except a few ubiquitous reporters and some sleepy train-hands witnessed the arrival of the nation's chief.

A city gaily decorated with streaming flags and banners, and filled with thousands of loyal hearts, awaited him, but only the glad sunshine looked upon his face as he entered the great city destined to be the arena of his future glory or shame.

I heard an old darkey say: "Pear like both de Lord and de people is fur de President," and so it really seemed.

Every incoming train for days had borne thousands of people to the city. It is estimated that Washington alone entertained 200,000 visitors, while adjacent towns and cities accommodated large numbers. Pennsylvania alone was represented by 8,000 troops, and many other military organizations were quartered here.

A more gloriously beautiful day than March 4 cannot be imagined. Almost every trace of the recent snows had vanished; the sky was blue and cloudless, and even the wild forget that it is March, and did not bluster. Perhaps it stood still with astonishment that a Democratic President should really be about to take his seat.

The surging mass of humanity seemed to have snuffed deep draughts of the golden sunshine, for every face beamed with good nature, and laughter, fun and good-humored remarks accompanied the inevitable push and scramble of the multitude.

The inauguration was to take place at the east front of the capitol. An immense platform had been erected and tastefully decorated with the national colors. In the open space in front, in the trees, and on every available elevation the people thronged. As a background to the autumnal picture arose the white walls and massive marble columns of the capitol, while from her lofty height on the dome Liberty smiled on the scene. In the neighboring streets the procession was forming, and the varied uniforms, the glancing bayonets, the nodding plumes, made up a scene of life and beauty. Above all a benignant sky stretched its canopy of blue, and a genial sun touched into loveliness a landscape of wintry barrenness.

When the handsome carriages containing the presidential party came in view, cheer after cheer rent the air. President Arthur, President-elect Cleveland, with Senators Sherman and Ransom, occupied the first carriage, drawn by four horses; Vice President-elect Hendricks and Senator Hawley occupied a second carriage, drawn by two milk-white Arabian steeds. The party proceeded at once to the Senate, where Mr. Hendricks took the usual oath of office. Patiently the people waited for the ceremonies in the Senate to end, and in the meantime sent up a round of cheers for Mrs. Belva Lockwood, who appeared on the "grand stand." More magnanimous than Ben Butler, she graced the inauguration of her successful rival with her presence.

At last the flag above the Senate was hauled down, and this was the signal that the crowning event of the day was about to take place. With uncovered heads Cleveland, Arthur and Chief Justice Waite appeared on the platform, and stood for a few moments in full view of the cheering throng. Cleveland is not a handsome man, and yet there is something prepossessing about him. About medium height, portly, with a full, fleshy face, adorned with a dark mustache, and a comfortable double chin. His hair is dark but thin, in fact leaving him almost bald. The face is a pleasant one, one that inspires trust; honest, open, and kind. Such an one as a child with its lingering instinct, would honor with love and trust. He impresses me, on the whole, as a man who has lived well but temperately, using but not abusing the good things of life. His bearing was easy and unassuming, and his voice as he delivered his address was full, clear and strong. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Waite, and President Cleveland kissed the Bible, a small, well-worn Bible given him by his mother when he left his boyhood's home to try his fortunes in the great world. The procession that escorted the President to the White House was, it is said, the grandest that Washington has ever seen.

The military display was magnificent. Officers in full dress uniform, cavalry on prancing steeds, infantry both in the blue and the grey, grenadiers and zouaves in their picturesque uniforms, heavy mounted artillery, all combined, with the inspiring strains of martial music, made up a grand moving spectacle.

Among the prominent officers we noted the gallant Fitzhugh Lee, dear to every Southern heart. He was second only to the President in the ardent admiration of the people, who cheered continuously as he passed.

The outgoing President carries with him the good will of the people. On all hands it is admitted that he filled his position well, and deserves the admiration accorded him. He is a man of remarkably fine appearance, and is quite a favorite in society circles.

To President Cleveland he has been kind and attentive far beyond what the etiquette of the occasion required. It is said that he will now return to New York, where a lucrative law practice awaits him.

Blaine is consoling his leisure with literary work; Belva Lockwood has resumed her tricycle and law books, and Ben Butler—well, perhaps, some of the pursuits of "ould lang syne" will suggest themselves as remunerative at this time.

The President's Cabinet nominations have all been confirmed by the Senate, and prominent among them, we are glad to see, is our distinguished Mississippi Senator, L. Q. C. Lamar. Thus quietly has the new administration succeeded that which has been in power so long, and may the bright beginning be but earnest of more glorious days to come.

Missouri Letter.

Some one has said that "there are ages, like the great Sahara, with nothing growing in them for hundreds of years; and there are ages that bud and blossom." I am profoundly thankful that God has allowed me to live in such an age as the latter—an age when "the stars begin to make pathway for the coming judge." This is surely the greatest century of the world's history—great not only because of the wonderful scientific and mechanical discoveries and inventions and the world's advancement in civilization, but more than all else because of the progress of Christianity and the development of the great evangelizing agencies of the church. It is sufficient to crown this century with glory above all the centuries, that it has seen the church of God increase one hundred per cent., and has witnessed the entire growth of the missionary enterprises of Christendom. At the beginning of this century all the world, outside of Europe and America, was given over to paganism, and no missionary would have been allowed to enter any closed gate of heathendom. To-day the gateway of every nation is thrown wide open and brave missionaries penetrate to the very heart of the dark continent. The conversion of the world waits on the liberality and fidelity of the church. Last year Protestant Christendom raised over eleven million dollars for foreign missions; but that is not quite three cents per member for all the professing Christians in the world. Ought this not to make us blush over our parsimony? But we are doing better every year; the great heart of the church is beginning to be stirred over this momentous question, and I am praying to live to see Christian men everywhere doing their "full duty in sending the gospel to all the world. Who knows but that my prayer may be answered, if God spares me to the close of this century? I have an abiding faith in the progress of human nature, when strengthened by Divine grace, and I believe men are growing better all the time and that the world is improving. Possibly the "old times," of which we hear so much, were very good; but the present times are better, and I thank God that I live in them. I have no patience with those men who adopt as their pessimistic creed, "Whatever is is worst." The fact is, that life is sealing higher all the time. There is less sin, less crime, less infidelity, and a stronger power of truth, a purer religion and a higher type of Christian character in the world to-day, in proportion to the increased population, than ever before in its history. As some one said, recently, "The pessimist who sees only backsliding from some imagined standard of life, might like to go to the days of old and live in them, to make the acquaintance of Adam and become familiar with Cain; to live in Sodom with Lot, or in Egypt with the Pharaohs, or in Rome with any of its great emperors, or in ancient Germany in the middle ages, or in France in any age but this; in England, all through its stormy history, with Wycliffe or with Bunyan; in Scotland, through its painful strifes, to worship with the persecuted covenanters; or in New England when they burned men and women who were suspected of being witches."

We are beginning to hope that the long, hard winter has broken in Missouri and that spring has at last come. We have had a winter of unusual severity, as has been the case in your sunny land. Some one who has taken the trouble to count, says that we have had forty-two snows this winter and more than thirty days when the thermometer was below zero. Of course this excessive cold weather has interfered materially with the labors of preachers on circuits, and while there have been a number of revivals reported the conversions and accessions have not been so numerous as last winter. There have been about three hundred additions within the bounds of my district, but some of our best meetings have been broken up by heavy snows and extreme cold.

One of the most honored and useful members of our Conference, the Rev. W. A. Tarwater, has been adjudged insane and sent to the asylum at Fulton. Grief for the death of his son was the immediate cause, though his nervous system had been broken down by a three months' vigil at the bedside of his child.

The Rev. Dr. W. M. Rush, the Nestor of our Conference, continues in feeble health, and writes that he has only been able to attend church two or three times since his return from California in November. His trip to the Pacific coast was not beneficial.

Another one of our old and tried brethren, the Rev. Jesse Bird, is slowly being eaten up by a cancer. He is peaceful and resigned, quietly awaiting the end.

Mr. Moody is to visit Missouri this month. He will be in Kansas City on the twentieth, twenty-first and twenty-second instant, and will hold a "Conference of Christian Workers" in St. Joseph, on March 31 and April 1.

Just now we are having a small-pox scare in this city, the number of cases being variously estimated at from eighteen to one hundred, according to the degree of fright in the person making the estimate. If it will cause the people to think of and prepare for the future, it will not be in vain.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri, M. B. CHAPMAN.

Mexican Border Mission.

The following will indicate the character of the persecutions and trials to which our native preachers are sometimes subjected:

"Rev. T. S. Rivera was in my room a few hours ago, and said he had not slept at all the night before, and from his care-worn and anxious face I am sure it is true. This is the reason: The previous night as he was entering the Presbyterian Church, some persons were standing in the door, and one asked him if the Protestants were preaching at that place. He said, Yes; let's go in and hear what they have to say. A boy screamed in his face: They are lies! They are lies! He took the boy by the arm and asked him where his father was, and then walked across the street to the house, when the boy opened the door into the yard and they entered; but as soon as they were in the yard the boy ran, screaming: Here is a man! Here is a man! His father came out and the whole matter was explained, and the preacher returned to the church. But in a few minutes he was arrested and notified to appear the next morning before the Mayor for giving the family such a fright."

"When he appeared he was told to pay a fine of ten dollars or go to jail for entering a house without permission. He protested that the boy opened the door, that he was a member of the family and they entered the house together. But it availed nothing. He was urged to secure counsel and have an investigation, but he knew he would be sent to jail until he could have a trial, and no telling when that would be. The secret of the whole matter is this: The mayor, who is very fanatical, is a brother of one of the leading priests of Saltillo, and curate of St. Stephen. And for the same reason the boy was unmolested notwithstanding the Presbyterian preacher made complaint."

"T. S. Rivera was a member of the late Centenary Conference, is well known throughout Northern Mexico, and deeply feels the capital that will be made of this whole affair by the Jesuits. However, some of the more liberal Mexicans in Saltillo feel that justice is outraged and that fanaticism is the cause of it."

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
IN 1860.(To the parents, brothers and sisters of Little 1.
Poster, who "entered her rest" on the morning of March 5, 1885.)

BY ISAAC.

I hear the murmur of the winds—and dirges of the singing day.
But neither still the voice of grief, for one we loved has passed away.
Oh! deep the shadow 'round that home! Oh!
"destitute the house" she's left.
To which she nevermore will come to cheer and comfort those bereft?

"The sorrow's wing that broods to-night o'er that
"sweet home," so lately loved With her whose presence was its light—the last sweet song bird in the nest.
Whose joyous notes still echo there, although "the sweet-sung bird has flown."
And when they how to-night in prayer those stricken ones will weep alone.

For weeks they watched to see her die, and still she lingered here in pain.
They prayed that death might pass her by. It smiled—in mercy loosed the chain.
And set the weary captive free. They heard a voice—a soothing wing—
"I'll send the Comforter to thee, and death shall lose its cruel sting."

No gentler spirit ever breathed, no purer heart ever thrilled a flesh-love.
No father brow was ever wreathed with flowers by angel hands above.
To teachers and to sisters, dear, she was her parent's joy and pride—
And sacred to each falling tear of him who mourns his promised bride.

Heard in her instrument—and voice! A sacred silence reigns o'er all.
Her name can no more rejoice the hearts of those whose tears now fall.
Those hands no more the chords will sweep, singing music, save above,
And he no more the "angel" will keep; the grave holds now his buried love.

O! gentle spirit, freed at last, from pain and sorrow thou hast flown!
The last grim warden, death, is passed, and she stands before the throne.
And sings a sweeter song above to him who suffered pain and died.
Ah! happy far in God's dear love than had she been the happiest bride!

The weary midnight vigil o'er, she takes her first sweet rest to-night.
With other loved ones gone before, she walks with God, arrayed "in white."
Soon on the boughs that shade her tomb the birds their sweetest songs will sing.
And when the spring time flowers bloom loved ones their offerings will bring.
CANTON, MISS., March 2, 1885.

"Ecclesiastical Heresy."

MR. EDITOR: In your paper, of January 29, last, you insert an article from the New York Christian Advocate, with the above title, written by the Rev. T. B. Neely, D. D. As you make no comment on the subject, it may be presumed that your object is not so much to give publicity to Dr.
Neely's views as to call attention to the so-called "heresy," and to elicit remark if anybody may have any to make.

The "heresy" is attributed to the Rev. Dr. Milley, professor of Drew University, in an essay read before the Centennial Conference, in Baltimore, in December, last, in which it is said the Doctor "boldly affirmed that our Bishops are, in ministerial order, distinct from and higher than the eldership."

Great importance is attached to this declaration. It is said to be contrary to a great and fundamental doctrine of Episcopal Methodism, and tending strongly toward "hierarchical principles." It is a "High Church heresy," which threatens us with divine-right episcopacy domination. Dr. Neely regards this question of a third order as a great and dangerous innovation, opening a vitally important question in our church government. He insists that we have but two orders in the ministry, and that this understanding must be stoutly maintained lest our church government be torn to pieces.

Now, I expect to show that this whole question—either side and both sides—has no significance—that it is just about no question at all, and is easily dissolvable into thin water. A very hasty glance at the surface may seem to invest the question with significance, while a little looking into it will show its emptiness. Dr. Neely's evidence of two orders, and not three, as the doctrine of Methodism, is of two kinds, and is easily stated: First, Mr. Wesley and several other distinguished Methodist ministers said so; and, secondly (I quote): "The very circumstance of our having acknowledged the right of elders to ordain is a sufficient refutation of the allegation." I, of course, disallow his words when he does.

We will look at this last first. When did we acknowledge the right of elders to ordain? Is the man deranged, or is he writing romance? To say that class leaders in our church have the exclusive right to make Bishops and hold General Conferences would not be a wider departure from the truth.
If elders have the right to ordain—elders as such, not some one particular elder as such might be specially invested with authority—then Bishops and all other church officers are subordinate in rank, grade, office, authority or whatever you may choose to call it. If elders have the right to ordain, then Dr. Neely and myself will go to ordaining, and ordain as many Bishops and other church officers as we may consider needful. A one-armed man might have authority, not power, to ordain; but that would not prove that one-armed men have the right to ordain. The ordaining power in our church resides, not in any church officers, but exclusively in the Annual Conference. Bishops have no right to ordain. In certain individual cases, when specially so directed by the Annual Conference, it becomes the duty, not the right, of the Bishop to ordain that particular man. If the Bishop had a mere right to ordain, then he could exercise the right or decline in any particular case as he might think fit. The vote of the Annual Conference directs him in the premises.

Dr. Neely's other testimony going in to prove that Methodist episcopacy is not a third or higher order is, that Mr.
Wesley and several other distinguished ministers, who he names, said so explicitly. This fact is true; but does it prove anything? I think not. Suppose Mr. Wesley said, "Episcopacy with us is not a third order, but a Bishop is a more elevated presbyter," and Dr. Milley says, "Our Bishops are, in a ministerial order, distinct from and higher than the elder-ship," does it follow that there is a difference between them? Most assuredly not. To stickle about sound; paying no attention to the sense, is a cheap mode of argument.

It is well known that Mr. Wesley's objection to what he called "Bishops" was not to a superintending episcopal oversight, for that he approved and created for the American branch of the church over which he was himself, in fact, a Bishop, but to what was then known in England by the name of "Bishop," viz.: a church governor by divine appointment. The former we all approve as he did; not, however, because he did, but because Scripture and common sense require it. When Dr. Milley says, "Our Bishops are, in a ministerial order distinct from and higher than the elder-ship," he evidently means what every man, woman and child in the church knows to be palpably and unquestionably true, viz.:
that our Bishops are presbyters elevated to episcopal functions. This elevation to a higher rank has no reference to an affiliation with English divine-right episcopacy, but is a mere matter of local, human expediency as are all our church officials, whether lay or ministerial.

Our church officers—all of them—are what they are because we made them so; and we made them so because we want them, and not because some other church had them in former times. If anyone wishes to know what church officers we have, let him look into the last edition of our book of discipline; and if he wishes to know why we have these and those grades, ranks, orders and offices, let him ask our General Conference. The New Testament will not inform him. We recognize the divine direction that there shall be a ministry distinct from the laity; but we see no divine direction for different certain and specific offices, or orders, in the ministry. The Bible contains no directions as to how ministerial labors or functions shall be divided, assigned or parceled out among these or those functionaries, nor what the names of these several functions shall be. But our discipline expressly recognizes more than two orders.

Dr. Neely's opponents, if he has any,
are the lexicographers and terminolo-gists—not theologians.

I said it was notorious that our Bishops were elders elevated to higher privileges and functions. And, if thou elevated, then they are not understood; not "the same" as before. We make Bishops because we want them;
not because the apostles wanted them or had them. We make a deacon out of a licentiate, and an elder out of a deacon, and a Bishop out of an elder.
Such "Bishops" as Mr. Wesley objected to we do not make nor have. The ministerial orders of deacon, elder and Bishop are climacteric, distinct and relative. If the term "orders" be objected to, while I hold it to be good in that place, I can easily dispense with it and use other terms. I will say then that the rank, position, function, or grade, of deacon, elder and Bishop distinguish inferiority and superiority in a rising, connected relation, and while each has its own separate election and ordination, there is a wider difference between the Bishop and the elder than between the elder and the deacon.

The Bishop is no longer a travelling preacher—this is, he can not receive an appointment. He can not be a member of any Conference in the church. He can not be a stationed or circuit preacher, nor missionary, domestic or foreign, nor editor, nor college professor or president, nor book agent, nor missionary or Sunday-school secretary.
He might labor in any of these fields;
but can not hold the office. His rank is above those offices.

Now, if with all these differences, vital and world wide, a man insists that older and Bishop are "the same,"
I confess my inability to hold an argument with him; and if he explains that he means same in order, but not in office, then his argument is with the dictionary makers and our book of discipline, but not with me. The entire sense of all this dispute about order and office—all sides and every phase and feature of it—among Methodists is this: There yet lurks almost unseen among us so much of popery as the supposition, latent and unexpressed, that Christ made a new church and, of course, a new ministry, creating offices, distributing duties here and there, so and so. Then the question arises, What functions pertain to elders and to Bishops? But suppose there was no new church of any kind, no new ministry of any kind; then, and in that case, there can be no orders and no offices by divine right or appointment of any sort. In that case what we call orders, offices, powers and duties in the ministry are just what the church of to-day sees fit to make in the mainly exercise of its own sound discretion. We have ordained deacons, ordained elders and ordained Bishops severally with the duties, powers and prerogatives respectively. But whether we shall continue any of them after another General Conference, or what ones, are questions to be determined, not by something Mr. Wesley said or believed, nor yet by something read in Scripture, but by the wisdom and prudence of that Conference. All our offices, orders and duties in the ministry are man-made and, therefore, temporary and changeable. Divine direction requires a ministry, with divers orders in it, but does not touch the multifarious question of dividing or parceling out the several labors, duties, powers, rights or prerogatives in the ministry.

Now what is this controversy touching order and office about? The sacer-dotal question does not come within the range of these observations. There is no controversy about High Church
"orders"—that is, scripturally prescribed or directed orders. They are divinely made; said to be: In that sense we have no "orders" of any sort or grade. Our orders are all mere offices. We make and unmake them at pleasure. Our elder's orders are more offices—call it office or call it order. And so of the deacon, and so of the licentiate, and so of the Bishop. In this use of the terms they are almost,
if not quite, exactly synonymous.

Dr. Neely talks about Scripture-made, divinely made orders, and Dr.
Milley spoke about such offices, or orders, as our church makes, has and deems expedient. Of the former Methodism knows nothing—cares nothing. Now, if these two gentlemen will write on the same subject—about the same thing—their seeming differences will disappear. There is, perhaps, no law or doctrine of our church, except the ordination services, making the elder-ship an order, though that is a very good descriptive term to use in designating it. It is, in good English, an order, or it is just as proper to call it an office. And so of deacon or Bishop.
A thing is important; the name of it is not. Any name of anything is a good name if understood. A dictionary generally fixes names.

Substitution.

BY REV. W. H. ANDERSON.

Use or abuse decides character and determines benefit or injury. Substitution is the placing one or more things in the room of others. This may result either from variety of wealth and capacity, or from want and necessity. In earlier and less wealthy periods of society dress, habitations, employments and amusements are circumscribed. In time the log cabin, with its simple life and genuine hospitality, is laid aside for a more commodious and elegant dwelling where fashion is more prominently present.
So with our food and dress, commerce affords more of luxury and wealth furnishes more of delicacies. So in agriculture, mechanism and skill come in to lighten labor in sowing, reaping and gathering the grain and other products.
In manufactures the slow processes of the spinning-wheel and the patient toil of the loom are substituted by more rapid machinery whose muscles do neither get weary nor require rest, food and sleep. The old-time associations and memories of the grist mill, by hand or horse power, give way to the busy hum and rapid execution of the water or steam mill.

Substitution is one of the manifest and beautiful and merciful features of our holy Christianity. The innocent and sinless and unassuming "Christ for sinners," "the just for the unjust to bring us to God." How it is difficult to decide whether wisdom or love puts on the lovelier garb, as the plan of human redemption unveils the highest glories of God in the provisions for the loftiest happiness of man. The innocent suffers in the place of the sinner, and the righteousness of Christ secures pardon, peace and purity for repentant, believing man. The dying Christ upon the cross, stained with his own blood, shows the wisdom and power, the love and holiness of God, as the gates of mercy and of heaven are opened by his dying groan.

Abuse is but another name for sin.
Even divine love and mercy are abused, and large injustice is seen in wicked effort to make the dying agony and spotless righteousness of Christ a reason and an excuse for neglect of the only Messiah and Savior of man.
Nothing is too sacred for the presumption of sin. Attempts are made to substitute in the room of the merit of Christ mere human morality, and to refuse the robe of his righteousness as the court dress of heaven; to wear in its place the patch-work dress of human merit, more parti-colored than the garment of Joseph—the exhibition of paternal partiality. Even where, nominally, the true character of redemption is allowed, and its necessity seemingly admitted, human folly would rely on outward benefit to our souls as a suitable substitution for the grace of God. In human attempts to make "by-laws" for the kingdom of Christ, the simple, glorious and divine "constitution" is in turn either multiplied or obscured. The visible and the material are attempted to be substituted for the invisible, the spiritual, the eternal—vitally necessary in the religion of Christ. Ritualism is the widely accepted substitution for experimental piety, and "the form of godliness" is often more sacredly prized than "the power." Substitution of some requisite in piety by some human device, or effort of human pride, is seen in the history of the church of God. Often under the plea of necessary provision for old age self is substituting, in the name of "prudent economy," continued and growing provision to gratify avarice.

The most careless observer may see the process of substitution at work in the effort to increase the number of church members, and especially those of wealth, without special reference to spiritual qualification for admission or continuance in the nominal fold of Jesus. "Itching ears" get weary of the old and true and tried, and novelties in the pulpit are often as much in demand as in the fashion plates of the mantua makers and milliners.

In place of direct, personal appeal to Christian principle, immediate love to Jesus, when money is to be raised for church purposes there is substitution of appeal to love of amusement and to appetite for "something good to eat."
"Something for nothing," except the sense of right and of Divine approbation, does not draw out the dimes or the dollars like feasts, fairs, suppers, etc. Gastonomic piety is in vogue, and often a more ready and successful appeal for "the Lord's money" is made through ice cream and strawberries or oysters. "We are of the earth, earthy," and the same gastric pleasure early exhibited in the apple eating in Eden descends, regularly and legitimately, to the latest descendant of the original psal.

The Bible is the code of laws and regulations for individuals and for society, for the home circle and the market of trade, as well as for the rites and ceremonies of the Sabbath and other church services. Alas! often the same fearful blight is seen as was witnessed in the fading beauties of Eden.
Men, in intellectual pride or from his wicked nature, is trying by varied methods of substitution to improve on the wisdom of the Almighty himself, and to make the route to heaven more easy, expeditious and safe.

Pastoral Duties.

BY REV. W. SPILLMAN.

There is much more involved in pastoral duties than some who have occupied that station are willing to admit; or, if admitted, to fully carry out. To feed the "sheep" and the "lambs" of the flock of Christ, demands labor which can not be accomplished in the closet and pulpit alone. True, a good pastor must spend a portion of his time in his closet, not only in making preparations for the pulpit, but also in prayer for the enlightenment, aid and unction in the discharge of his several duties; for it is by fervent prayers alone that he can obtain and cultivate that spirit which will enable him to properly sympathize with others—to "rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep."

The pastor to be successful both in and out of the pulpit must be a man of prayer, of devotion to God, and wholly consecrated to his service. He must feel that he is not his own, that he is bought with a price, and that he must be engaged in his Master's work—a work in which preaching alone is but a part, and compared with other duties but a small part.

There are some who occupy the relation of pastors who do not lead their flocks from pasture to pasture, or administer to them daily food necessary to keep up a healthy, spiritual growth.
True, once a week, or probably twice, or maybe thrice, they call their flock together and feed them with high seasoned, and probably judicious, food, prepared with great labor in the closet, without giving themselves any trouble whatever about the spiritual health or peculiar condition of their flocks, over which in the providence of God they must have been appointed.

To some extent the pastor is the physician of souls and should understand the matéria medica of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and as far as possible the peculiar condition of each member of his flock, so as to be able to prescribe to each his or her portion in due season. The former of these may be learned in the closet, but the latter must be learned by pastoral visits.

The pastor must not content himself by visiting those only who invite him, or where he knows he will meet with a hearty welcome, but should go out into the "high ways and hedges." Yes, hunt up the "lost sheep" and administer to them such spiritual food as their several cases may require. The pastor, by pursuing such a course, will always be best in his labors and prepared to administer abundantly to the comfort and consolation of his flock. On the other hand, the pastor who but seldom visits the members of his charge except those who can send a carriage for him, and prepare sumptuous dinners, is not apt to be listened to with pleasure and profit on the Sabbath; at least by that portion of his audience whose spiritual welfare has been neglected; feeling as they must do that they have but a small portion of the pastor's sympathy.

Christ, when interrogated at one time relative to his Messiahship, gave as an attestation: "The poor have the gospel preached to them," and this we know in many cases can only be done by following the example of Christ, in "going about doing good."

Some who occupy the relation of pastor, urge as an excuse for not making strictly pastoral visits, that they have no time for visiting; that it requires all their time to make suitable preparations for the pulpit; that if they fail in this they will not be able to secure good congregations. This excuse is to some extent a selfish one.

True, a pastor who pursues such a course may bring out a highly finished and well mounted battery; but from the fact of not being acquainted with the deep pits into which Satan may have beguiled many of his parishioners he will not likely aim his artillery low enough to inflict wounds in the heart.
A good pastor should always have an eye to his artillery; but to know how to aim it, and the most suitable ammunition to use, can only be discovered reconnoitering, or in other words, pastoral visiting—yes, by close searching family class meetings.

All who have paid close attention to revival meetings can at once see that congregations, or increase in numbers, depend more on pastoral visits than upon highly finished sermons. In revivals, visiting is generally more strictly attended to than at other times, while high wrought logical discourses are laid aside for a more covenant session. Much of the ammunition successfully used in times of revivals is nothing more than the picking up of items in pastoral visits, which, when properly aimed and enlivened by the Holy Ghost, not only reaches the heart but also the heart, causing the wounded trembling sinner who had long considered himself secure to cry "out":
"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

As revivals should be considered the Christians normal condition—the time when the pastor approximates nearest the discharge of his whole duty, surely then, the nearer the pastor lives and acts up to that standard during a spiritual dearth, the greater the probability of times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.
How important, then, that the pastor be instant in season, and out of season, and that he daily stir up those under his charge by "putting them in remembrance" that they should "give diligence to make their calling and election sure."

Higher Education.

MR. EDITOR: An article in the Advocate, of February 19, under the title of "Higher Education by the State," by your worthy correspondent,
"Gildero," deserves more than silent dissemination, but should be reiterated until the people through their representatives obtain the relief so greatly needed. Whatever the success of our universities, colleges and high schools; whatever the rate of tuition, whether costly or free; and whatever facilities they may offer for high intellectual culture, one thing is sure, they will not, can not, meet the wants of the great masses of our country. They, the masses, will never see them. Yet upon these, the common people, more than all others rest the security and the prosperity of our common country.

An intelligent, educated few, while the masses are illiterate, presents a state
masses are illiterate, presents a state not only incompatible with that harmony and accord so essential to good government, but is a state that carries within it the certain elements of failure, not to say destruction. No general, substantial progress can be made, no great reform in social, political or religious life can occur, unless the common people have a part in it.
Not only so, but under that mysterious social law, which binds the human family together, they will if ignorant, and consequently corrupt, by mere preponderance of weight, carry down with them the whole fabric of society.
No greater mistake can hardly be made, especially where republican institutions prevail, than the elevation of a few, to the neglect of the many. I have not, nor do I believe Gildero has, any sort of opposition to the State giving the highest possible culture to any of her citizens who show a fit provided facilities for a good substantial education for all. The primary, and evidently far more important work in the cause of education, either by Church or State, is to furnish a system of education that is as efficient and as general as circumstances and resources will allow. As "Gildero" well says:
"What we need most and first is good, common every-day schools for the education and training of the ignorant masses of our people." These views have been called forth by a few facts I have obtained in a recent visit I have made through several counties of this State in connection with general inquiries as to the state of education.

1. The "public schools" are generally relied upon altogether for the education of the children. With occasional exceptions in towns and villages, and a few populous rural districts, it is the school of the country. In a low county they last from four to five months.
The average is not over three. In one county, Choctaw, and I believe this is in fact, "Gildero's" district, the term for 1881 was six weeks. Nor is this all.
Owing to this shortness of term and wholly inadequate pay, only about forty dollars at best, and often far less than this, teachers of experience and ripe scholarship are seeking employment where services command better wages, and thus our State is being deprived of the services of those who can not well afford to lose. And as a further consequence her youth is being taught by these acknowledged incompetent, to judge, to be unqualified for the work assigned them. For I learn from various county superintendents that very few men of first-rate qualifications as teachers apply for position in said schools, hence they are taught for the most part by those who make teaching a mere temporary expedient a means to some other end rather than success in this line. If we asked what remedy is there for such a state of things? I answer, I know of but one and that is to bring the public school up to that standard. In length of term, grade of instruction and compensation, that will adequately and satisfactorily meet the imperative wants of our people by furnishing to all the opportunity of getting a good, solid English education. JNO. W. HALL, BAY ST. LOUIS, Mississippi.

Pickings from Pickens.

MR. EDITOR: I trust that you will not be displeased to receive a few "facts and fancies" from the wide-awake little railroad town of Pickens, Miss. The past week has been a very eventful one to us. The cheer and brightness of bridal celebration; on the one hand, has not been able to counterbalance the severe darkness of continently death, on the other. How solemnly does the wail of the funeral drill follow upon the chime of the wedding bell!

Two of our best young men, Mr. L.
Phillips and Mr. H. B. Clark, returned to town with their brides some evenings ago, and were entertained at the home of Mrs. E. W. Horton, sister of Mr. Clark—circumstances far bidding an invited assembly.

At almost the same hour one of the first women of our community—or I may say, the very first in usefulness—Mrs. J. H. Buford, departed her earthly life. Our whole town is bereft—shorn of its strength. Another one of those women that can not be spared goes!
God pity the world made poorer! Her death was caused by a fall on the snow (producing effusion of the brain), on returning home from night vigils in nursing the sick. She leaves a helpless, invalid husband—who certainly expected to precede her in death—and an aged father—one of our preachers, Rev. G. D. Wade—and a darling little niece—not to speak of her stricken sisters and loving untie. And every circumstance connected with this sad affair renders it peculiarly distressing, startling and even strange.

Miss Alice, the idolized young daughter of Col. J. F. Tye, is regaining her strength, after a long and desperate struggle with typhoid fever. Her many friends will rejoice to hear this.

Our enterprising, thriving businessmen recently became somewhat chagrined by unexpected losses; but still hold their heads aloft and expect so to do. With best wishes,
Your friend,
PICKENS, MISS., March 2, 1885.

From the Work.

SOUTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We reached our new home, the Bellevue parsonage, on February 14, and meeting a very hearty welcome we are encouraged to bet on our work with hopes of success. The Fount, my successor, and the good people of this circuit deserve great credit for building so convenient and comfortable a parsonage as we find here. It is a little in debt yet and lacks some finishing. The people in Bellevue are just as kind as can be.
I think I shall like my work very much.
The circuit is not wanting in dimensions; it begins with Bossier parish, near the southern line of the parish of Bossier, and ranges north north crosses over into Webster parish, and concludes with Leonard's School house on miles north of Cotton Valley—might say the Arkansas line—practically in all fifty-five miles. But it is not so wide; as we are bounded on the east by Dorcheat and on the west by the Bodcau; containing eight regular points. I am now in the week of my second round, having preceded my family to the work. I am myself fully consecrated by the help of God to do my whole duty in this lightful field of labor.

I want to say something about the work that our lady friends are doing.
They having organized themselves into a sewing society during Bro.
Fount's ministry, have, in perhaps than two years, repaired the church which means that they took hold of old, dirty, dilapidated house, with paints, blinds or lamps, and have renovated the house as to make quite neat church of it. They have furnished the church with chandeliers and lamps, etc., and furnished a sexton, and they regularly, and promptly pay all other incidental expenses. By another way they will have heating stoves added.
They are now at work on the ground yard, which is already showing signs of great improvement and will not look quite respectable. May God bless and prosper these industrious and pious ladies many years to come.
Yes, here they come now with pages, bundles and loaded baskets.
What does this mean? Why! they have come to "pound" the pastor and family. And here are the sweetest girls and noble boys with loaded baskets. It being the first pounding of the nature we ever had. We were

ORIGIN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, REV. J. T. SAWYER,
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1885.

The Vicksburg Herald comes out boldly against prohibition and says that the Democratic party will, "in a short time, be the only great obstacle in the way of the Prohibitionists." On that issue the Herald has no authority to speak for the party and does not represent it in that State. If in any convention or platform it has announced an anti-prohibitory doctrine, we have not seen it. One thing is sure, the party that so declares will have to trail its banner. The gathering forces and growing numbers in the State intend to win a victory. Mark that.

The skating-rink craze is meeting widespread condemnation. The secular press in many sections have united with religious journals in opposing the abolition. The East Pennsylvania Conference of the Evangelical Association passed a stringent resolution pronouncing it a nuisance, detrimental to the church of Christ, and requested their people to withhold patronage therefrom. In a Pennsylvania town the common council passed an ordinance restricting the hours of attendance for school-children and the sale of intoxicating liquors. In the Minnesota House of Representatives a bill has been introduced providing that males and females shall not skate on the same floor at the same time, claiming it to be immoral in tendency. In another city the public school teachers are forbidden to attend on penalty of resignation. We take it, therefore, that the mania will soon pass away. Christian parents can not allow their children in places condemned by the better sentiment of a community.

The "International Series of Sunday-school Lessons" is just now up for discussion, and all who have a word to say ought to say it. The committee will meet in Cincinnati, in April, and select the lessons for the next several years. There are some complaints against the present course, and not without reason. They lack consecutiveness, and not a few are wanting in practical value. A different method will probably be adopted, so that the lessons will be more permanent—the same course repeated every three or four years. Some argue in favor of two courses—a senior and juvenile course. Every intelligent Sunday-school worker has clearly defined views on the subject, and these are invited. To secure these a circular has been issued containing a blank form of petition to be filled and forwarded to the secretary of the International Lesson Committee. For the benefit of our Sunday-school friends we publish that circular in another column, and call attention to its importance.

The presence in our city of Mgr. Capel, the much advertised Roman Catholic prelate from England, reminds us of some speeches he has been making lately. He came to this country with the prestige of having converted many of the aristocracy of England to the Romish faith, and with a like mission to our merchant princes, millionaires and railroad magnates. The scapulars of any number of Protestant baronets, earls and dukes dangle at his belt. His success among the "gentry" in America has not been reassuring. But he is full of talk and never slights an opportunity. In a recent New York City speech he discussed the vow of celibacy, and said things as ridiculous as the doctrine is absurd. He contrasted the pure, unworldly life of the celibate with "the common and ordinary life of the Christian," and asked, "How many wives, for instance, after a marriage of two years, would not desire to devote themselves to God? And how many, after five years, if they were free, would like to engage themselves again?" The logic of which is that the marital relation is inimical to and destructive of piety, and the apostle was mistaken when he pronounced it "honorable" among all men. Our Lord chose that figure to represent his relation to the church. She is the "Lamb's wife." But according to Mgr. Capel, "the common and ordinary life of the Christian" is far below the "higher sphere" of those who "vow to eternally preserve their purity." Such nonsense is simply shocking, especially when the history of the celibate clergy has disgraced all Roman Catholic countries.

The Presiding Eldership in England.

It is a singular coincidence that, while American Methodism has been discussing a modification, if not abrogation, of the presiding eldership, English Methodism is trying to attain unto it. The office is unknown in the economy of Wesleyan Methodism. They have an inefficient and inadequate substitute for it in the chairmanship of the district. But the chairmen have few of the functions, none of the authority and scarcely a tithe of the efficiency of the presiding elder. Indeed, how the itinerant system has been kept intact, and how such gratifying success has been achieved with so little administration, is one of the marvels to an earnest Methodist observer on this side the sea. The chairman is the pastor of a circuit, the head master or other officer in a school, or a connectional secretary, and derives his support from such appointment. He has little to do as chairman except to preside at the district meeting, and gives little or no oversight to the several circuits in the district. Like other pastors, he devotes almost exclusive attention to his own appointment. The office has no salary, but has considerable influence in Conference circles. To modify, so as to increase the labors and responsibilities of the office and command the entire time of the chairman, is the earnest desire of many leading minds. The last Conference appointed a large and representative committee to consider the subject fully and exhaustively, and make report at the next session. That committee has been sitting in London, giving careful study to the various suggestions made, and it is understood, has agreed upon a report. The Church Times, edited by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, one of the ablest of the younger men in English Methodism, vigorously urges the entire emancipation of the chairman from all pastoral work, and advocates a modification which is nothing more nor less than our presiding eldership. He wants the strongest men the Conference can furnish—men attractive in the pulpit, at home on the platform and wise in administration—to fill these positions and fulfill their mission. If such great leaders as Drs. Rigg, Pope and Greeves and Revs. E. E. Jenkins, William Arthur, F. W. MacDonald, Charles Garrett and Robert Newton Young were assigned to districts, with ample salaries, without encumbrance and only commissioned to visit the churches and superintend the work, we doubt not a brighter day would dawn on our kin beyond the sea. They have no Bishops as we have, and their President must confine himself largely to the routine of his office. He makes an annual visit to Ireland, presides at stated meetings in London, preaches a few official sermons, and his work is ended.

But the discussion abroad reminds us of the necessities at home. With a more aggressive spirit, unfettered by an ancient civilization and traditional conservatism, and with a readier perception of present and prospective needs, American Methodism early grasped the idea of the presiding eldership and incorporated it into her polity. Having so few Bishops to serve a widely extended and sparsely settled area, some more intimate superintendence was an imperative necessity. And no feature of our polity contributed more to the heroic achievements of the earlier years than this sub-episcopacy. Now, when a century has passed and its history has been written, our mother is about to follow the enterprise of her daughter. She is awake to the fact that superintendence is as necessary in old countries as in new, and in great centers of population as in the country vast. The lesson we are trying to forget she is beginning to learn. And it behooves us to pause and consider whether we are tending, and whether we are not deprecating a real good for possible evils.

For the past several years we have studied the presiding eldership from a new standpoint, and our deliberate judgment is that we must be jealous to maintain what English Methodism is now zealous to attain. Properly manned and generously supported, the office will repeat the apostolic history of the past century.

Bishop McTearne reached the city on Saturday morning en route to Texas and a long line of District Conferences. He remained until Tuesday morning much to the delight of scores of old friends. On Sunday morning he preached at Felicita Street and at Carondelet in the evening. On Saturday he visited the Advocate office and made interested observation of the old scenes of his initial, but brilliant labors in Journalism. No where is our senior Bishop more beloved and honored than in this city of his early ministrations.

"God Can't Bless Nothing."

Not in a great while have we met anything more suggestive than the following extract from an article, in the New York Christian Advocate, by Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck. It is one of an excellent series on "Revivals Without An Evangelist." Dr. Peck is himself a distinguished illustration of his subject, having for years enjoyed an almost constant revival and weekly ingathering in his every pastorate. And the whole secret of his success, as well as other laborers, whether aided or unaided by evangelists, is in the caplin of this article. The church rouses itself to do something; then the Divine blessing flows. It is idle to pray if we do nothing to answer our prayers. "God can't bless nothing."

But this thought suggests another of blessed hope and encouragement—that God will bless the feeblest and smallest something. Even the offering of a cup of cold water to an humble disciple will not fail of its reward. Great awakenings have resulted from feeble beginnings—the labors and prayers of the scriptural "two or three." Our Lord blessed the effort to stretch forth the withered hand with a perfect cure. In attempting to arise from his helpless couch, he gave the paralytic strength not only to walk, but to carry his bed. But there must be the effort, however poor and palsied, or the larger blessing can not be granted. Read and ponder these suggestive words:

What is the blessing of God that we seek? Is it anything but the giving Divine efficiency to our use of wise and practical means? I will never forget the startling force with which four simple words once came to me. God can't bless nothing. If you would have his blessing, you must do something which he can bless. Waiting idly or dreamily for some mystic power to come and do for us what God has conditioned on our earnest prayers and labors is not piety, but stupidity. If the husbandman does not sow and till the soil, God will give no increase. In like manner, if we want men saved, we must do something to save them, and then God can bless our labors and prayers. Bishop James said he did not believe a soul was ever saved without some human instrumentality in some form. It may be direct or unconscious influence, but the law of human agency prevails. Having done one's best to explain the methods of lay co-operation, and to arouse the activities of the church, accept the few or many who are ready and begin the work. The zeal and faith of these will enlist others. Blend the quickening of the church and the conversion of sinners from the beginning. The two purposes mutually react. The renewing of the members will tend to awaken sinners, and the coming of sinners to Christ will arouse the church. The tender, joyous testimony of a young convert will cause the harp hung on the willows to vibrate with the melody of other days. A sympathetic thrill of the joy of the hour when first they saw the Lord will make the consciences of lukewarm Christians quiver with penitent emotions. Do not wait till the whole church is right, but use the willing, and begin the work with unflinching courage.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met at 112 Camp street, on Tuesday, at twelve o'clock. There were present from the Louisiana Conference, Rev. C. W. Carter, Rev. Christian Keener and Rev. S. H. Werlein; from the Mississippi Conference, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt and Rev. C. B. Galloway; from the North Mississippi Conference, Rev. W. P. Barton, Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan and Rev. J. D. Cameron.

Dr. Carter was elected chairman, and Rev. Christian Keener, secretary. The report of the publishers was received, and the interests of the ADVOCATE patiently and earnestly inquired into. Rev. J. D. Cameron was elected to write the annual address to the patronizing Conferences. A committee was appointed, consisting of Dr. Carter and Bro. Hunnicutt, to prepare resolutions on the death of Bishop Linus Parker—for many years the able and accomplished editor of this paper.

On the fly-leaf of Mr. Moody's Bible are the following definitions: Justification—A change of mind, new standing before God. Repentance—Change of mind, new mind about God. Regeneration—Change of nature, new heart from God. Conversion—Change of life, new life for God. Adoption—Change of family, new relationship towards God. Sanctification—Change of service, separation unto God. Glorification—Change of place, new condition with God.

Why Christ became man—To bear sin; to obey God's law; to destroy death; to sympathize; to give us an example; to reveal God to us; to unite God and man.

He gave Himself—For many; for the church; for me.

God is faithful—To fill your hope of your calling; to establish the believer; to succor the tempted; to fulfill all his promises.

If any of our readers can improve on these, the ADVOCATE columns are open.

Rev. John A. Pauly.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

The Rev. John A. Pauly, who died recently in Houston, Texas, was converted and joined the German Methodist Church, in this city, more than thirty years since. He arrived in this country, in the depth of poverty, with his wife, and made his living at one time by picking rags from the streets. Happening into a Methodist Church, he was awakened and by and by converted. Not long after he was recommended and licensed, and presently became a member of the Louisiana Conference, and was appointed to one of the German Churches in this city.

He was over forty when admitted into the Conference. Though beginning late, yet the Holy Spirit wrought in him and by him wonderfully. He was powerful in faith and prayer; a sinner of rare compass and sweetness, and a preacher after Luther's style—inclusive, logical, original, sprightly, commanding. He had many seals to his ministry, especially from among the Roman Catholics.

During the war by his firmness and good sense he saved our principal German Church from the clutches of "Order No. 15" of Gen. Banks, and from Bishop Ames. He was stationed at Dryades Street, then at Craps Street, and Sarapara, alternately for some years. Then at Houston, Texas, and at different points there. It is not saying too much to attribute to him the shaping of that noble church in Houston which is a model both in the largeness of its charities and the spirituality of its membership. By it he gave tone to our Southern German Methodism in Texas. His wife died some years ago, and he then lived with their adopted child until his death. He was rugged in his strength, yet gentle in his sympathies. He was a fearless preacher of the law, but deeply versed in the art of bringing sinners to Christ. All that concerned the church he carried about with him in his heart day and night. He worked and was ready for every good work until the wheels of life had worn out their sockets. I doubt not the church of Christ in Texas will run a good while yet upon the answers of his long-continued, mighty prayer of faith. His memory to me is very precious.

"Side-Track."

I do not gladly wait in the office of railway men for a belated train. Who does? I am not partial to railway men's conversation. Who is? The language is one native to a land where my heart has been now and then forced to ramble, and when it paused is rested as in duance. Yet it is a language strong, relentless, kindly. Rougher than that born in Scandinavian forest, it carries with it the same indomitable wildness of royalty that screams, "Clear the track!" to all the luer and feeler idlers.

I was waiting in a railway office. Three young men were there. They uttered the language of Ashdod as interjections between the sentences of railroad slang. They were discussing the merits of some young railway girls. (Parenthetically, this girl!) After various remarks relative to one of the females discussed, one of the young men said, "I think it's about time she was side-tracked."

The possible meaning of the term is indeterminate. Side-tracked might mean, in the above connection, married. It might mean shunted off among the ruined and neglected. It might have a meaning intermediate between these extremes. But, whatever its exact meaning, there was implied in it removal from the main line of life and its ultimate destinies.

I had no time or inclination to inquire into the causes or results of the side-track in this particular case. Doubtless they were grave—to one or many equal to the birth or overthrow of a world. But, as I looked out through the metaphor upon the road of life that binds with steel bands earth and heaven, time and eternity, I saw cars, single and in trains, almost numberless side-tracked. I saw some loaded, some empty. Some marked "local," and others, "fast through mail." There were fine ones and old rickety "flats." There were trains whose engines were puffing impatiently like a steed that chumps the bit held by the firm, restraining hand of the rider; others were hitched to the "cow-catcher" of the engine whose fires were dead.

I looked inside. Upon one train near me were a throng of passengers waiting for the "up train," which was late. On board was a mother hastening to the bedside of a dying daughter who had dispatched, "Mother, I can't live till six." Poor mother! The train would not reach the station till half-past-six! As the mother sobbed aloud at the thought, a languid eye looked up near by and a dying man said, sighing: "And they say heaven's gate closes at six—then I'm too late! Why did they side-track us?"

There was another train of freight cars side-tracked. Upon one car were perishable wares that by some mistake (whose I don't know) were pushed out here by the wayside to rot, while the owners were impatiently waiting their account sales. Next to it, as if in relief of the distress of the other, was a car awaiting perishable goods upon it. There was consolation in the thought that they would soon go on or perish together. Next was an excursion train empty, its engine fires half smouldering, while scattered over the green or running thither and yon through the town the passengers were taking the day. Meanwhile great trains of through freight rolled thundering by without checking speed. Regular mails slowed up, shrieked "ten seconds," and rushed screaming on again like the angel of woe in the Apocalypse. Lightning express and special shot put with a scream and ring of bell; switches clattered, and signal men rushed with hard, earnest faces to their posts and back again.

I sank deeper into my reverie. I leaned back and, half dreaming, looked up to the ceiling of the office. Transmuted into the recording angel stood the clerk at his desk keeping account of the trains at his station. Waybills, orders, telegrams, express packages, trunks, checks, tickets, rebates for damages, receipts, unlabeled packs, things sent wrong, tracers for goods not found, boxes, bundles, bales, barrels, casks, kegs, kits, carloads. This coming, that going; this paid for, that unpaid; this right, that wrong. Who envies the railroad agent or the recording angel?

Side-tracks in life are not necessarily misfortunes. Men are not criminals because they are side-tracked. The highest uses and honors are served and attained by them. Although this world is not man's home and life's aims his ultimatum, yet mortal life has beauties in its purposes and providences which make it worth the living. If God thought the design worth the publication, man ought to think its achievement worth the endeavor. And these pausings, switchings, delays! When motion is rapid and straightforward how the mile-posts sink into the haze of the past! But is it the highest life to sweep at lightning speed out of the sight of the present? To encounter and to leave behind—is that life? What better is the unrequited bourne of eternity than this green oasis of time where waters run and palms wave? There are times when life's laden cars should unload; when its empty ones should fill; when its broken ones should be repaired; when its hot boxes should cool; when engineer and conductor should dust themselves and wash their sooty faces. For, after all, life is not where the body rushes at the rate of forty miles an hour. The heart is heating under the humble roof-tree where wife, child, mother, sweetheart are side-tracked. Life is not in the storm of battle and the press of business. Beyond the battlefields lie fields where war's alarm never awakes and cares and anxieties cease forever. There the armies after years of marching and carnage all come in, stepping to the music of "Home, sweet home!" and the fast freight train rolls in with the ringing of bells and slows up and is side-tracked—but in heaven!

The Parker Memorial.

We, the undersigned, have been appointed by the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting as a committee to secure a lot, vault and monument in one of the cemeteries of this city for the reception of the body and to perpetuate the memory of Bishop Linus Parker.

On investigation we discover that such a vault and monument will cost not less than twenty-five hundred dollars.

To meet this we appeal for contributions from those who loved him as a friend, from those who have been strengthened and blessed by his writings, preaching and labors, and from the church at large which realized for so many years the benefit of his consecrated life and ministry. All contributions should be sent to Dr. C. B. Galloway, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

The following figures, showing the number of sittings in some of the great cathedrals in Europe, will interest the reader:
St. Peter's Church at Rome holds 58,000 people; the Cathedral at Milan, 40,000; and St. Paul's at Rome, 38,000. The Coliseum at Rome is said to have had a capacity of 87,000.

—The Brewers' Journal gives the sales of malt liquors during the year ending May 1, 1884, as 18,856,823 barrels.

—The Baltimore Conference raised for missions, $13,250.50; $10,138.40 for foreign missions, and $2,020.50 for domestic missions.

—Rev. Sam Jones is holding a great meeting at Lebanon, Tenn. He says: "The work is glorious beyond description."

—Rev. J. M. McKee, of Delhi, La., with his family, is on a visit to New Orleans and the Exposition, and, of course, reported at 112 Camp Street.

—Rev. R. G. Porter will preach the commencement sermon at the Grenada Collegiate Institute, and Rev. W. B. Murrah will deliver the annual address.

—Rev. Dr. J. W. Heldt, of the North Georgia Conference, and Rev. R. S. Woodward, of Vicksburg, made the Advocate office a pleasant call last week.

—Rev. J. A. Bowen writes from Water Valley, Miss., of a glorious meeting in progress there. He is assisting Bro. Pice, the pastor of Wood Street.

—A protracted meeting will commence at St. Charles Avenue Church to-night. The pastor, Rev. Beverly Carradine, will be assisted by the preachers in the city.

—L. Prang & Co. have our thanks for specimens of their latest and most beautiful Easter cards. They are almost the very perfection of artistic taste and beauty.

—Elbert county, Ga., by a majority of 350, voted out the whisky-traffic on the seventh instant. The good people of Elberton held a thanksgiving service the next day.

—President Cleveland's salary is $137 a day. A sung little sum with which to set up housekeeping, but not too much for the Chief Executive of a great nation like ours.

—Dr. Morton reports that in eleven months the receipts for church extension amount to $60,100, and with this sum 184 churches have been helped in six States, two territories and the District of Columbia.

—Rev. T. J. Newell, President of Grenada Collegiate Institute, spent some days in the city with the people of his school studying the Exposition. We acknowledge the pleasure of a call.

—The State Prohibition Convention in Mississippi will meet in the city of Jackson, July 1, 1885. It is predicted that it will be the largest convention ever assembled at the State capital.

—Rev. U. B. Phillips, of the East Texas Conference, and wife called to see us on Monday. Our brother looks quite as fresh and vigorous as when he transferred to the Lone Star State.

—We are glad to learn that Rev. J. M. Gann has much improved in health. A private note from Hattiesburg says he preached there on a recent Sabbath much to the edification of the people.

—Hon. E. D. Clark, of Vicksburg, the new Assistant Secretary of the Interior, died in Washington, on Monday last, of pneumonia. He was never able to enter upon the duties of his office.

—We are grateful to some thoughtful friend for an admirable cabinet size photograph of our late friend, President D. M. Rush, of Centenary College. It is highly prized and will be carefully preserved.

—Rev. G. R. Loehr, of our China Mission, and Miss Malvina Allen, daughter of Rev. Dr. Young J. Allen, were married in Shanghai, China, Feb. 5, 1885. Dr. Allen officiating. We give our blessing to the young missionaries.

—The family of the late Rev. Dr. F. A. Mood, Regent of the Southern Western University, Texas, have received ten thousand dollars insurance on his life. That was a generous and thoughtful friend who kept the assessments paid up regularly for him.

—Dr. Samuel Rodgers was elected president of the Baltimore Conference on the third ballot, and presided during the first day of the session. Bishop Granberry arrived the next morning and conducted the business to its close. Dr. J. S. Martin was secretary, of course.

—We sympathize with Dr. Fitzgerald, our confrere of the Nashville Advocate, in the loss of an affectionate brother. He reached his home in time to attend the funeral, but was late for a farewell word. He was a good man and true and bequeathed the legacy of a well-spent life.

—Chili has discarded the Roman Catholic religion as the religion of the State, and has announced perfect liberty to all forms of the Christian faith. The oath of the President binds his accession to office, no longer binds him to the support of the "Roman Apostolic Catholic Religion."

GETHEMANE.

In golden youth, when sweet the earth
A summer land for singing mirth,
When souls are glad and hearts are light,
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies Somewhere, veiled under evening skies,
A garden all most something rare,
Gethsemane, Gethsemane,
Somewhere his own Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways,
Love leads a halo to the days,
Light sorrows fall like clouds afar,
We laugh and say how strong we are,
We hurry on, and hurrying on,
Close to the border land of woe,
Thou waits for me and waits for me,
Gethsemane, Gethsemane,
Forever waits Gethsemane.

Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams,
Bridged over by our childish dreams,
Behind the misty cape of years,
Thou in the great still fold of years,
The garden lies; strive as you may,
You cannot hush it in your way,
All parts that have been or shall be,
Pass you were through Gethsemane!

All those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who can not say
"Not mine, but thine?" who only pray,
"Let this cup pass," and can not see
The purpose in Gethsemane.
Gethsemane, Gethsemane,
God help us through Gethsemane.

Insuring Churches—A Plan.

BY H. W. RUSHMAN.

I wish to call the attention of the Methodist Church to a subject that seems thus far to have escaped notice. The church is paying out large sums of money every year for insurance; the greater portion of which she can save and still have her property insured even better than it is at present. The rate of insurance is about one and one-fourth per cent. or $12,500 on $1,000,000. The amount of church property destroyed by fire is very small when compared with the amount paid out for insurance; the church would, therefore, save by taking her own risks. She should agree on a plan of mutual insurance. For instance, suppose the value of the property of all the churches that wish to insure is $50,000,000; now if one of the churches valued at $5,000 should burn, to rebuild it would be necessary to make an assessment of only one-tenth of one mill or ten cents on every $1,000. So a church valued at $10,000 would have to pay out $1. Of course an office would have to be located somewhere filled by a competent man with one or more assistants, whose duty it would be to keep a list of all the churches that entered into the agreement, showing the value of each, and when notified of the destruction of any of the property by fire he would strike a ratio and notify each church of her assessment, which amount would be forwarded to him at once; and as soon as all the assessments were received he would forward the whole amount to the proper parties. The office expenses would be met the same as a church would be rebuilt—make an assessment, say of one-quarter mill or twenty-five cents on the $1,000; that would give $1,250, which, I think, would fully cover the expenses of the office for one year. Now let us suppose property valued at the amount of $100,000 (which, I think, a large estimate,) is destroyed during a year by fire, the tax necessary to replace that amount of property would be two mills or $2 on the $1,000. Now add to that twenty-five cents for office expenses and the total cost of insurance will be $2.25 on $1,000 instead of $12.50. To insure $50,000,000 worth of property at the rate charged by insurance companies would cost $625,000. On the above-described mutual agreement plan the cost would be $112,500, or an annual saving to the church of $512,500. There are many features in the plan suggested, to recommend it, besides its cheapness. In the first place the payments are made in such small installments that any church can make them and never feel it. Besides every cent, excepting the small sum for office expenses, goes directly to replace property that was destroyed, and the congregation that had their building destroyed would not have to do without a place of worship until it suited the company they insured in to pay them whatever they pleased. But as soon as a building was burned, the erection of another could be commenced, for the whole amount at which the building was valued would be sure to be paid. I believe every Methodist Church would enter into the agreement if the plan was once understood, and as it would be the duty of every pastor to explain it to his congregation they would soon all understand it.

Believing the above to be a matter of sufficient importance to be brought to the notice of those in authority in our church, I therefore address your paper as the quickest and best means of accomplishing that end.

A Tribute to Bishop Parker from Missouri.

I have seldom been more shocked than when, on last Thursday, I found in the St. Louis Christian Advocate the announcement of Bishop Parker's death. It came with the joyousness of a personal bereavement, for the attachment I felt for him had been the growth of years. He seemed so well and vigorous at our Conference last fall that I can not realize that we shall see his face no more. His presidency of our Conference at Shelbyville last September was the occasion of his first visit to Missouri. He greatly impressed those who had not before met him with his simplicity and earnestness, and won for himself a place in the affections of the warm-hearted Missourians who found so much that responded to their own nature in his genial Southern temperament. For Bishop Parker had all the characteristics that are indicative of the sunny land of his adoption. His sermons at our Conference were characteristic, and while some were disappointed, who always expect a Bishop to be an orator or a rhetorician, all admitted that they were models of expository skill and pervaded by a deep spirituality which showed that they were forged at the altar of prayer. I shall not soon forget his sermon on Tuesday night, the evening before the opening of Conference, on "Quench not the Spirit." He brought forth things both new and old, and discovered meanings and beauties in the passage which I had never suspected. It was a peculiarity of Bishop Parker's to discover all that was legitimately in a text and to make it so luminous that you wondered you had never seen it before.

I have never seen more thorough, conscientious work than was done by him in the council. He seemed particularly anxious to afflict no man, while deeply solicitous to promote the best interests of the work. In any doubtful case he would ask each presiding elder for his opinion and weigh well all the pro and con before rendering the verdict. He felt deeply the responsibility upon him and sought to share it, as far as possible, with his presiding elders.

He did not desire the episcopal office—would have much preferred to retain the editorship of his beloved Advocate; but he surrendered all personal preferences at the voice of the church. It is a mysterious Providence which has taken him in the vigor of his manhood, and just as a new and grand field of enlarged usefulness was opening before him, but the Master needed him for the sublime activities of the unseen world. I doubt not that God has other positions of useful labor and other ministries for his servants than those of the church militant, and, while it seems as if our beloved

Bishop was called at a time when we could ill spare him, he has taken his place in the great spiritual forces of the church triumphant. "Two worlds there may be, but the universe is one. And God is in it. And the Christ is in it. From earth to heaven, from star to star, and beyond all stars, the Lord is one, and the service one: one Lord, one faith, one baptism."

Where Is Happiness?

(From the German, By J. B. A. A.)

Where is happiness? Happiness is where you are not! Is the dolorous answer, very befitting to thousands who are in eager pursuit after it.

"The world has always looked on me as fortune's favorite. Nor will I complain or denounce my fate. But, verily, my life has been naught else than anxious, worry and weary work. During the seventy-five years of my earthly existence I have not had four weeks of unalloyed happiness. It was a ceaseless rolling of a heavy stone to a mountain's summit, the summit shrouded in clouds. After all, what is life? You are precipitated into all manners of follies; are occupied with silly nonentities; bewail your ignorance of yesterday, deem yourself wise to-day, again to be entangled in incongruities, inconsistencies and follies on to-morrow." This is the sad confession of Goethe after reviewing his long and brilliant career. His contemporaries deemed him superlatively happy, while he laments his misery.

Another of great name and fame, whom all men pronounced highly favored by a kind Providence, rich, gifted, honored, beloved, popular—our own Dingelstedt declares:

"When my body in the grave is laid,
Write on my tombstone legibly and say:
Of fortune's favors large supplies he had,
But really happy he was never, nay."

Most of our so-called happy men are not, equally honest, to confess ambitious bankruptcy. Others are so blind or dormant that they can not realize their misery. One bubble after the other bursts, but they grow not weary in chasing after a new one with unabated zeal. Some of these benighted even look with disdain on those of us who hold that

"There's nothing but heaven."

Where is happiness? A dying king was advised by sorcerers to put on the shirt of a truly happy man and he would soon recover. Many messengers were commissioned to make diligent search for a man who answered the demand. At last they found their man—he was happy, but very poor, living lonely in an earthen hut. Large offers were made for his shirt; but, lo! he had none. His sole attire was a threadbare blanket.

Where is happiness? "Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe in his prophets, so shall ye prosper." (II Chronicles xx, 20.)

The sun which smiles on me
Is Jesus Christ, Most High;
That which fills me with gladness
Is he who fills the sky.

Two Sides:

I speak of keeping up with church members. It may appear to be a small matter, but it is of great importance. The first is to have a register in which the names of all the members are enrolled, etc. A little over two years ago I was sent to L— circuit, N— Conference. I arrived at L— in due time, went to work visiting my members, and attending to such duties as were necessary. I could find no register for L—, not even a roll of the members. There was no circuit register, and I had to depend upon the memory of a few of my members to find out the names of all the members. Recently I visited a family where the two daughters, belong to our church, and I never knew it before. Their names were forgotten, they live some distance from the church, and, as a consequence, they were almost entirely out of sympathy with the church. I do not lay all the blame on my predecessor, but a part of it belongs to the members. I never have seen but one man who would keep a church register. All the rest wanted the preacher to keep it.

The second way is when a certificate of membership has been given to a member, let the pastor who gives the certificate inform the pastor where the member is going that such a certificate has been given to Bro. A— or Sister B—, and in this way the brother or sister is hunted up, and their relation to the church continued and not broken, as is frequently the case. Recently a pastor gave a certificate of membership to Sister D—, who moved to Little Rock, Ark. He wrote a postal to the "Pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Little Rock, Ark.," the same day the certificate was given. The pastor at Little Rock received the note. The sister, though timid, was found out, and her relation to the church continued.

PASTOR.

Letter from Mrs. Bishop Kavanaugh.

Some few days since I penned a few lines to yourself, to the editors of the Central Methodistist, of Kentucky, and Nashville Christian Advocate, expressing our gratitude for the regular weekly visitors, your excellent papers; but suggestive thoughts intervened and I withheld my commendation. By yesterday's mail I received your issue of the twelfth, the editorial page draped in black and my eye rests upon the announcement of the death of our greatly esteemed Bishop Parker. How sudden, how intensely absorbing the recollections which followed that announcement! Not yet twelve months, wanting but one day from this date, when the like intelligence flashed across the wires the death of Bishop Kavanaugh. Both presiding at the last session of the Louisiana Conference (save one.) How rapidly imagination pictured the meeting in the heavenly land of these two warm personal friends, associates in the ministry for many years, similar in many points of their marked character, so soon to meet and hold companionship in that blessed abode! Beloved venerated Bishops, it is some solace to the waiting, wounded hearts of your companions and friends to know that the gate is open and our dear ones will be waiting and waiting, and the time will not be long. Others will soon follow.

Here let me acknowledge how thankful we are to be remembered by your welcome papers. Yours from the State of my adoption, the land of my childhood and early womanhood, the home of many to whom my heart reverts back to times of happiness and the enjoyment of so many social hours. To the Kentucky Central as an acceptable visitor from the birth State of my beloved Bishop. The last issue of that paper, telling of the revival meetings in Mt. Sterling, was intensely gratifying not only for the conversion of souls to the Master's work, but the reward of faithful labors of our esteemed friend, J. R. Deering, the pastor. To him my heart will ever go out in gratitude for the conception and finish of that beautiful memorial window in the new church of that growing city. The beautiful tribute to the memory of their Kentucky Bishop. And the Nashville Christian Advocate always filled with interesting, well-selected matter. The fountain head of our church, the nucleus of refined, cultivated, vital Methodism.

The Greatest Temperance Society in the World.

BY REV. N. W. WILDER.

With great interest I read in the New York Observer, of February 23, the editorial entitled "Origin of Religious Newspapers and Temperance Societies." Forces having their origin as far back as 1514, 1811 and 1816 were noted, which had a very important bearing upon the temperance reform, extending and increasing in power down to the present time. But there are historical facts which, it seems to me, show very clearly that the things said and done in those years were only factors in a movement having a much earlier origin. In the year 1743 John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, prepared the "General Rules" for the guidance of his societies, and one of these rules required the members of these societies to refrain from "drunkenness, brawling or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity." Mr. Wesley constantly insisted that this rule, with the others, should be obeyed by his preachers and enforced by them in the societies. About this time, in preaching a sermon on "The Use of Money," he uses language as follows: "All who sell them (liquors) in the common way to any that will buy are poisoners general. They murder his majesty's subjects by wholesale, neither does their eye pity or spare. They drive them to hell like sheep, and what is their gain? Is it not the blood of these men? Who then would envy their large estates and sumptuous palaces? A curse is in the midst of them; the curse of God cleaves to the stones, the timber, the furniture of them. The curse of God is in their gardens, their walks, their groves; a fire that burns to the uttermost hell! Blood, blood is there; the foundation, the floor, the walls, the roof are stained with blood. And canst thou hope, O man of blood! though thou art clothed in scarlet and fine linen and forest sumptuously every day—canst thou hope to deliver down thy fields of blood to the third generation? Not so, for there is a God in heaven, therefore thy name shall soon be rooted out!"

By such methods Mr. Wesley labored to originate and carry forward the temperance reform. And Methodists claim, therefore, that he was the pioneer in this movement. After the introduction of Methodism into America in 1766, and thence onward until the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Baltimore in 1784, this same "general rule," before referred to, was enforced in the Methodist societies in this country. At the time of the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1781 when it became a church entirely separated from the Methodist societies of England, and from Mr. Wesley's oversight and authority, the "Book of Discipline," compiled and adopted by the General Conference then in session, contained these same "General Rules," and thus it comes to pass that every member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from its origin in this country until the present day, by promising to "be governed by the rules of the Methodist Episcopal Church," has joined a Church Temperance Society among the best and first of modern times.

The Elective Experiment.

A few nights since, in the pleasant parlors of a hospitable New York residence, the Nineteenth Century Club listened to able and representative expressions on each side of the question respecting electives Greek and Latin in our colleges. The venerable Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, gave the results of his experience and learning against the elective system, except within restrictions, and regretted many things in the recent action of Harvard, especially that it made no one study obligatory. He probably spoke for a great number of scholars, when he said: "We are discouraged by this new departure of Harvard College." On the other hand, President Eliot, of Harvard, delivered a spirited address on the thesis, "In a university, the student must choose his own studies, and govern himself."

It seemed to be conceded, on both sides, that, in a university proper, such as exists in Germany, and to some extent, in England, elective study is the rule, the proper rule, and the rule without exception. So far, so good. When America shall have grown to that ripeness, or to that form of ripeness, which produces a real university, by all means let the studies in the university be elective, without limit and without exception. But it was conceded by the anti-classicist side that "there are as yet no universities in the United States—only aspirants." So the parallel with our colleges, and the argument derived therefrom for elective study in our colleges, fall at once. A better parallel would have been the German gymnasium, as the thing nearest to our American college. But as the studies in the gymnasium are mostly not elective, and Greek and Latin were elective, the anti-classicist would not be apt to use that parallel. But the gymnasium course is, to the German student, a necessary prerequisite to entrance into the university. The gymnasium is nearly our old-fashioned college, and the university stands on a higher plane. The true election to the student of the gymnasium is whether he will enter or not.

It is not to be supposed that a university can be made by merely copying such of its incidents as are susceptible of copy in the material at hand. A gymnasium or college is not transformed into a university by making the studies elective, any more than a country village or a prairie hamlet is made a metropolis, by giving it the title of city, with the appendages of a mayor and common council. When the power and the maturity are attained, then the accessories and the insignia will follow fast enough. When our universities are existent, not to say grown, when the name comes to stand for a reality, then the elective studies will come quite naturally, and be acquiesced in by all.

But a university like the German, to which the study of Greek and Latin is not an indispensable prerequisite, is not conceivable.

The elective system of universities, too, includes another feature. The election is wholly individual, and extends to every lecture, or to every recitation if the student employs a private tutor. Election to such an extent could never be applied to either the German gymnasium or to the American college. We do not trust our boys so far. Harvard has not yet ventured to assume that outward badge of university existence, President Eliot is reported as disdaining it. "The elective system," he says, "does not mean the right to elect to do nothing. In each class the student must pass a number of stated examinations in order to hold his place." (The italics are ours.)

Here we have it. On the bald and bare question whether he will study or shirk, the student is not to be trusted. On that question he may not elect. He is assumed to have depravity, and to need compulsion. The rule is made for bad boys. (St. Paul, we remember, says that "the law is not made for a righteous man.") Where the question is more delicate, where it touches matters which pass the boy's knowledge and where the temptation to shirk is more subtle, there these same boys are assumed virtuous and wise enough to be trusted with election! The college must have examinations to determine whether the student shall stay; the university need have examinations only to determine whether the candidate shall be invested with a degree when he goes. The college must have its course, its regulations, and its classes; the university has its lectures and libraries and instructors for individuals. In the college one dull student may keep back others; in the university no individual retards another. The university man may take his degree when he is able; the college boy must be one of a class, must hold some rank in it, and must be graduated in some way along with his mates, at the end of his course, or suffer mortification or disgrace.

Herein, after all, appears to be the real difficulty. It is easy enough to take a partial, or an "annex" course; sometimes in a college, but often outside. But a certificate of a partial course seems not to be generally satisfactory. A degree is better liked. A diploma which, by the declaration on its face, shall put no difference between one who has studied Latin and Greek and one who has not, might often, doubtless, bring much comfort to the recipient, as the habit of giving it might possibly bring elective students and temporary revenue to institutions which bear the name of university. But such diplomas and degrees run a shrewd risk of being classed with flat money.

WE SOW OUR SEEDS.

BY THOMAS HENRY MACHILL.

We sow our seed with toil and pain,
And give them trickling tears for rain,
And we with wondering and surprise
Each tiny stalk and green blade rise,
With creaking tillage and mowing strain.

Sometimes we sow a careless strain,
And sometimes, too, our lips complain,
And oft with deep, heart-lips sighs
We sow our seeds.

But, whether it be with joy or pain,
We feel our toil's not all in vain,
If but some chance, sweet little life,
Or violet opens its genuine eye,
Where on life's broad and boundless plain
We sow our seeds.

Hand as Well as Head and Heart Training.

(An address delivered, March 10, 1885, by Rev. A. H. O. Haygood, D. D., at the dedication of the Elizabeth S. Rush Industrial Home, Holly Springs, N. C.)

A writer of note, who is himself a man of African descent, says: "Editors and writers throughout the world should spell the word 'negro' with a capital N." The reason is the word is the name of a race of men, just as the words "Caucasian," "Indian," "Mongolian" are the names of races of men. It is no compliment to speak of those in whose interest this institution is conducted to speak of them as "colored people." It is at best an equivocal phrase. But right-minded people will not spell the word with "two g's," as they will not pronounce the word "Indian" "Injun." There was somewhat of prophecy in the remark attributed to that noble and typical American whom you all revere, and whom we are all coming to respect—Abraham Lincoln: "No man will ever again be elected President of the United States who spells the word 'negro' with two g's." Mr. Lincoln meant that what the law had given public opinion would soon come to recognize—the negro's citizenship. And this prophecy is coming to pass.

PROGRESS WITHOUT PARALLEL.

The progress of the negro race in the United States during the last twenty (I might have said, during the last two hundred and fifty) years is one of the marvels of history. If we take the longer period, it is a history of progress from abject slavery; if we take the shorter, it is a history of progress from slavery—whose end is an occasion of gratitude to all who understand the subject—to citizenship in the best government in the world.

No people ever had such an experience of great and sudden transitions. As one has expressed it: "Slaves yesterday, freemen to-day, voters to-morrow." And they have done better than most men, who thought they understood the subject, expected of them. The experiment—experiment it was, for there were no precedents—could not, without fatal issues to civil institutions and to the negro race itself, have been made in any other country. As I have been told by those who invited me here to say what I think, allow me to add: This experiment could not have been made in any other part of the Union so safely as in the Southern States. The experiment could not have been made in this country without ruin had this not been a Christian country. It could not have been made in the South but for the prevalence of the Christian religion among the white people; it could not have been made at all had not hundreds of thousands of the negroes been converted to God before the proclamation of emancipation. If the Southern Church has done comparatively little in the education of this race since the war, remember it did all that was done before. But for the work of the Southern Church before, Northern benevolence could have accomplished but little since the war. It was the Christian religion in both races that sustained the country under the strain and test of the experiment. The Constitution and the Declaration of Independence alone were inadequate to so great a trial. And it is the Christian religion that will finally solve this and every hard problem that confronts our times. It is only the despair of unbelief that questions the possibility of solution.

The most notable thing in the history of the progress of the negro race in the United States is his progress in education—using the word in its broadest sense. Take one fact alone: Nearly one million negro youth are now in the public schools of the country. Take another fact: The tenth census shows a decreased percentage of illiteracy, comparing 1870 and 1880. The spelling book is gaining ground, and herein is the prophecy and earnest of ultimate victory. If we compare the progress of any other four or five millions of illiterate people in any twenty years of the world's history with the progress of the negroes in this country between 1865 and 1885, we will find that never before did so many illiterate people learn so many useful things so fast. During these twenty years, the negro's eagerness to learn and his success in learning has finally settled in the minds of candid people, who take the trouble to square their theories by facts, the long-debated question as to his capacity to learn. And while some have made a bad use of education, so many have used it well as to convince reasonable people, who have informed themselves, that it is not only possible to teach the negro, but very desirable to teach him whatever useful knowledge he can learn.

The negro in the United States ought to have made progress.

It would have been an infinite disgrace to him had he failed. If no ignorant people ever learned so fast, it is also true that no ignorant people ever had so much done for them. To amplify and illustrate this proposition as it deserves would take a volume. I make bold to say a great and emergent duty was never in the world so nobly responded to as was the duty of educating the emancipated negroes. Patriotism and religion joined hands to do a work great and difficult enough to appal the stoutest heart and to paralyze any vital force weaker than the strongest faith in God. I do not believe that so much would have been attempted by any other people as the Christian people of this country have for twenty years been trying to do. I should have said, a portion of the Christian people of this country. For it is well known that nearly all that has been done by voluntary effort has been done by those (I should say, by a part—possibly a minority) who were on the victorious side in the late war between the States. That they were on the victorious side explains not only, in large measure, why they were willing, but also how they were able to do it. That in their inclination and ability met together was a providence to the negro race and to the whole country. (How desperately poor the war left the South history can never put into words.)

True education will move along three great lines—books, morals, industry.

To state it otherwise: There must be head training, heart training and hand training. Each helps the other, and neither is complete without the other.

There was deep wisdom in the old Jewish rule that every man must teach his son not only the law and the Scriptures, but also a trade. Thus it came to pass that St. Paul, besides what he could learn in the schools of Tarsus and in the school of Gamaliel, was bred a tent maker. It is a German custom, and it goes far to explain the capacity of the German to get on in the world and to increase his goods. The Crown Prince, it is said, was taught the trade of a lock-smith. My own father brought me up to farm work. I can yet plow a straight furrow. How often I have blessed him for that kindness! How often I have thanked "Uncle Jim," who was my wise and patient and loving teacher!

It is a matter of surprise that in a republic like ours so many, otherwise sensible, people should despise labor.

Everybody knows that the average white girl prefers the attentions of a well-dressed youth (doling woman's work), who sells ribbons for $25 a month, to those of a carpenter, not so well dressed, who can easily earn $50 or $75 a month. And the average white boy would prefer to be the ribbon seller; it is more stylish. It seems to be a question of clothes; it is, I suspect, at bottom a recoil from what is esteemed the humiliation of hand labor. The average negro girl follows the example of her Caucasian sister and smiles on the stylish "dude" who lives precariously by his wits, and passes, by the sturdy fellow who makes a good living with his hands. That the non-working men after they have become husbands have to be supported by their wives (reduced to a salary by the law offers no remedy) does not seem to have impressed the average female mind with sufficient force. There is a sort of education that is to be kept far from our schools; it spoils people utterly. A girl at the piano or giggling at the gate with an idle boy and the mother at the wash-tub or the cook-stove are sorry sights. If colleges only make old fathers work harder to keep vain and lazy sons in good clothes, then colleges are curses to the country. Education that makes young men vain and selfish is as bad as education that makes them lazy. When it makes them both vain and lazy it ruins them. When you see a college student turning up the nose at honest labor in plain clothes you may generally conclude that the devil has a mortgage on the owner of the nose.

HAND TRAINING COMING.

I count it one of the most hopeful signs of the times that in all parts of the civilized world, even in semi-civilized Russia, thoughtful people who have knowledge of the subject are beginning to see that it is the necessary part of education. It is necessary, not simply that young people may know how to do any given thing—as carpentering, black-smithing, sewing, cooking—but that they may know the value of work, catch the spirit of work and form the habit of work. Hand training quickens mental faculties that no sort of mere text-book drill awakens. Also—and this is one of its chief blessings—hand education helps to keep the brains balanced.

If I had my way, and could command the means to make the end possible to our schools, there should be no diplomas that did not certify to ability to do some work properly as well as to read some Greek passably—ability to earn by hand work of some sort a living as well as to solve some problem with difficulty. There are some old fogy teachers who will have no work teaching in their schools. Some ridicule such teaching, affirming in their ignorance that work teaching and book teaching can not go on together, whereas they do go on together. There are some conductors of schools for negro youth who go to the length of this absurdity. They do not seem to understand that the greater the educational needs of any people, the greater their need of not only being taught books,

but of being taught to make a living;

and if they are to rise in the scale permanently, to make more than a living.

Very wisely the Board of Trust of the "John F. Slater Fund" resolved to "prefer" those schools that couple "industrial training" with head and heart training. Fortunately there are enough good schools ready and eager to work on these lines to more than use all the money the Slater Fund can bestow, and twice as much more.

ONE WHO MAY BE AN APOSTLE.

Last year there was a young man at

Clark University, Atlanta, Ga., not yet twenty, who held his own in his textbooks and had learned carpentry so well that he could not only use with skill the ordinary tools of his trade, but he could "lay off work," plan a cottage, "make out a bill of lumber" and calculate the expense of building.

exercises of this occasion. I believe in industrial training in Rush University because I believe in it everywhere else. (I believe in it so much that I have been using every effort to inaugurate a "School of Tool Craft" in Emory College, with which I was long connected as president, and am still lending what aid I can to my honored successor, Rev. Dr. J. S. Hopkins, who is now engaged in the task of actually beginning the work of hand education along with other educations.)

True education will move along three great lines—books, morals, industry. To state it otherwise: There must be head training, heart training and hand training. Each helps the other, and neither is complete without the other. There was deep wisdom in the old Jewish rule that every man must teach his son not only the law and the Scriptures, but also a trade. Thus it came to pass that St. Paul, besides what he could learn in the schools of Tarsus and in the school of Gamaliel, was bred a tent maker. It is a German custom, and it goes far to explain the capacity of the German to get on in the world and to increase his goods. The Crown Prince, it is said, was taught the trade of a lock-smith. My own father brought me up to farm work. I can yet plow a straight furrow. How often I have blessed him for that kindness! How often I have thanked "Uncle Jim," who was my wise and patient and loving teacher!

ASHAMED OF HAND WORK.

It is a matter of surprise that in a republic like ours so many, otherwise sensible, people should despise labor. Everybody knows that the average white girl prefers the attentions of a well-dressed youth (doling woman's work), who sells ribbons for $25 a month, to those of a carpenter, not so well dressed, who can easily earn $50 or $75 a month. And the average white boy would prefer to be the ribbon seller; it is more stylish. It seems to be a question of clothes; it is, I suspect, at bottom a recoil from what is esteemed the humiliation of hand labor. The average negro girl follows the example of her Caucasian sister and smiles on the stylish "dude" who lives precariously by his wits, and passes, by the sturdy fellow who makes a good living with his hands. That the non-working men after they have become husbands have to be supported by their wives (reduced to a salary by the law offers no remedy) does not seem to have impressed the average female mind with sufficient force. There is a sort of education that is to be kept far from our schools; it spoils people utterly. A girl at the piano or giggling at the gate with an idle boy and the mother at the wash-tub or the cook-stove are sorry sights. If colleges only make old fathers work harder to keep vain and lazy sons in good clothes, then colleges are curses to the country. Education that makes young men vain and selfish is as bad as education that makes them lazy. When it makes them both vain and lazy it ruins them. When you see a college student turning up the nose at honest labor in plain clothes you may generally conclude that the devil has a mortgage on the owner of the nose.

WHAT FIGURES CAN'T TELL.

But the moody measure is the least of all. The best things can not be told in figures; faith, sentiment, love, devotion can not be compressed into statistical tables. Consider how many men and women, of as noble mold and of as Christly spirit as ever did God's hard work in the world, have for twenty years been putting their very lives in this work. And this they have done gladly out of love for Christ and the souls for whom Christ died. The angel who keeps God's record will write them down with the "honorably of confessors," of whom the world is not worthy. When "the books are opened" their names will be found on the same page with Carey, Melville Cox, Judson, his great-souled wife—Ann Hasseltine Judson—Livingstone, and the other immortals. Think of it to-day, and thank God for them. On that roll are the names of more than a thousand men and women who, under discouragements never faced in China or Burmah, have been for those twenty years doing all that consecrated manhood and womanhood could do to teach the emancipated negroes of the South how to be real men and women—the Lord's freemen.

THE GOOD OF EDUCATION DEPENDS.

This brings me to say, the value of education depends on the education. Education in books is good; but it is very far from being enough. If there be nothing else, it is a great evil. At best it is a doubtful blessing. I am very glad that the princely giver of a million of dollars to the cause of negro education—the late John F. Slater, of Norwich, Conn.—put it down in his letter to the Board of Trust, that he asked to take the charge of his great gift, that he designed it "for the Christian education of the lately emancipated people and of their descendants in the Southern States." For we may be sure that unchristian education would have been fatal to these people, as it is fatal to any people. We may be just as sure that an education simply not Christian will fail to save them or any other people.

My interest and hope in this stupendous effort is in the certain knowledge that the great training-schools for this race are under Christian influence. I have had large opportunity to study these schools and to study many schools for white people, and I affirm without hesitation there are no training schools in this country that are more avowedly, distinctively and vitally Christian in spirit and method than are the training schools now preparing the young men and women who are to be the teachers and guides of the negro youth of our land. And if we think of the men and women who are conducting these schools (for the character of a school is determined by the personal element in its faculty), it may be affirmed with confidence there are not, as a rule, more devout, more capable, better trained, more industrious teachers in any schools of the country.

ELIZABETH S. RUSH INDUSTRIAL HOME.

Because I believe Rush University is such a school as I have described, I am glad I am here to-day. And because I believe that the instrumentalities to be employed and the methods to be used in the "Elizabeth S. Rush Industrial Home" will add immeasurably to the power of the university to accomplish its mission, I count it an honor and a privilege to take part in the special

More. He actually built several cottages, and did his work well. If he holds on in his course, he will be a sort of an apostle among his people—and a very useful apostle, too. It is not desirable that all young men educated in church schools should be preachers and teachers. There must be some who to support the preachers and teachers.

There are many other useful trades that young men are learning at the best schools for negro youth in the South. Some of them may be mentioned: Black-smithing, shoe-making, brick-making, brick-laying, tin-work, type-setting and other sorts of work that people are willing to pay well for—especially if it can be properly done. I say, properly done; for he is a rare carpenter among us who can hang a door so that it will fit, who can saw a plank so that it will make a joint.

MASTERY OF HAND TOOLS.

At this time one of the essential things in the industrial departments in our schools for both races is to teach the test use of the common tools of the various trades. The population of the Southern States is, for the most part, in the rural districts and in little villages. For a long time hand work, and not machine work, will prevail among us. The carpenter who is master of the square, the hammer, the saw, the plane, the auger, the chisel, the drawing-knife, the adze, the file, and such like implements for wood-work, is better fitted to do well than the man who is master of a planing machine, or other costly contrivance.

The same principle holds in industrial training for women. In some places laundry work is done by machines with "all the modern improvements." Few are the women of the South who will ever have opportunity out of school to use such machinery. The woman who knows the full powers of hot and cold waters, the resources of the wash-tub, the rubbing-board, the sad-iron and the qualities of soaps and starch is better fitted for the laundry-work that will fall to her lot and bring her good wages than she who knows how to "run a machine." So in all the departments.

What we all need is to know thoroughly how to use the tools we have. Last week, at my home, a carpenter fashioned a missing baluster, with a drawing-knife, a wood-file and a piece of sand-paper, that could not, when in its place, be told from those that had been turned in the shop, except that the finish was finer. If he had only learned to use a machine, he could not have done the work. He had no machine.

FROM THE CANN TO THE COTTAGE.

When the great training-schools for negro youth have got their industrial departments well in hand, then that will begin to be possible for the negro race in the South which hitherto has not been possible, but which is absolutely necessary if real, substantial progress in civilization is to be generally and permanently effected—they can have homes instead of miserable cabins. The right thing is, not to despise the cabin, but to get ready to build and furnish the cottage. If the cottage is not only to be built, but to be furnished and made a home of, then both men and women must have industrial training as well as book learning. Book learning alone will make the people whose good we seek to-day unhappy in the cabin; it will not of itself give them the ability to get into cottages, or to make homes of them when they get them. A house-keeper and homemaker who can not read is a nobler woman than she who can read many languages, but does not know how to do anything rightly, and so makes a wreck of home.

As a rule, people who know only books will never have the means to procure better homes than are possible in mere cabins. Indeed, they are less able than the illiterate, for mere book knowledge fosters extravagance without providing the means for its indulgence. Sad is his case whose tastes demand expenditures his skill can not provide! Bitter is the fruit of the tree of knowledge when there lack the harvest that follow industry! God's law of labor is a great and saving mercy to the race.

All that book learning has done for some negro families and for many white families is to make it harder to live. And herein is much of the discontent of the working world, whose murmuring hint of suppressed earthquakes. The kind of education these unhappy people have received has bred demand faster than it has created supply to meet it. Education that does not increase productive power is a failure. Such education as I have been speaking of not only makes people unhappy—it tends to make them dishonest. It tends also to break down virtue.

ALL IN ONE ROOM.

I am of the opinion that in the history of civilization, as human institutions indicate its progress, that the next thing after the hollow tree, the cave and the wigwam is, in the rural districts, the single-room log cabin; in the village, the single-room board shanty; in the city, the single room in the crowded tenement—all of a sort, varied only by the environment. When necessity shunts a family up in one little room patience is a great duty and a rare virtue, but you may be sure—seemingly exceptions to the contrary—there was never yet of any race or color a family that could be brought up just as it ought to be in a single room. Where some, under the disabilities of so narrow limits, have done reasonably well, they would have done better with another room had it been only "a shed room." Some privacy is essential to modesty, to say nothing of the virtues that have their root in this grace.

Once upon a time, as presiding elder in the mountains, I spent a night with a family that lived in one room. There were eleven of us—men, women, boys and girls—not counting two lazy hound dogs, that slept in that fearful room. They were people who were of little account; they might have done better; their wretched mode of life had given them the contentment of insensibility. The wonder is that there was any good in them at all. It is a marvel that people who live so are no worse than they are.

A great deal has been said and written about the lack of domestic virtue and family purity among the negroes of the South. The case is bad enough; but for my part I do not believe that it is as bad as it was during slavery. The evidence of mixed bloods (a very evil thing for both races), to say nothing of vices among themselves, that we see everywhere in this country makes me ashamed for the men of my own race.

But I must say a word in defense of the negroes—particularly of those living in the Southern States. Considering the antecedents of the race in Africa, in these States before emancipation and their condition to-day, the real surprise is that there is so much virtue and purity among them. Let us talk less about it and do more. Above all things, let white people set them better examples. Let us put tools in their hands, with which they can build themselves homes and take from the sight of the sun the vice-breeding, misery-producing cabins and shanties that conspire with depravity to help them to be wicked. Then they will at least have a better chance to be virtuous.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIANS WILL HELP SOME DAY.

I am very sorry that the women who have the most vital interest in this blessed work (for the degradation of negro women is the degradation of Caucasian men,) are not at this time taking an active part with the Christian women of the North. Somehow (you good women of the North,) they do not understand one another. Words of course will not help either. Bear with their long delay. There are no better women in the world than the Christian women of the South. They have difficulties in the way of this sort of work that you women of the North, longer delivered from the curse of slavery, know not of and that you can never fully understand. Quit reproaching them; it does no good; "put yourselves in their places;" you will sooner win them by your gracious example than by criticism. Many of them do sympathize with you now, and "in secret before their heavenly Father" beg blessings upon you. Many of them want to help you, but they do not yet see their way.

They will help you, if not to-day then to-morrow, and it will be needed then also. They will help with money, service, sympathy, love; for they are Christian women. But to you, sisters

The latest development of the St. Louis ball-room is a dance for the benefit of the dead—a masquerade given for the purpose of raising money to improve the cemetery. That is verily a "dance of death." But such a performance is hardly so incongruous as dancing for the benefit of the church at so much a set.

We published a timely article from Dr. C. K. Marshall, last week, on insuring churches. This week we have another article on the same subject by a thoughtful layman, proposing a new plan of insurance. The subject is up for consideration, and we hope will induce every local Board of Trustees to adopt immediate measures for the security of our church property.

The New York Christian Advocate says that a reasonable estimate justifies the opinion that more than forty thousand persons have professed conversion in the past three months and joined, or are intending to join, the Methodist Episcopal Church. A like proportionate increase, we believe, has been made to the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, although the winter is not the usual season for large spiritual gatherings in this latitude. This news cheers and strengthens faith. We only need more of the overshadowing of the Almighty in the pulpit, to make these latter days more glorious than the former.

There has been another governmental change in France. After holding power for about two years Prime Minister Ferry was compelled to resign on Monday amidst the wildest scenes of discontent. The French reverses in the war with China was the immediate cause of the crisis. But Premier Ferry's administration has been singularly popular, and his remarkable length of tenure. There have been twenty-one Cabinets since the battle of Sedan. The mercurial temperament of that people is an embarrassing factor in a republican form of government. The demonstrations of last Monday in the Chamber of Deputies were much the history of those days that brought the first Napoleon to the front.

At this time (Tuesday) the war cloud which has hung portentously over England and Russia for a week or more seems to be clearing away. So threatening was this prospect that the Queen issued an order calling out all the military reserves of England, and other warlike preparations were speedily commenced. All the London papers applauded the act of the government and seemed to be eager for a fray. Now, happily, it seems the resort to arms will be averted, and the successful and honorable peace policy of Mr. Gladstone be preserved. And all Christendom will rejoice therein. That international differences can now so generally be adjusted without the carnage and sufferings of cruel war is due to the conquering progress of our gospel of peace.

The Oxford League.

This suggestion first presented by Dr. J. H. Vincent, and recommended by the Centennial Conference, at Baltimore, to all Methodist bodies, promises practical results. It aims, as its author happily says, "to instruct the youth of Methodism in the early history of their church," and "in so doing this worthy work it will require the reading and study of denominational literature, and the discussion in lectures, conversation and, whenever practicable, in class recitations and reviews of denominational topics, embracing questions of origin, doctrine and usage." The movement is already fairly under way in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and its friends are hopeful of great good therefrom. The "Oxford League Series," just issued, comprise a valuable list of tracts by the best Methodist writers, and so cheap as to be in every local church. If the organization accomplishes no more than the circulation and reading of such literature, it would richly repay the outlay of time, talent and effort. It would develop a more intelligent acquaintance among Methodists of the origin, spirit, usage and history of their church. These little local organizations will thus furnish a kind of information that can not be supplied by the pulpit.

A Gross Misrepresentation.

The different "State days" at the Exposition are furnishing opportunities for ambitious orators to air their eloquence. But the occasions are so numerous that the chosen "orator of the day" is finding it difficult to say something new, startling or instructive. This possibly may account for a popular speaker on "Georgia Day," last week, betaking himself to historic invention, resulting in a gross misrepresentation of the facts of history and a shameful slander on the memory of one of the purest and most apostolic men in the annals of time. When the sources of correct information are so ample and ready of access, it is inexcusable to advertise such pitiable ignorance. But when one attempts to state the facts of history and, for the sake of making a point or spicing a speech, does violence to truth, he deserves exposure. Tuesday, of last week, was "Georgia Day" at the Exposition. The governor and his staff and many citizens of the Empire State of the South were present. As usual on such occasions, a formal address of welcome was delivered, and in that address we find the following:

Oglethorpe's abandonment of Georgia, so far as a woman served to influence that result, reminds us of John Wesley, who forsook that State and the country because of a young lady who sat under his ministrations in the parish of Savannah. John, it must be confessed, jilted the girl; but, as he was a clergyman, he declared he did it on principle and because she was not severely pious. But when she resented his treatment, not by intemperate remonstrances, but by a quiet marriage with another, Wesley excluded her from his communion table upon the ground that she had become excessively worldly. Thereupon her husband brought suit for damages and others brought charges of abuse of authority against Wesley, who, finding himself in an inglorious minority, returned to England; and I suspect that the young lady, a daughter of the chief magistrate of Savannah, often congratulated herself upon having escaped marriage with an arbitrary man, who became eminent later in England, but whose commitments, however sincere, of his love affairs to the judgment of an austere Bishop and elders hardly commended him as a mate to a warm-hearted and vivacious girl. (Applause.)

Amid much applause the orator thus drew a picture of Mr. Wesley as a clerical flirt, without conscience or common sense. Now, what are the facts of that notorious affair over which the Exposition orator grew so merry? To correct the false impression made by the above intemperances and other misrepresentations that have been widely published by partisan writers we take pleasure in giving the facts from the most authentic sources.

Mr. Wesley came to Georgia at the earnest solicitation of Gen. Oglethorpe as a missionary to the colonists and Indians. And whatever may be said of his clearer subsequent spiritual experiences, it is doubted if any apostle ever consecrated himself to a cause with a more single purpose than did Mr. Wesley. On board the vessel he organized the little Methodist party as follows: From four to five o'clock in the morning was spent in private prayer; from five to seven the Bible was read together; at seven, breakfast; public prayers at eight. From nine to twelve Wesley studied German, while the others were engaged in special literary work. At twelve they discussed the studies of the day, and dined at one. From that time to four was spent in reading to the passengers; then followed public prayer, with a German service at seven; then special study and private prayer until nine, when all retired for the night. That indicates the spirit of the man—rather excessive and severely ritualistic, we must admit—and for which he was forced to leave Savannah; but it was doubtless the prevailing spiritual declension and churchy immorality that made him so rigid. However his methods may be criticised, his motives were pure and apostolic. The "Symmonds" case, anchor in Savannah river, February 5, 1738, and their first act on landing was a service of thanksgiving. On his first Sabbath in Savannah he preached at nine in the morning, at twelve and again in the afternoon, and announced that he would administer the sacrament every Sunday and on every holiday. And thus among the colonists and aborigines he labored with a zeal that seemed to feel no weariness or seek any intermission of constant toil.

Among his parishioners at Savannah was Miss Sophia Christiana Hopkey, niece of the wife of Mr. Thomas Causton, the "chief magistrate" of the ill-fated empire. Miss Hopkey was a young lady, of some gifts and accomplishments, and was introduced to Wesley as a sincere inquirer after salvation. They were much together and doubtless became interested in each other. It is certain that Mr. Wesley thought of proposing marriage to her; but warned by Delamotte, his friend and co-laborer in the school, and advised by the Moravian brethren, he said, "The will of the Lord be done." Henry Moore, Wesley's bosom friend, literary legatee and first biographer, who received a full account of this affair from his own lips, says: "From this time he avoided everything that tended to continue the intimacy with Miss Hopkey, and behaved with the greatest caution towards her." Nor is there the slightest evidence from any source that Wesley "jilted the girl," or acted in the slightest degree unbecomingly the dignity and purity of a Christian minister. In his effort at exceeding fairness, Mr. Tyerman gives the affair a ludicrous aspect, but resents any suggestion impeaching Mr. Wesley's manly honor and perfect integrity. And the insinuation of the voluble Exposition orator aforesaid is little less than slanderous. He could not have been faithless to any promise, because there was no engagement and never even a proposal of marriage.

As to the cause of Mr. Wesley's return to England, these are the facts: In the discharge of his pastoral duties he adhered rigidly to the rubrics of his church, and administered discipline with an impartiality that knew neither fear nor favor. One of the rules enforced was that all who partook of the communion had to signify their names to the curate the day before, so that those who may have done any wrong to their neighbors might declare their repentance; otherwise he would refuse them admission to the Lord's table. Among others refused on one occasion was Mrs. Williamson, nee Miss Hopkey. She became greatly enraged, and the next day Mr. Wesley was summoned before Mr. Bailiff Parker to answer the charge of William Williamson for defaming his wife, and refusing to administer to her the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, "by which the said William Williamson was damaged one thousand pounds sterling." Wesley replied that the matter was purely ecclesiastical and outside the jurisdiction of a civil court. The bailiff, however, referred the case to the Savannah court. Mr. Causton, her uncle, demanded an explanation, which Wesley readily gave, and then told him of certain delinquencies of which he was guilty and of the general complaint against his magisterial proceedings. For this offense, rather than the ecclesiastical censure of Mrs. Williamson, Causton became a malignant and unrelenting enemy, and determined to rid the colony of the missionary's presence. He was an imperious, avaricious, unscrupulous man, and resorted to the foulest means to destroy Wesley, but failed. An indictment, with ten counts, was trumped up—nearly all ecclesiastical, and not one worthy of serious thought. For several months he demanded a trial of the case; but the court evaded his request. He attended seven different sittings, appealing for a hearing; but his enemies, fearing they could not convict, postponed the case, hoping to annoy him into leaving the colony. So at length he gave public notice of his intention and returned to England. Causton came to disgrace shortly after and was turned out of all his offices.

That was the head and front of Wesley's offending. Whether or not his rule about the communion was wise is not the question. He administered it impartially and, therefore, no one could have individual complaint. And as it has been well said, The fact that John Wesley, when her conduct became obnoxious to the rules and discipline of the church, refused the communion to Mrs. Williamson proves, if he ever had regarded her with affection, that he was no respecter of persons.

About Politicians—An Evil Habit.

It is popular to denounce politicians. Nothing gives the average patriot such an air of unapproachable purity as his disgust for politics and his contempt for politicians. So common is this cant and so powerful its influence that office holders and party managers protest their innocence of politics. Though candidates for places of public trust, and necessarily students of political economy and governmental science and administration, they resent the suggestion of being politicians. Others, by way of apology, make a distinction between the statesman and politician, claiming, of course, to represent the former class. And the pulpit fulminates until the popular idea is that a politician is the evil genius of our public and social life, who only deserves to be hated, shunned and punished. We, therefore, claim the privilege of speaking a word for this friendless, belabored class.

The popular criticism of politicians is founded upon fundamental error, and is fraught with infinite evil to a republican government. The original and true definition of "politician" is: "One who is versed in the science of government and the art of governing." Then his is an honorable position and absolutely needful. But the idea is current that politics and corruption are synonymous terms—that a man can not be a politician and preserve his religious and moral integrity. And that doctrine is announced in the face of our Lord's declaration that we must render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. Political and religious duties do not conflict. The Christian and politician need not be two persons. The sublimest type of patriotism is the beautiful bleeding of reverent devotion to God with oblivious love of country and active public service. The Christian does not renounce his Christianity in exercising the functions of citizenship, nor does the citizen surrender his citizenship in his espousals to Christ. And yet the injured innocents are fond of declaring, "We can not contaminate ourselves with politics." Now, suppose this theory should become general practice—suppose Christian men withdraw from any activity in public affairs—social and national ruin would be the inevitable result. If such a doctrine obtains, it will prevent all good men from accepting office and participating in public administration. Even now suspicion shadows every man who holds a position of public trust. There is no reason why men should not be as God-fearing and scrupulously, saintly honest in political as in social or business life. If not, the doom of our republic is sealed.

Individual cases of defection need condemnation; but the whole class of public men should not suffer thereby. There are many and diverse temptations in public life; but the confidence of a constituency should be generously accorded a representative until he proves unworthy. And that suggests the duty, much neglected, of praying for those who have the rule over us. More prayer for public men, and less denunciation, would improve our politics and the moral tone of society.

Doll Rags.

Driving out one summer evening, I passed a little negro girl of six years carefully arranging and folding a lot of old laces, muslins, calicoes, satins and other rags, of which she had quite a pack. She was the sister of a servant girl to my wife, who in cleaning up her wardrobe had found many things of no further use. So to get rid of them, as much as to please the girl, she had given her the whole bundle. It was a rich prize to the child. Diamonds would hardly have given any greater satisfaction. The happiness conferred was as complete and, perhaps, as lasting, for the bliss does not consist in the possession as much as in the sense of gratitude, and gratitude does not measure itself by money value.

There were two opposing trains of thought colliding and telescoping midway my mental trunk-line. The first presented the world in its hurry after wealth and glory, as the little negro picking up the cast-off and worn-out things of creation and boarding them as treasures of inestimable value. The second contemplated the economy of nature in supplying a gradation of desires, appetencies and ambitions as well as of materials to satisfy them. The supplies of this world are as manifold as great, and there must be a market for them.

Perhaps, thought I, it will be refreshing and complimentary to myself if I climb some cynical eminence and, like a philosopher as I am, talk to my readers who, like myself, are all philosophers, male and female, and, therefore, entitled to distinct classification in the record of the world's genesis. So I got me up into this exalted seat. Thence all the way down I saw mankind arranged. My own seat was, of course, on a level with the divine, and from this uppermost plane men shaded off until hardly distinguishable from the mutum et turpe pecus. The robes of all the divine were royal; mine were princely. Great men approximating myself in rank obtained admission to the kitchen of the gods, and were allowed to strut in their last year's livery. And hither came kings and warriors and statesmen without number, glad to hold Titan's steeds or black my boots for one of my old ambrosial neckties or pocket handkerchiefs. Alexander, Caesar, Napoleon were lucky. They got the Thunderer's old uniform which he wore in battle with the Cyclops. It was really funny to see them aplugh him before the admiring crowds in the kitchen. There were some who envied them. They did not get just what they wanted; but they were quite glad to keep what they got. It was amusing to note the devices to which many resorted to secure the notice and applause of the crowd. Many of the most obsequious fanned that their lords were conspicuous because of the splendor of their servants. These lords in turn thought that the philosophers and even the gods would be very poor personages were it not for them. And so I noticed that all the way down men and gods were held to be famous men or famous gods according to the manner bow and to whom they dispensed old clothes and other gifts. Near the end of this long row I saw the little negro girl sitting and reckoning that the greatest of all the goddesses was my wife, and she was greatest when she cleared her wardrobe.

Man is a universal parasite. He is a rodent, and works his way under the foundations of celestial palaces. He lodges in the walls and nestles in the garrets of archangels. He even chips up the leaves of the books of the recording angel and lines his dormitory with the select manuscripts and art journals of the skies. Man is a universal beggar. He will sit all day at the gate of any power in earth or heaven and beg for the rejected scraps of both table and closet. Man is a universal thief. He would steal the jewels out of Gabriel's crown and pick the locks of heaven's treasury if he could. The All-good God has managed to keep him from stealing a few things—but only a few. He has not yet gotten away with sunlight, fresh air and water; but he has partially dragged the last two into his hole. He has as yet fallen upon no device to draw the sunshine all in one direction; but he is studying the subject. Man is a universal humbug. It costs nature more to support him than all the other animals combined. He is rapidly squandering the slow accumulations of ages stored away when she was not so troubled to provide for her wasteful child. He has been going to school six thousand years, and, though pronounced a genius by all his teachers, none of them have ever told how he can be utilized so as to pay the expenses of his education. Like most of geniuses, the money spent on him is to be seen now in his genius. He has run all over creation and scribbled his name everywhere, and thinks he has improved on the Almighty's job. Had he a chance, he would paste patent medicine placards on sun, moon and every comet's tail. But he is a materialist. He wishes to level everything to the standard of the perishable. He wants rags to put on his finest ideals. If his fancy paints him a true picture, he dares not trust either memory to retain it or fancy to reproduce it. But if he tricks out a rag-baby in this old drapery of the skies, he thinks he has captured immortality on the wing. If a beautiful or holy thought comes, instantly he rushes to put it on paper. Thus he endeavors daily to grow immortal in rubbish which when fired consumes in smoke all his beautiful thoughts and the author with them.

But doll rags! O, I had forgotten my own poverty and nakedness! Along with me were creations of mine—nothing worth naming in themselves, but symbolizing infinite expectations. The child by the wayside! Yes, a waif near the roadway of gods. She had ideas of creation of life, of home, of parentage, of rule, of the innumerable we-know-not-what in the innermost consciousness. Every rag that the divine has ever dignified will dignify these creations of man who longs to attain to the power of producing actual life. The same rag is not good again upon the road; but as man follows on he finds others, better and costlier, the gift of God who thus leads him homeward from his wanderings, without scolding him or telling how long he has been lost and what trouble it has been in hunting him up. The rags have served the purpose for which they were made; but this use of pleasing the child is extra. So the cloud that has dropped its fatness to the earth wears the bow or the tints of sunset to please the child; who thanks God for the useful, but chases the bow to heaven to get the gold, but gets heaven, which is better than gold.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Lamluth sends us the latest war intelligence from China in the following note:

"We have had the past week a great deal of excitement very near us. The French have destroyed two Chinese men-of-war, and are soon to proceed north to blockade the Gulf of Pichile to prevent rice from being taken to Peking, and thus starve the Peking authorities into terms of peace. We can not tell the result. It will no doubt throw the northern part of China into a state of excitement, and possibly want and rebellion. The authorities at Peking are following a very suicidal policy, which will, I fear, land them in less than a year into a complete state of anarchy. Pray for us and for the church in China."

—Dr. H. F. Johnson preached at Louisiana Avenue on Sunday night, much to the edification of a large congregation.

—Rev. J. W. Sandell, of the Mississippi Conference, was one of the welcome callers at the ADVOCATE offices on Monday.

—Dr. John Hall, of New York, will preach the baccalaureate sermon at the commencement of Washington and Lee University.

—There will be a union communion service of the several Methodist congregations at Carondelet Street Church, next Sunday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock.

—A Baltimore correspondent of the Standard, Chicago, says there are more Methodists to the square mile in that city than anywhere else probably in the world.

—The meeting at Water Valley continues with growing power. Bro. Bowen writes under date of March 23, that there had been at least 50 conversions and 80 penitents at the altar.

—Bro. Hurst writes a grateful note acknowledging the generosity of Bro. T. A. Holloman and wife, of Phoenix, in assisting him toward the purchase of another horse for his itinerant labors.

—Rev. J. W. Burke, publisher of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, paid this office a pleasant call on Wednesday last. He is a thorough-going newspaper man and a loyal, connectional Methodist.

—Among the welcome callers at our office last week, was R. W. Jones, LL. D., President of the Industrial Female College of Mississippi, located at Columbus. We expect some communications from his pen for our columns.

—After the choir in one of the churches in Ithaca, N. Y., had performed a rather heavy selection, the minister opened the Bible and began reading in Acts xx, "And after the uproar had ceased." A suggestive coincidence.

—Dr. Haygood's address on our second page will well repay careful perusal. He is a practical man and speaks out of a full heart and an active brain. Our readers and correspondents will not complain that it occupies the space reserved for a variety of "copy."

—A lady who had already subscribed to the building fund of the new church at Louisiana Avenue, doubted her subscription, saying, "This I do as a thank-offering to God for having known Bishop Parker." A beautiful tribute to a precious memory.

—Rev. G. F. Thompson has suffered a painful fracture of his right arm caused by being thrown from his horse. He is in the city visiting his family at 555 Carondelet street, where his wife is conducting a successful and popular boarding house. After some days of rest and treatment, he will return to his charge.

—Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, will celebrate his silver wedding as pastor of that congregation on Easter Sunday. He has been a remarkable career of successful pastoral labor. He preaches a pure gospel and has been a tower of strength against a worldly Christianity.

—The seventh Annual Meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions will be held in Church Street Church, Knoxville, Tenn., on the 4th of June, 1885. Members of the Board and all visitors who expect to attend, are requested to notify, at once, Mrs. B. Humphrey, Knoxville, Tenn., Corresponding Secretary Holston Conference Society.

—The total circulation of weekly papers, English and German, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, is 150,144, or one paper for each twelve members of their church. The total circulation of weekly papers in the Evangelical Association is 34,200, or one to each three and three-fourths members of the church. We have not the figures for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

—We sympathize with our excellent brother, Rev. J. W. Ellison, of Greensburg, La., in the severe and protracted afflictions through which he has been called to pass. All of his family have been sick, one child died, and he has been confined to his bed for a month with inflammatory rheumatism. We hope he may soon be up and at "his loved employ."

—We are glad to hear of our church's prosperity at Meridian, under the able and popular pastorate of Rev. W. C. Black. The congregations can not be accommodated in the church, so a new and more commodious building has been entered upon. That is a growing city, and we doubt not our brethren will build with reference thereto. A handsome, well-appointed church is itself a good ecclesiastical and religious educator.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

(For Week Ending March 30, 1885.)

DOMESTIC.

CHENNAI, Miss., March 26.—About 3:30 o'clock this morning, the brick building occupied by Murti & Mosely as a saloon, was discovered in flames.

The fire quickly communicated to the adjoining buildings and four were ultimately destroyed, including the post office.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., March 25.—So great is the suffering of the people in the south district of this and the other counties adjoining that the authorities and the people of Kanawha county were appealed to yesterday.

The county Court for the sufferers. Reports of the suffering of men, women, children and beasts have reached here from portions of Jackson, Gilmer, Calhoun and Roan counties.

The mountain farmers in these counties are unable to pursue their planting or seed, and the season for planting is nearly everything looks distressing.

Kanawha county can take care of her stricken people but help will be needed for other counties.

MEMPHIS, March 27.—The steamer Mark Twain exploded her boilers this afternoon at 4 o'clock, while lying at the bank at Mound City, Arkansas, five miles above the city.

Five men were killed outright by the accident, the river trade is closed for a season, and a large number of whom were colored, being blown into the river and drowned.

The Mark Twain was owned by Capt. Fogleman, and was being used as a ferryboat in place of the John Overton, which is being repaired.

She ferried the river trade in eight years and was sold by Capt. W. P. Hall to Capt. Fogleman four months ago for $50,000.

It is thought she is insured for $300,000.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., March 27.—A special from Oakland City, Ind., says: A terrible conflagration broke out this morning in Joseph Wahrschneider's saloon, on Main street, and spread all over the square, and in a short time many buildings were in flames.

The conflagration was caused by the explosion of a gasolene lamp, and the loss is estimated at from $40,000 to $100,000, on which there is about $40,000 insurance.

CLEVELAND, O., March 30.—Sylvester J. Osborn, the skating professor, who eloped with Rebecca Kersley, the bicyclist helmsman, some time ago, was sentenced to Upper Sandusky to-day to three years in the penitentiary for bigamy.

HELENA, Miss., March 23.—Hon. Jefferson Davis has been suffering from a return of his rheumatism, complicated with the breaking out of his old wound received in Mexico thirty-eight years ago.

New York, March 30.—In the trial of ex-President Fish, of the Marine Bank, to-day, it was shown that some of the profits from the firm of Grant & Ward in 1883, were, January $34,000, February $29,000, April $21,000, May $31,000, June, $32,000, July $43,000, August $13,000.

Gen. Grant was still early this morning. He breakfasted at 11 o'clock, following breakfast was a shower of rain.

Dr. Douglas, the General retired at 11 p. m. The afternoon had been a quiet one, with periods of slumber, alternately upon the bed and an easy chair.

As the time of night for the visit arrived the General became apprehensive that the symptoms of the rheumatism were being renewed, and requested that Dr. Douglas be sent for.

His apprehensions were allayed by the employment of the same means as the night before with success, but the General preferred to remain in his chair, so as to avoid the possibility of falling from the recumbent position.

The throat was attended to again at 2 a. m., and the General had altogether a comparatively comfortable night. He is now quiet and free from pain.

PENSACOLA, Fla., March 30.—A fire occurred this morning in a one-story frame building, owned by Gambell and occupied by him as a butcher shop.

This portion of the city consisted of quite a number of small frame dwellings, closely built, with an occasional story and a half or two-story building.

The fire destroyed fourteen of these buildings before it could be gotten under control.

VICKSBURG, March 30.—The O. Line steamer R. R. Springer ran into the bank a short distance below Water-proof, La., seventy miles below this city, at the government light, and near the mouth of the Mississippi river.

The steamer was under full headway. She sprung a leak in different places and gradually sank. The boat was crowded with passengers and loaded down to the gunwales with freight.

No lives were lost, but the cargo will prove an entire loss. The steamer Natchez came along about 8 o'clock and took on all the Springer's crew and passengers.

The steamer Springer was one of the O. Line steamers running from Cincinnati to New Orleans, and was one of the fastest boats ever run in the trade.

She laid at Vicksburg about two hours yesterday evening and she had on board about eighty round-trip passengers, mostly from Cincinnati.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—The President to-day received the following communications: Consuls General of the United States—Thomas M. Waller, of Connecticut, to London; Frederick Palmer, of Maryland, to Berlin; Edmund Jussen, of Illinois, to Vienna.

Ministers Resident of the United States—Isaac Bell, Jr., of Rhode Island, to the Netherlands; Rufus Mages, of Indiana, to Sweden and Norway; George W. Merrill, of Nevada, to the Hawaiian Islands.

Ministers Resident and Consuls General of the United States—Edward Park Custis Lewis, of New Jersey, to Portugal; Rasmus B. Anderson, of Wisconsin, to Denmark.

Consuls of the United States—A. Haller, of Pennsylvania, to Athens, Greece; Evan P. Howell, of Georgia, to Manchester, England.

Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States—Thomas J. Jarvis, of North Carolina, to Brazil; Alexander H. Lawton, of Georgia, to Russia; Anthony M. Kelley, of Virginia, to Italy.

Boston, March 30.—The bark Son-lag, of Boston, from Chittagong, No-vember 24, with four butts, arrived at Salem to-day. On December 2 Andrew Soudanier, the ship's carpenter, died of cholera after an illness of five days.

On December 26 Emilio Peterson, a seaman, died of the same disease after fourteen hours' sickness. The Board of Health has ordered the bark from the wharf into the stream. Great excitement prevails.

Address all mail matter to New Orleans Christian Advocate, New Orleans.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to present to you a volume of the twenty-seventh edition of "The Priest, The Woman and The Confessional."

I have thought it my duty to publish this new edition as the antidote to the sophisms of Rome and of the High Episcopal Church party, on that subject.

When so many efforts are made to deceive the old and the young, the rich and the poor, about that sinking relic of Babelian priests, is it not the duty of every Christian and patriot to warn the unawares against the impending dangers ahead from that moral and social plague?

It was in the confessional box that the Pope had forged the chains which kept so many noble nations among his vile slaves, for so many centuries, and it is through auricular confession that the same Pope hopes, in a near future, to tie this young republic to the wheels of his chariot.

This book is the most complete refutation ever presented to the world of the dogma of auricular confession. It is the fruit of my twenty-five years spent in hearing the confessions not only of the common people, but of the nuns, the priests and the Bishops of Rome.

Nothing has been neglected by me to make this book worthy to have a place in the library of every Christian minister, every father of a family, every patriot and every legislator in the United States. For therein especially it has been written.

Yours truly,
C. CHINQUAY.

THE RESURRECTION.

BY HARRIET M. WOOD KEMMEL.

Ye who, clad in shining raiment,
Watch within the empty tomb
Where the Lord's sacred body
Lay in death through yonder's gloom,
Telling, guests from realms of glory,
All the resurrection's story!

How the tide of life returning Flashed the glad light and feet;
How the heart so lately broken
Once again began to beat;
How the head by thorns so wounded
Victory's aureole surrounded!

Tell us, glorious one whose garments
Shed a whiter light than the snow,
And whose countenance as lightning
Laid the watch, like lead men, low;
Nighttime, one, from heaven descended,
Tell us how the tomb was rendered!

How the seal of stone was broken
From the dwelling of the day;
How the cold earth was shaken
When the stone was rolled away;
While the world in silence slumbered
And the hours of death were numbered.

Tell—but oh, no tongue can utter
What transcended speech and thought;
Breath and life's communion
How the miracle was wrought;
He was dead; and lo! he liveth;
Yes, and life eternal giveth!

Forth he came! the human body
For the man the fallen wore,
And the human soul united,
Glorified forevermore;
That in woman's recreation
Man might share his exaltation.

While he fasted in the desert,
Tempted long and sorely tried,
Prayed in anguish in the garden,
On the cross in anguish died,
Watching with her Lord and weeping,
Solemn fast the church was keeping.

Fear of feast the fast succeeded:
Once again the stain is poured;
Alleluia! Alleluia!
Glorious the risen Lord!
Song of songs, in endless gladness
Drowning pain and doubt and sadness.

Alleluia! "He is risen!"
"He is risen!" the shouts resound,
Holy greeting answers greeting:
Joy at last on earth is found,
Shore to shore the salutation
Bliss as one redeemed annals.

Alleluia! Chorus of angels
To the choirs of earth respond;
Alleluia! Alleluia!
Rolleth seas and skies beyond,
Heaven and earth at last shall sever,
But the song shall pass forever!

The Physician and the Minister in the Sick-Room.

BY REV. W. B. LEWIS.

Mr. Editor: I read with interest some weeks ago your thoughtful article on the relation of the minister and physician in the room of the sick. There must be some occasion for bringing this subject prominent in the public at this time. In a recent issue of the Nashville Advocate I found this paragraph: "The average preacher knows as well how to behave in a sick-room as the average physician." I should think so. If a preacher does not know how to behave in a sick-room, can he know how to behave in a pulpit? And in my opinion there are very few physicians who do not recognize the vocation of a minister among the sick. If I knew of one, I should be certain not to desire his services in my house in case of sickness. So far as my experience and observation extends in a ministry of over twenty-five years physicians have been proverbially kind and considerate in their relations with the clergy both in and out of the sick-room. They are a class of educated, intelligent gentlemen, acquainted with the proprieties of life, and not wanting in professional courtesy, except it may be in rare instances.

Not long ago I was sent for by two physicians to visit a patient of theirs who was supposed to be in a dying condition. I was introduced into the sick-room without restraint. They told me her condition was critical, they had no hope of her recovery, and they desired me to inform her of the fact, counsel and pray with her, etc. One of them remained in the room during my conversation with his patient, and had the family gathered in when we were ready for prayers. He listened to the conversation and watched the effects of it, and said to me afterwards that she was benefited by my visit. He further stated that he found in his practice that a visit of the pastor always did his patients good; that he was never afraid to admit a minister to a sick-room, and that when he got sick himself he wanted the preachers to come to him. I decided that he was as sensible as he was courteous. The patient is convalescing. I do not claim that my visit did it. I simply claim that the visit of a minister at the proper time and judiciously conducted will not be injurious to the physical condition of any sick person. But here I desire to insist that the minister should be sent for when he is wanted with the sick. I do not mean that he should not go if not sent for, but there are good reasons why the pastor should be notified when to come. In the first place, he may not know you are sick. I have known the pastor complained of for not visiting the sick when he did not know of the sickness of the party. This is inexcusable injustice to the pastor; He is not omniscient. Why not let him know? You do not complain of your physician if he does not come without being sent for. Why not send for the pastor if you really want a visit from him? In the second place, though he may know you are sick, he may not know whether it would be expedient to visit you at present. There are times when it would not be best for the pastor to come. I have often found in visiting the sick that my visit was at the wrong time, and I have been not a little embarrassed thereby more than once. Now all this could be easily prevented by doing as the physicians above alluded to did a few days ago. A little thoughtfulness on the part of the family, and a little professional courtesy, and the embarrassment is removed and the work of the pastor in the sick-room, so difficult and delicate, is greatly facilitated.

Sowing and Reaping.

BY REV. ANGELO DOWLING.

The Apostle Paul states a grand, gospel truth under the form of universal physical law, when he says: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." No sane man will sow wheat expecting to reap oats, or plant cotton expecting to gather corn. Furthermore, no sensible man will expect to reap without sowing, or gather without planting. In these respects the world has practical sense. Besides, the world has working sense. Even those who profess to believe that God works all things according to the counsel of his own sovereign will, are earnest and hard workers in the fields of physical toil in order to feed and clothe themselves and those dependent upon them. Would it not be as reasonable to expect our Father in heaven to feed and clothe us and ours without our effort and co-operation as to save us from sin and hell, independent of our will and consent, and even against our willing and hearty co-operation? At these points there is marked inconsistency in the faith and practice of some believers, and even churches. When you open and read the creed of churches, and then read their reports from missionary fields, the points are put in sharp contrast. In the creed they declare and profess faith in God who regenerates and saves only the elect by the omnipotent exercise of his own will without any consent or co-operation of the saved; because the elect, before saved, are totally dead in sin, and can not, therefore, consent or co-operate in the work of salvation any more than a dead man in the grave can consent or co-operate with God the Father in his resurrection from the dead. The work must be done wholly and alone by the Almighty. In the face of all these declarations in the creed in regard to the salvation of the elect by decrees and foreordination, reports are published showing the work of God's children in home and foreign fields, and more money and men called for to still extend the work so as to save more and more of those who but for this supply of money and men might go on in sin and down to hell. These remarks apply, in some parts, to the active working and good working of our beloved Presbyterians. Their work by faith is better than their creed.

How about us Methodists? Are we any truer to our creed practically? Whilst we profess to believe in works as the fruits of true faith, and that living faith may as readily be seen and known by its fruits as the tree may be discerned by its leaves, yet many ignore their faith by practice. Not all, but many members of the Methodist Church act as though they were confirmed Antinomians. An Antinomian is one who professes to believe that faith in God relieves from all the obligations of the law, and, therefore, from all "good works." One of this class may think that he can indulge himself in the pleasures of sensuous enjoyment without restraint and still be a child of God. Sometimes he adds to his faith the practice of indulgence in the Roman Catholic sense, and, therefore, proposes to redeem himself from all church and preacher censure by paying into the treasury liberal sums of money. He seems to think that if he pays all his "church dues"—he has the right to go where and do as he pleases? If not corrected by the church in his wild career, he construes silence into endorsement. This planting will be sure to bring forth the fruit of the seed planted. In this way some Methodist fields are being sown with tares. Do you know what sort of seed these tares are? There are several varieties: Whisky-selling members, whisky-drinking, card-playing, dancing, cursing, theatre-going, costly-apparelled, jewel-bedizened, non debt-paying, dishonest, bankrupt members, etc. Can these be rooted up without destroying the wheat? There is the trouble. When the church neglects so much of the home work, how can she enter fully and heartily into the foreign field? When a farmer's own field is foul with destroying weeds and grass, he has not much time nor heart to help his neighbor "clean out" his overgrown in like manner. The church at home needs a deeper subduing and cleaning out in order to heavier and better crops.

Now and then facts come to light which show exactly how the grain planted brings forth in this life, the very kind sown. Some years ago at a Methodist camp meeting in this State, the son of a hard shell Baptist preacher was so converted that he actually shouted in good, old fashioned Methodist style. It offended his father so much that he said, "He would rather see his son in a bar-room drunk and cutting up, than to be taking on the way he was doing." Although in preaching he would say that God ordained whatever comes to pass, yet when his son was converted at the camp meeting, he ignored the Divine decree and went to work to prevent the will of God being done in his own son. The consequence was, his son gave up the church and religion, and became a whisky seller. "The further consequence is," his son violated the laws of the State in regard to selling whisky, and now lives in another State in order to his protection. The same father has another fact in regard to his sowing and reaping. A short time since a daughter of his was tried in the Circuit Court and convicted and fined fifty dollars for selling whisky contrary to the laws of the State. It was a sad sight, to see a young married woman—white woman—in the court, under such a charge. She is young and beautiful. She sat weeping in the court room. Whether her father shed tears, or no, I am not informed. He was in the court room. I wondered what he thought of the finding of the court, and his doctrine and teachings.

Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. All men sow, either good or bad seed. Whatever the seed the reaping will be. If the merest reaping here fills the heart and hands with sorrow and shame, or joy and life, what will it be when "we receive the things in body"—the sum total? Amid the awful splendors of the final day all shall reap.

OZARK, ALA., March 26, 1885.

From Arcadia, La.

Just home from holding the Homer, Haynesville and Summerfield quarterly conferences, we have finished our first round. We have visited all the works and have found every man at his post, anxious to do, as Brother Hodge expressed it, "The best work of his itinerant life." Surely nothing less than this can be expected of any Louisiana Methodist preacher, for God is willing, if we are, to make each year of our ministry the best year.

There is an abundance of work on hand to be done in the ten parishes of the Homer district, and the latent, unused capacity of our 3,794 members and thirty-one local preachers is fully equal to the doing of that work, if somehow this capacity can be brought into active operation. Among these Methodists there are many men and women of first-class natural abilities and ample worldly possessions, which if laid on God's altar, as living sacrifices, would speedily carry the Homer district to the fore-front in all that goes to make a live, aggressive, conquering Christianity. If just a tenth of our people were "filled with the Spirit" (see Ephesians v. 18) and were to become lovers of souls, after the style set forth in Dr. Carter's centenary address, thoroughly unselfish and willing to "spend and be spent" for the glory of God; then instead of there being in the district, just three Women's Foreign Missionary Societies, raising the sum of $33 10, there would be some dozens of these useful organizations, raising annually some hundreds of dollars; instead of there being only $245 30 handed over to the Conference treasurer, as the amount, all told, collected by churches for foreign missions in the entire district, and $2 20 collected by Sunday-schools for the same glorious cause, there would be contributed hundreds by the children and by the churches largely over the $1,175, apportioned to this district this year; instead of the $14, raised by two charges (the others doing nothing) for church extension, a half a thousand dollars would be the minimum raised for the furtherance of this new and important branch of church work; in brief, instead of the very meagre reports as to pastoral support and the other collections not here mentioned, there would be a paying up all along the line of the amounts assessed and in some instances a large excess, speaking eloquently of practical devotion to our Lord and to the spread of his kingdom of light and love. True the centenary offerings of the Homer district present a creditable showing in our minutes, but these gifts, as was generally the case all over the church, were for local objects, such as colleges, building of churches, parsonages and the like. We hope the minutes, as admirably edited by Dr. C. F. Evans, will be studied in the statistical department by our preachers and people. There should be a decided upward tendency in all these things, and the fact that so grand a thing as the religion of Jesus Christ costs us so little should cause the burning blush of shame to mantle our every cheek.

Having especially to do with the Homer district, we have examined her figures, but we cannot believe that any of our districts have come anywhere near working up to the full measure of duty in the matter of doing and giving for God. We need more class and prayer meetings, more family altars, more looking into God's word for light as to what he expects of us in the way of labor and giving, more Sunday-schools with superintendents and teachers who will not freeze out in the cold months, more congregations with sufficient religion to have the broken panes of glass substituted with whole ones, to put stoves into their churches and to see that good fires are kept in said stoves, during the time of Sunday-school and church service, more stewards "of solid piety" who consider it a reflection upon them as business men and Christians if their pastor is allowed to go to Conference short in the matter of the few hundreds promised him at the first of the year, more people who will do their level best for God. Can we have all this? Oh, yes, if we will only crucify self and yield to have our bodies and pockets wholly dominated by the Spirit of God. Then, the man who now gives two dollars, will give ten and not grumble, and no worldly engagement will come in between a man and the previous engagement he has with God, (made so by his church vows) and keep him from his attendance on class, prayer or stewards' meeting and his hearty participation in the same. Then God will be true and everything else second. Then will the command be kept: "Therefore take no thought, saying, 'What shall we eat?' or, 'What shall we drink?' or, 'Wherewithal shall we be clothed?' (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Christian brethren, death will soon claim us all; let us do and give more, even all we can, this year for God, though we should thereby be made to suffer in body and estate.

Washington Letter.

It looks as if there will be at last genuine retrenchment and reform in the government offices of Washington. Even that usually serene, imperturbable body, the United States Senate, has caught the infection. It has become alarmed at its own extravagance and has decided that its contingent fund, as well as the secrets of its executive sessions, must be protected. Committee-men, who had done nothing all winter, desired to employ clerks, stenographers, messengers, and to travel about the country all summer, stopping at this pleasant place for a time, then at that, the expense of all to be paid, of course, by the public. From time to time the Senate had acceded these privileges to a large number of its committee-men. Other committees asked permission to sit during the congressional recess, with similar favors, until the contingent fund was threatened with exhaustion. Senators grew frightened at their own prodigality, held caucuses, had live discussions, and voted for retrenchment. The junketing excursions were all nipped in the bud. Then it was agreed to send down the list of committee-men to a severely utilitarian standard. It was decided that the Ben. Butler house on Capitol Hill, which has been used as an annex to the Capitol for senatorial committees, at a cost of $15,000 a year, shall be given up. It was also discovered that over three hundred persons on the Senate rolls are costing the government about $350,000 a year, which suggested the possibility of saving a few dollars in that direction.

That efficiency and economy are to be the rule in the executive departments of the government during the Cleveland administration has, by this time, been made pretty clear. Therefore it behooves the legislative department, particularly that branch of it which is under Republican control, to tolerate no laziness or extravagance in its domain. The good resolutions of this week were let by the Republican Senators, and they deserve commendation for voting to reduce the number of underworked and overpaid employees of their honorable, but by no means frugal, body. The thoughtful constituent, too, will be flattered by just such little attentions to his prejudices in favor of reform.

It was arranged by the Senators that the present extra session should close last week, but the President asked them to wait another week. He desires to have all his diplomatic nominations confirmed, as ministers and consuls would not like to be sent to foreign countries without their tenure of office being made clear and final. His appointments for the missions to England, France, Germany, Turkey and Mexico, were much discussed during the week, and on yesterday ex-Governor Jarvis' name was sent in to be confirmed as Minister to Brazil. The President decided to give this honor to North Carolina, and the delegation from that State decided, in caucus, that Mr. Jarvis was the proper man. A position much coveted by many applicants, that of commissioner of agriculture, goes to Missouri and to Col. Coleman. Senator Cockrell was instrumental in getting this appointment, having worked early and late for the nominee. To Virginians were applicants for the place, Mr. Beverly and ex-Senator Withers. The latter was endorsed by the State delegation, but the President concluded he could not afford to side with either faction, and therefore left the Old Dominion out again.

Yesterday for the first time since his inauguration, President Cleveland attended divine service. He entered a small Presbyterian church on Four-and-a-half street, which, under the pastorate of Dr. Sumnerland, is a plain, unfashionable church. The President occupied a pew which he rented a week ago, and for which he paid a quarter's rent in advance. In this matter as well as in other things, Mr. Cleveland shows originality. He is opposed to appearing in church as a side-show of a worldly aristocratic congregation. It cannot be denied that since the time the Metropolitan church, under Rev. John P. Newman, was arranged for the accommodation of Gen. Grant, the members of the Cabinet and the Justices of the Supreme Court, there has been a scramble for the place of "Court Church" in Washington.

When ex-President Arthur took his final departure from the city on Saturday, a large crowd of distinguished people gathered at the station to see him off. Since he left the White House on inauguration day, he has been the recipient of the most lavish hospitality from Washington society. It is doubtful if there ever was a more popular president than Mr. Arthur, and now that he has gone, everybody has something good to say of him.

A Note from the Valley.

Mr. Editor: I have just returned from that part of my district that lies in the Yazoo Valley. The first time I have ever been able to get there at this season of the year, on account of the overflows they have had the last three years. I was very much gratified at the prospect. The church at Minter City has taken a new departure under the pastorate of Rev. J. L. Futrell. I found him and his good wife comfortably settled in a new parsonage, which, when entirely finished, will cost about twelve hundred dollars; the most of which has been paid by that generous gentleman, Maj. J. A. Townes. Mr. Townes is not a member of the church, but he has a noble Christian wife who is a grand-daughter of the late Dr. R. L. Kennon, of the Alabama Conference. The furniture, I was told, was put into the house by Bro. T. L. James, another large and prosperous planter. The church in that charge is in a much more hopeful condition than it ever has been.

At Greenwood, Bro. Hoskins is doing a good work. He is giving his people the pure gospel. He is fully consecrated and is intensely in earnest. We have had a great deal of bad weather, which has greatly retarded our work, but the preachers are in the spirits and quite hopeful in regard to the year's work.

MY DREAM-ANGEL.
BY S. B. F.

The day had been a dreary one,
The clouds hung low and low,
Like mourners, bending o'er the earth
In her winding-sheet of snow.
How like the day my heart had grown,
With hope and joy all spent;
There seemed nothing left to live
Except life's sacrament.
Oh! that the old vanished days,
From out their hidden store,
Would breathe again their joyous hopes
And bring their faith me more!
My weary lips had now become
The spiritless for prayer,
With only strength enough to press
The chalice of despair.
The coming night had folded in
The morning day's unrest,
And soothed with sleep and a vision bright
My surging human breast.
Our heavenly Father saw it all,
And across my earthly cares
He sent his comfort to be
"My angel unawares."
She came to me in human guise,
And wore the face I loved,
And in the light of her earnest eyes
My very soul was moved.
Our place alone sufficed to tell
Her solemn words to me,
With angel power, blended with
A mother's tenderness.
With the spirit's keener sight
(Oh! times to mortals given)
I read her look, and saw in it
What I shall know in heaven.
She pointed where before had been
My path of common duty;
Yet in that wondrous light it seemed Abide with radiant beauty.
Every pang my heart had known
I felt was right and just,
And I could meet the coming years
With the strength of hope and trust.
My blessed angel, bright and fair,
With her presence all sublime,
Turned my path from earth's dark way
To heaven's enchanted glime.
When Jacob lay in darkness there,
His only rest a stone,
From earth to heaven an angel path
Of dazzling brightness shown.
I wonder if the heavenly host Brought that dreamer such delight—
A ray of comfort more divine
Than any angel brought that night?
When our suffering Savior prostrate lay
In dark and lone Gethsemane,
The summit of his sorrows reached
Of more than mortal agony.
He prays in anguish, while his brow
With bloody sweat is stained,
Oh! pitying Father, if thou canst,
Let this cup pass undrained!
An angel came and strengthened him
With the faith that angels bring,
And soothed him with the restful strain
That only angels sing.
A holy peace spread o'er his soul,
And, with a strength divine,
He added to that other prayer,
"Not my will, but thine!"
And thus he left with every life
Bowed down by earthly cares;
When burdens grow too great God sends
His "angels unawares."
Who could bear these trial days,
With courage still to live,
If from our lives was withdrawn
The strength that angels give?
"The sweet to know that those I love,
By more temptations sought,
Are blessed with visions just as bright,
As my own dream-angel brought."
Adown within the darkest depths
Of life's surging, rushing stream
Is lying pure and beautiful
The memory of my dream.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: At the close of one year in China we removed to the native city, and made our home in a Chinese house, hoping thereby to get nearer to the Chinese and have better access to them. It was about the first of October, 1884, when the weather became cooler, that we removed to our new quarters within the walls of the native city of Shanghai. The house was shut in by high walls, which effectually shut out all noise from the busy streets around us. It was a strange experience for two young missionaries; especially was it so the first night we spent in our new home in this great heathen city, surrounded by unnumbered thousands who know nothing of God and the glorious gospel of Christ. We were the only foreigners then in the native city, and we were shut in by the great wall which surrounded the city, and great iron-bound gates closed each entrance at night.
The house in which we lived was said to be troubled by nightly visits of evil spirits, and the natives looked at us in astonishment when we told them we were going to live in that house during the winter. Even the landlord was not a little astonished at our boldness in being willing to rent the building from him for a residence. But he said, "These evil spirits do not trouble foreigners," and no doubt he was well aware of that fact, for missionaries had lived in his house before our arrival in China. No Chinese were willing to live in the house, and it had been empty for years. So soon as the city was retaken the landlord was glad to get some missionary to occupy it. One missionary and his wife who had lived in the house before us told us they heard the same stories about the house being haunted. Moreover, they said, there was but one time when they heard a strange noise they could not account for, and that was the night before they were to leave the building. Their trunks were packed and placed at the head of the stairway, ready to be removed at early dawn. Some time between midnight and daylight they heard a tremendous noise, as if all their trunks were being dragged down the stairway. The missionary rushed to the place as quickly as he could; but found all his trunks as he left them—not one was moved. They could not account for the noise, but think it must have been cats, rats, or a mongoose after rats upon the tiled roof of the building.

While living in the house we saw many cats, rats and snakes, and no doubt the mongoose was also near by. We were never at any time disturbed by evil spirits. We lay down to rest at night in perfect peace, for we felt we were in the hands of our God. We feared no harm from man or evil spirits. During our stay of six months nothing ever occurred to disturb our quiet, day or night, except an earthquake on one occasion about midnight, which shook the house from the top to its foundation.
While on the subject of evil spirits haunting houses in China, I will give an account of our old Mission Home, which was sold to Chinese during my absence from China in 1881, and is a desolate and uninhabited. We lived there for more than twenty years, saw the cause of God prosper and many souls converted from heathenism, and yet we were not at any time troubled with evil spirits. If they came at all, they certainly did not disturb us. During the first years of our residence there we noticed a Chinese building just over the wall from us which had no roof upon it. Seeing the building so long without a roof, we asked the reason why, and was told the house was haunted and no one would dare live there. A man had committed suicide in the house, and his spirit still remained in the building. As no one would live there, the Chinese had made a coal-house of it. I was told the house was left exposed to bad weather, so the spirit would in time retire; but to this day no family cares to live in the building.
During the year 1884 the Chinese who dwell there imagined they could see and hear evil spirits running to and fro through the whole place night after night making a dreadful noise. The watchman became so badly frightened that he begged to be allowed to leave the place; but his employer refused to give him permission to go. At last he was so terrified as to try to commit suicide by cutting his throat. In this condition he was taken to the hospital and his life was saved; but no one could prevail on him to return to his former abode and occupation. Before the close of the past year the Mission House and all the houses in the compound were vacated. I was around to visit the place to-day, and it seemed deserted. Saw two old women who told me that they, with two or three men, were the only persons on the premises, and they were frightened every night by evil spirits. They said when it rained it was much worse, for all the evil spirits were driven into the house and would collect about the cooking range. I suggested that the noise they heard was made by cats and rats, and told them I had lived in that house over twenty years, and had never once heard the noise of any evil spirits. The younger woman said she knew I once lived there. An old lady, about seventy years old, said: "You needn't tell me there are no devils about this place, for I hear them every night." I said to them: "Believe in Jesus, follow him and be his disciples, and no evil spirits can dare harm you." The younger woman smiled, and, with the nod of the head, I understood she thought what I said was all true. But the old woman was still firm in her belief. Poor creatures! They are full of superstition and are in constant dread of evil spirits. It is the terror of their lives. Very few children among the heathen are without some charm on the body to keep off evil spirits. The great majority of Chinese who worship idols do so to get rid of this terror which possesses their souls. We who have the opportunity and the power should give them the gospel of Christ, removes all fear of evil spirits and gives a blessed hope of eternal life in heaven.

Our Form of Public Worship.

MR. EDITOR: It is not my purpose in writing to criticize or to find fault, but merely to make a few suggestions for consideration. From experience we have learned that the best way to advance the interests of the church is to faithfully observe its rules and regulations in every particular. On page 125 of our book of discipline there is a form of public worship to be observed by the church. This form of public worship was recommended by the General Conference, a body of holy men—men of wisdom and experience assembled together to devise the best method for religious work and worship. After due deliberation in council and much prayer they submitted this practical form of public worship to be observed by all our ministers throughout the whole church as a means of preserving uniformity and symmetry. If this form was uniformly and universally observed, what could be more impressive even to a stranger, who by the very form of the service would know that he was in a Methodist Church, and at the same time would know that throughout the thousands of his worshippers the same prayers were being made and the same order observed?

And yet we are often made to regret that so many of our preachers disregard the disciplinary form and use one of their own. We do not believe that they presume to be wiser than the General Conference, nor do they intend to ignore their ordination vows. It seems to be a sort of careless habit they have fallen into without considering the importance of the matter. One thing I am glad to note: That the disciplinary form is strictly adhered to by all our Bishops. Let us imitate their example.

MANFIELD, LA., March 26, 1885.
Retrospective.
EIGHTEENTH PAPER.
CUL'S CREEK CIRCUIT.
Although thirty-six eventful years have been numbered with the past, I well remember my first appointment at Fayette. The Sabbath was pleasant, the congregation large, ready to listen to their new circuit rider. The text and discourse still have a place in memory. "Will ye also go away," was the text. Adhesion to Christ in heart and life—the Christian's only safeguard, the theme! As best I could, I endeavored to show the necessity for perseverance and stability in the service of God; that if a person desired to render himself notoriously odious, let him publicly espouse the cause of Christ, attach himself to some branch of the church of God, then pay little or no attention to the solemn vows taken, and willfully after having received a knowledge of the truth and the pardon of his sins, he would most assuredly succeed in meriting and receiving the reproach of the good and virtuous; that we could pity, but not excuse the man or woman who would thus venture to trifle with the mercies of God and the benign institutions of the gospel. In order to render the sermon practical certain characters were delineated, no more common than as now.
In the afternoon, at three o'clock, I filled an appointment at Bethel, six miles from Fayette. During the introductory services a man, who was present in the morning at Fayette, entered the church. At the close of the service he approached me, saying: "I take it for granted that someone has given you a history of my life; otherwise you could not have delineated my character as you did this morning at Fayette. You are in the possession of all the facts in my case except one. I will relate that which was omitted, and then, sir, you will be my friend." I assured him he was a stranger to me—that my remarks were not designed to be personal, but, if relevant to his case, I very much desired that he would make a practical application.
Bro. William B. Johnson, who is still alive, was then living in the neighborhood of Bethel Church. He will excuse me for obtruding upon his modest disposition by saying that I have known many good class leaders, but none to excel him. He was conversant with the Scriptures, and readily quoted passages to suit individual cases. His exhortations were kind and opportune. He will remember how reluctant he was to take license to preach the gospel, and how urgent his pastor was to have him licensed, and how we urged him to submit his case to a Quarterly Conference for recommendation, at which our much beloved, but now departed William H. Watkins, D. D., presided. Since then the writer has noted with pleasure his efficiency as a local and traveling preacher. After many years of faithful service in the church of his early years he is nearing the happy Canaan of his hopes. We were comfortably domiciled for two years at the parsonage at Fayette, where we had a good garden, a pasture for horse and milch cow, with many other conveniences. I can not forget my accommodating merchant brother (J. B. Carpenter), now living, an octogenarian. He was kind and liberal in his dealing with all, especially so with his pastore, selling them at cost and carriage. Many pleasant hours were spent in his company. A recent letter from him gives assurance that he is ready to depart and go with Christ.
How much was I indebted to my ever faithful friend and brother, Rev. J. G. Jones! At "Belle Grove he had a pleasant home, where the preachers were made welcome and encouraged in their work. His safe and pious counsels were truly a benediction. Then, his good wife, who "allured to brighter worlds and led the way," was a devoted Christian and tidy housekeeper. His own children, with some orphaned relatives, were taught by precept and example lessons calculated to divert their minds and hearts to the higher and better life. For many years I have been favored with his correspondence. He must excuse the writer for giving a quotation from his last letter. He writes as follows on his spiritual birthday: "This twenty-second day of February is a great day with me, not because it was George Washington's birthday, but on account of a matter of infinitely more importance to me than the birth of Washington. Sixty-three years ago, and about this time in the day—eleven A. M.—the Lord met with me in the pardon of all my sins, and so filled me with love that I could truly say, 'The opening heavens around me shone with beams of sacred bliss,' etc. That conversion came to stay. I never lost it; have it yet. Since last August, sixty-two years ago, I have enjoyed amid the sore trials and labors of life the blessing of perfect love. . . . I have made it a rule for a long time to leave nothing undone until to-morrow that ought to be done to-day, and for the present I have nothing more I wish to do before I die than to finish this letter." This is the privilege and might be the experience of every true follower of Christ; but, alas! how many of us come short of enjoying that perfect love that casteth out fear."

In the fall of 1883, while Bro. Jones was presiding elder of the Sharon district, and holding a quarterly meeting for Bro. Elijah Steele on the Seneca mission, his subject was, "A Call to the Ministry." I had just come from Georgia, and was a stranger to him. His discourse seemed directed to me, and aroused me to a sense of duty which I had kept concealed since my conversion in 1831. Afterward my first wife was happily converted while Sister Jones was praying for her at a camp meeting at Pleasant Grove, in Madison county, Miss. Still later Bro. Jones dedicated by firstborn (John Wesley) to God in holy baptism. Why should I not feel a strong attachment for my dear old friend who will soon leave the sorrows of earth for the joys of heaven?

"A Revival of Justice."
MR. EDITOR: Last week's ADVOCATE contained a very readable editorial on the above topic. That such a revival is needed, and greatly needed, can not be doubted by any one who is at all familiar with the proceedings of courts of law. Among the causes that have made such a revival necessary you mention the resort by lawyers to "legal quibbles and technicalities." They resign the guardianship of public morals to an undotted 'i' or an uncrossed 'l.' This is the key to the whole matter.
Now, why is there ever a resort to "legal quibbles and technicalities"? Is it not a tacit acknowledgement that any given case can not face the law and the testimony without blushing with falsity? But one answer can be given. It is this disposition of the legal fraternity to secure ends regardless of means that has led to a necessity for reform. Do not most lawyers act on the principle set forth by Lord Brougham as follows: "An advocate, by the sacred duty which he owes his client, knows in the discharge of that office but one person in the world—that client, and none other. To save that client by all expedient means to protect that client at all hazards and costs, to all others, and among others to himself, is the highest and most unquestioned of his duties; and he must not regard the alarm, the suffering, the torment, the destruction, which he may bring upon any other." It may be true that these words have never been formally approved by the profession. But do not most lawyers give them a quasi-endorsement by the methods they adopt in conducting their cases? I know a few lawyers who, I believe, practice their profession on higher principles—principles that are in harmony with an exalted moral purpose. But my observation is that such lawyers are "few and far between." A favorable decision from the judge, or verdict from the jury, is placed by the generality of lawyers above every other consideration. This being true, and not many doubt it, the idea has spread far and wide among the common people that there is, necessarily, some degree of antagonism between the lawyer's profession and pure morality; in other words, that one can not be a successful lawyer and, at the same time, a good man.
This idea is erroneous. It has grown out of lawyers not being restricted, in their practice, to the legitimate functions of their profession. It is the business of a lawyer to see that his client has a fair and impartial trial, that the facts in the case are properly brought out, the law correctly interpreted and no undue advantage taken of him by his opponent. When he goes beyond this, and endeavors to pervert the testimony and give a false meaning to the law, he degrades himself as a man and brings reproach upon his noble profession. It is such a course as this, on the part of so many lawyers, that has made "a reform in criminal jurisprudence" the demand of the hour. I am aware that this is a heavy charge to bring against a profession adorned, as it is even now, with many brilliant stars of the finest magnitude, intellectuality and morality. But is it not patent to every observer that a sufficient number of lawyers are following this pernicious course to counterbalance the righteous influence of those who proceed of a different character? Unscrupulous lawyers corrupt juries, and corrupt juries render unrighteous verdicts.
If the above observations are just, then the demand of the hour is not only reform in "criminal jurisprudence," but also in the moral character of the bar. How is this to be brought about? Let the law of God be preached as a "terror to evil doers"—wicked lawyers as well as others. This is one of the means, and it is indispensable. Without a knowledge and hearty approval of this law, no class of men will maintain, for any length of time, the high principles of strict morality. In the next place, let the judges who preside in our courts condemn and punish, by unmistakable disapprobation at least, every resort to trickery to carry out unjust designs. The judges, and especially the circuit judges, have more responsibility in this matter than any other class of men, because their power to bring about a reform is greater. They can perpetuate existing evils by connivance, or by wholesome admonition and punishment bring them to an end.

If this desideratum—the moral reformation of the bar—can not be secured by these simple remedies and matters continue to go on from bad to worse, a revolution in "criminal jurisprudence" will come from a source whose authority will be recognized and respected. "We, the people," is not an unmeaning phrase, but expresses the dignity and majesty of this great nation. This great people still have it in their power to "establish justice," and if it can not be done by one method it will by another. The whole world is, just at this time, in a social ferment as a result of wrong doing. What the result will be no one can doubt. All classes will be led to recognize the fact that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

We were comforted when a certain brother declared that we would meet no gnats on the Homer district. Nevertheless, on last Friday we did meet them, and had ceaseless and bloody combat with them for some hours while on Bro. Kennon's mare we pressed rapidly on from Brushwood to Ringgold. On arrival there we gave ourselves over to Bro. Harper's keeping and the mare to the friendly shelter of his gnatsless stable. What sly, insinuating, persistent creatures those little pests are! They work into the creases of one's neck and face, worm themselves into the folds of the ear and lovingly nestle in the lids of the eye and are "powerfully peart" in all they do. The horses and other animals suffer much under their attacks, and unless well groomed and carrying smoke-pots, it goes hard with them. Hundreds of these insects creep in under the horse's hair and fill themselves "to bursting" with his blood. Call them what you will, the Turkey, Buffalo or what not, gnats are not desirable companions on a journey. We suppose they are intended for some good use and, though troublesome, still it may be that they are necessary reminders to a man that he is mortal. We have found out that being under a preaching elder does not put a man above the gnats. So, to moralize a little, we conclude that all the way up and all the way down in ministerial as in other walks of human life, gnats are to be looked for, and God's grace is greatly needed under their every infliction. President Cleveland this minute is subject to gnats and so is the newly installed constable of some future railroad city, now composed of three stores, six saloons and no church. Gnats in society and gnats in the home; gnats in public station and in the vale of political selection where one seeks "to be little and unknown"; gnats in business and out of business; gnats in Church and State; gnats, gnats—yes, gnats everywhere, with wings and without wings, pestering all sorts of men and beasts. The gnat troubles, as Dr. John Mathews termed them, are to be found along the journey in every life. Since our last we have met the brethren at Tulip, Sparta, Minden, Mt. Zion and Ringgold. So far, all seem willing and anxious to do a grand work this year. If their faith waver not, and they work fully up to their capacity to do and to suffer in the glorious cause of their divine Master, there will be a grand work done at every point on the district. We are encouraged to hope for the best results.

MR. EDITOR: It is not fair that Bro. Sawyer should do all the writing for the ADVOCATE from this section if he is corresponding editor. It is not fair to himself, for he is too modest a man to allow himself due credit in the work of which he writes. Well, as he pronounced, he is losing himself in the broad wilds of the Homer district. Not exactly losing himself either, for he has a very efficient guide accompanying him on his first round. He is holding Quarterly Conferences at the rate of two a week, and not stinting the cause in the amount of time and labor he is giving it. Our first quarterly meeting is just over, and I feel that an impetus has been given the work already, and what will not four such visits accomplish during the year? I trust and pray that Homer district may come up this year to the full measure of its ability in every good work.
The news of Bishop Parker's death was a great shock to us all here. It would be saying very little to record that his name is almost a household word in Methodist homes here, and that his memory is likeointment poured forth. To all of us who personally knew him his death is a bereavement. But such men never die. Their works follow them. Bishop Parker's influence will live on in the hearts and lives of the many who have felt the purifying and elevating touches of his spirit. Yours truly, —The true philosophy of the gospel system is this, to feel that what depends upon ourselves; but, at the same time, entertaining the loftier conviction that all depends upon God.

In Memoriam.
"The fathers, where are they? And the prophets, do they live forever?" This suggestive inquiry of the sacred Scriptures has at the present time a special significance for our stricken and sorrowing church.
Since the last session of the General Conference no less than four of our chief pastors have fallen at their post of duty: First, Paine, with his manifold gifts and rare administrative ability, entered into the heavenly rest; then Kavanaugh, the thunder of the camp meeting pulpit, ceased at once to work and live; next, Pierce, the matchless orator, heard the summons of the Master and gladly obeyed; last, Parker, the scholarly writer and the able, evangelical preacher, made haste to join the fellowship of the glorified. These providences, although mysterious, are pregnant with meaning. He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers. This is neither the time nor the occasion for studied eulogy or extended notice. The recent death, however, of Bishop Parker, warrants longer reference to his life and character. From his early manhood he was identified with the fortunes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and it may be justly said that no minister of her connection was truer to her interest or more jealous of her honor. During the greater portion of his ministry he was connected either with city pastorate or with an editor's chair. This fact, added to his unaffected diffidence and self-distrust, made him prominent in our ecclesiastical councils than others of less moral work and of inferior intellectual ability. He seldom participated in the debates of the General Conference; but his admirable qualities of head and heart were neither unknown nor unappreciated. His election to the episcopacy in 1874 was a greater surprise to himself than to most of his brethren. Many of them had long regarded him as worthy of the mantle of Soule, Capers and Andrews. While his official term was brief, it was marked by a devoted duty and wise episcopal administration, which amply justified the choice and confidence of the General Conference; therefore, be it Resolved, That this Methodist Preachers' Meeting, in common with our whole church, has heard with sorrow of the unexpected death of Linus H. Parker, Bishop of our beloved church.
Resolved, That his bereaved family have our brotherly sympathies in the sad visitation of divine Providence; and that we prayerfully commend them in their widowhood and orphanage to him who chasteneth his people not for his own pleasure, but for their profit.
Resolved, That a copy of this memorial paper be furnished the family of Bishop Parker, and that the Wesleyan and New Orleans Advocates be requested to publish it.

M. H. DILLARD, Sec.
Rev. John Stone Davis.
The seventy-first birthday of the servant of God, March 27, 1885, was a natal day when he "came to Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and an innumerable company of angels, the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven"—having accomplished today the allotted three-score and ten; he "entered into the joy of his Lord." We laid him to rest in the Opelousas La. Cemetery to await the "resurrection of the just." His brethren in ministry—T. J. Hough, S. Keener, O. and T. B. White—buried him in the solemn and impressive ritual of church at whose altars he had ministered for forty-nine years. He was superannuated. Born in middle Tennessee. He traveled a number of years in that Conference, and for many years in Louisiana has "testified the good of the grace of God." He leaves a weeping widow who has walked with him forty-four years, and four children—all grown—to follow his example to whom heaven is richer. His sons, Revs. R. A. and J. White Davis, devoted members of the Conference. Thus our ties are loosening from earth and fastening to the skies. His patience, faith, triumph and final glory of this good man is treasure of the striking and most satisfactory evidences of the power of saving grace. As one by one the strings of life were loosed and disease made randa on the citadel of life, I could feel and realize the philosophy of sentiment:
"Hark! they whisper, angels say, Sister spirit, come away," until, whispering back from the spiritual world in triumph, such words as "Precious Jesus," "Sweet rest," "yes"—the accompanying words seemed to blend with the harmonies of action:
"Lead, lead your wings! I mount! I fly!
O, grave, where is thy victory,
O, death, where is thy sting?"
The processes of death are strange. While one in the meridian of life the frame of physical, intellectual, moral power is suddenly cut down here is one wasting from the formidable attacks of disease for long weary months—until he succumbs to his future shafts—a victor through who has the "keys of death." THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1885.

The article of Bro. Bushman, in our last issue, on insuring churches has attracted well-deserved attention. Dr. Marshall and Bro. Black warmly commend his plan this week, and we hope soon to see something of the kind fairly inaugurated. Appreciating all the embarrassments of insuring on the "mutual plan," we are confident this scheme can be made to work to the saving of thousands to the church in excessive premiums and in the ashes of uninsured property.

"No callers on Sunday," is President Cleveland's public announcement. That needs to be printed in every newspaper in the land and repeated in every pulpit. And we quite agree with the Christian At Work that if the busy head of 57,000,000 of people can transact his business six days in the week and have Sunday to himself, how about the smaller heads and little bosses? In this regard the President has set an example worthy of national emulation.

The fact that seven Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have died in less than eight years, says the (Pittsburg) Methodist Record, is enough to excite inquiry among our Southern brethren. Have feeble men been selected to this office? or are its duties so trying that men of ordinary health are unable to bear the strain? The work is onerous, but with two exceptions the deaths were of men far advanced in life and of long episcopal service. Bishops Palmer and Kavanaugh were beyond eighty.

Where is the trouble? The New York Christian Advocate, like a skillful physician, undoubtedly locates it in the following. The diagnosis is commended to similar upstarts in this latitude.

"I have a legal mind," said a young man to his mother who had earned the money to educate him, "and, therefore, can not believe in Christianity." So? Sir Matthew Hale and Lord Bacon and Sir William Blackstone found no difficulty. Several of the greatest lawyers in this and neighboring States are among the most devout believers. On the eighth of this month the Hon. Luther Day, LL.D., ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio, died at his residence in Ravenna, Ohio, aged seventy-two years. His funeral took place at the Methodist Church, of which he was a member, on the eleventh instant. His last words were: "I am not afraid to die; yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." This was the passage in which Daniel Webster sought for comfort when the splendor of his career passed under the shadow of the grave. Young man, have you a legal mind? If you have, and can not believe the gospel, the trouble is not with your mind, but with your heart.

Revival at West Point.

MR. EDITOR: I doubt not that the readers of the ADVOCATE would be glad to hear of God's work in this town. We closed a grand revival meeting here last night. Forty-odd souls converted during the meeting. Twenty-seven have united with our church; some have joined the Presbyterians; others will join us next Sunday. All the people of our town seemed to have been brought under the influence of the good work. Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists say to us that there has not been such a revival of religion here for years. Bro. Long, of Okolousa, was with us two days of the second week and preached five able sermons. During the entire third week, including the Sabbath, we were favored with the faithful and efficient assistance of Rev. H. E. Smith, of Carrollton. These brethren have both made for themselves many friends in our town. The pastors and leaders of the other churches rendered us some good service, for which we return our thanks. Our house of worship, with seating capacity for at least four hundred and fifty, was several times filled notwithstanding the inclement weather, of which we had no little during the meeting. From the above you may be able to judge of the extensive interest taken. The work goes on. Two or three have reported their conversion since we pronounced the meeting closed. Five were converted at the altar at the last service. The Cumberland Presbyterians began their meeting yesterday. May the good work continue! Yours fraternally,

E. G. KILGORE.

Address of the Publishing Committee.

DEAR BRETHREN: Your Publishing Committee have looked as closely and carefully into both the business and editorial management of the paper as we thought the occasion demanded, and take pleasure in saying we approve both. The publishers, we think, are utilizing as best they can all the means at their command to furnish all possible space for editorial matter, and the editor is filling this space wisely and well, so that already we have one of the very best members of our large Advocate family. Still the paper is not all that it could be—all that the publishers and editor desire it should be; and we are of opinion that the necessary means are within easy reach, and could be furnished not only without injury to any one, but with profit to all concerned. Our church within our bounds certainly needs such an organ through which to speak the truth in Jesus as we apprehend it. To say that the church needs such an organ means nothing unless it means that the individual membership needs it. You and I need the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to qualify us for and assist us in our Christian work. We need it to assist us in knowing what we ought to be and how to be it, and what we ought to do and how to do it, and all others need as we do.

Except the word of God itself, there is no medium of religious thought so cheap and yet so efficient as a good religious newspaper. For the small sum of two dollars the head of the family can turn a current of fresh, living thought into his home and into the heads and hearts of his inmates to refresh, invigorate, educate, fix the principles, form the character and determine the destiny both here and hereafter as no other human means can do, and this current for this small outlay flows on weekly for twelve months. Who does not need such an organ? And who hesitates to say that the greatest benefit from this small outlay results to the one making it? In this case by far the greatest blessedness comes to the giver. Can we, therefore, neglect or decline such a proffered good to ourselves and those dependent upon us without proving recreant to a great duty and reckless of great interests? Ourselves and our families need the intellectual and spiritual supplies here offered as much as they need bread, and supplying to them and ourselves this great need supplies to the publishers in turn the means necessary to our supply. We will have failed in our duty till there is a religious newspaper supplied to every member within our bounds. Half this accomplished, and our publishers will have abundant means to supply all needed space to the editor, and, with his hands thus untied, he can measure up to his full capacity for work and the full demand of the church and the times.

Allow us to say, brethren, that this is no holiday pastime in which our publishers are engaged, nor is it even fat salaries on much work. With one it is much work on small salary, and with the other less work and no pay. They have recently decided to adopt the cash system. Hereafter the paper will be sent only when the subscription price accompanies the order. They thought this best, and they are business men. Now, let the orders with the cash pour in upon them. They have also decided to send the paper free of charge to the traveling preachers. Some of us may doubt the wisdom of this course; but they think it best. This puts an additional obligation on us, brethren of the traveling connection, to get others to take the paper. Let us use our best efforts to induce old subscribers to renew and to get as many new subscribers as possible. Let us also look closely after all old claims and collect them if we can, and forward at once any money now in hand or that may hereafter be collected by us. Against some of our preachers considerable amounts are entered. Of course, the presumption is that these amounts were never collected. If they have been collected, let them be forwarded at once; if they can be collected and have not been, let them be collected and forwarded as soon as may be practicable; if they have not been and can not be collected, the brethren against whom the amounts stand owe it to themselves to so inform the publishers and free themselves of responsibility in the matter.

We would not have you construe anything said above into a note of alarm. Such is not its nature nor design. The paper is better prepared for publication and has better credit than it has had for years, and if there is the least unsoundness in its condition anywhere, we have failed to discover the least trace of it. We simply mean to say that we believe that we have the men there who can and will make the paper all that can reasonably be desired if they have the means, and we want our people to furnish the means by supplying themselves with the paper. Now, brethren, let the cash and subscriptions roll in upon them till the list of subscribers is rolled up to figures worthy of ourselves and our paper.

J. H. CANNON, for Committee.

The Renaissance of London Methodism.

The Methodist Times (London), of March 12, comes to hand with a stirring editorial on this subject and a full stenographic report of a remarkable gathering in City-road Chapel. As suggested, it was probably the most significant and important event in the modern history of London Methodism. The last Conference appointed a large representative committee to examine carefully into the condition of Methodism in the metropolis, as to some of the old chapels in certain localities and its failure to supply large destitute districts with the gospel. After patient study of the difficult problem a "London Wesleyan Mission" was suggested, and the movement was formally inaugurated in the great demonstration at City-road Chapel. The objects are two, and are quite distinct from each other. They are: 1. To carry the gospel to such regions of London, and especially of Central London, as are most destitute and degraded. 2. To assist in the support of lay missionaries and mission work generally in necessitous districts. Some of the statements made in the meeting by distinguished speakers were a revelation of spiritual destitution alarming to contemplate. One declared that every Sunday there were more people in London who willfully neglected public worship than the entire population of the thirty-nine county towns of England. Another pastor remarked that in his own circuit there were 14,000 workmen in one block of buildings, and of these only fourteen were members of our church. In Lambeth there are as many inhabitants as in the entire county of Lincoln; but in Lincolnshire there are about fifty Methodist ministers whereas in Lambeth there are only five. Dr. Riggs said in London there were five millions of people, and it was not an exaggeration to say that half of them habitually neglected all that appertained to religion and religious reverence. Another significant fact made prominent was that certain chapels of ample accommodations and long standing in great business centers had almost lost their membership by the migrations of the population. All these and other facts present, what Dr. Riggs well called, "a terrible problem."

And yet London Methodism has enjoyed unprecedented prosperity within the past two decades. After the death of Mr. Wesley so many Methodists returned to the Church of England that our cause in London maintained only a feeble existence for many years. The lost ground was regained, however, under the inspiration of the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund established in 1861 by the munificence of Sir Francis Lytton. By its agency 65 large chapels, seating 1,000 persons each, have been built, increasing the number of sittings from 36,000 to 115,000, while the numbers of ministers in active pastoral work has advanced from 51 to 115. But another forward movement is now imperative, or retrogression will commence. One of the speakers emphasized the statement that this was a great and critical time for London so far as Methodism was concerned. The enthusiasm of the great meeting at City-road was immense. Our brethren laid aside their traditional conservatism and talked with the fire and aggressive spirit of typical American Methodists. And before the benediction was pronounced over $40,000 was raised to inaugurate the movement. This is to be outside of, but auxiliary to, regular circuit work. In outlining the plan all agreed that it should not be hampered by the rigid rule of the itinerancy, and some of the leaders quite startled us in declaring that, in their judgment, the three years' pastoral limit has retarded our progress in the world's metropolis.

We have read the proceedings of that great demonstration with peculiar interest. 1. It gives gratifying evidence of the fact that the old dreary Methodism is burning with a steady flame in the home of its birth. Wesley and his collaborators in their early Conferences were never more tremendously in earnest to spread scriptural holiness over the United Kingdom than were those brethren in City-road Chapel to win their wicked metropolis to Christ. Their words have a thrill of power set in type and read five thousand miles away. So long as that spirit remains the glory and power of Methodism will abide. 2. The very difficulties there discussed must command the attention of Methodists in all our large American cities. The pauper classes and the working people congregating in the cities are already a gigantic problem. Their physical sustenance and material betterment are now engaging the profoundest attention of philanthropists and political economists. And their spiritual culture is the burden and prayer of the churches. The thousands here in New Orleans who never attend public worship are enough to inspire a City-road Chapel movement. Then, again, our old churches in the heart of the cities suffer like some London chapels. They have often to be sold or rebuilt to keep up with the moving membership. Hence suburban congregations are increased by the death of city churches. They barely exist though in the centers of population districts. It was a bold suggestion of one of the City-road speakers—but it had the self-denying spirit of the gospel—when he said some of our wealthy and educated people must settle in East London and devote their lives to Christian work. That is a grand thought. Fashion, health, comfort and pleasure determine the location of city residences; but whoever heard of one being selected with a view of serving the Lord's needy children? Brethren of the cities, let us think on these things.

Our China Mission.

In the last Wesleyan there is an elaborate and interesting letter from Dr. Y. J. Allen, superintendent of our China Mission, which is in substance his annual report. He reports the annual meeting, which was held in Shanghai, January 7-11, as harmonious and profitable, though not marked by the outward or emotional signs of last year. Our work at present comprises three districts, viz: Shanghai, Nantong and Suchow, and three distinct departments of labor—the evangelistic, the educational and the medical. These departments, except the medical, are straitened and embarrassed for more laborers; hence he pleads earnestly and eloquently for an addition of ten to their working force—five lay and five clerical. We very much fear that the Board will not be able to respond to this call and others, however urgent. The laborers could be secured doubtless; but, alas! for the means to send and sustain them. With a full treasury, what mighty things could be done in the name of the Lord!

The doctor's observations on questions of policy and administration are certainly provocative of serious thought. He is a man of vivid and vigorous convictions, and sustains them with eloquent, if not always convincing, argument. Full of aggressive power and bent on glorious toils, he is impatient of the day of small things. At our distance from the field, and necessarily with very inadequate knowledge of facts on which to base a judgment, we are much at sea on questions of internal administration. And when the opinions of missionaries themselves conflict, our uncertainty is the more embarrassing.

His views of a "native ministry" are at variance with the common conception or, maybe, "misconception." All Mission Boards in the work in all lands have proceeded upon the idea that it was important to speedily develop competent native helpers from the material at hand. That is the secret of our rapid growth in Mexico; but the conditions in China may be different. By resolution of the annual meeting, the Board of Missions was requested to secure the visit of a Bishop to the mission at a date not later than the first of December, next, in order to organize the foreign members of the mission into an Annual Conference.

Bishop Keener preached a grand Easter sermon at Louisiana Avenue last Sunday morning, and conducted the union communion service at Carondelet in the afternoon. This was a delightful occasion, and will in future become a feature of our New Orleans Methodism. There were twenty ministers present and several hundred communicants.

The Central American War.

The war now raging among the States of Central America is so near us and so liable to affect the interests of our own government that the ADVOCATE readers should be informed as to its cause and progress. An understanding of the difficulty necessitates a review of history. The east coast of Central America was visited by Columbus in 1502. In 1523 Pedro L. Alvarado began a conquest of the country, and in 1525 succeeded in its entire subjugation. It remained under the yoke of Spain until 1823, when the five colonies formed a federal union of independent States, modeled somewhat after our own great republic. This confederation existed with varying fortune until 1839, when it was dissolved, and each State became an independent sovereignty. These five republics are Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, San Salvador and Guatemala. They have a united area of 175,000 square miles and a total population of about 2,900,000.

So far as we are able to ascertain, the facts concerning the present imbroglio are as follows: There have been negotiations pending for some time looking to a restoration of the union of the States. All the details were arranged except the adjustment of the relative rates of taxation for the payment of the several debts of the different republics. The scheme has been fostered, especially by Gen. Barrios, President of Guatemala, the largest and wealthiest of the republics. He has maintained also a general protectorate over Honduras and San Salvador. Some friends of the enterprise, however, proved to be traitors and, joining the independent party, made vigorous war against it. Thereupon Gen. Barrios announced his determination to compel their allegiance and proclaimed himself the supreme military chief of the Central American States. His success would doubtless be assured but for the probable interference of Mexico. President Diaz has already interposed, and threatens to march a strong army against the Guatemalan chieftain unless his course is stayed. President Barrios is an able man, of varied accomplishments and distinguished administrative ability. During his presidency he has established in Guatemala a complete system of telegraphy, developed several important railroad enterprises, inaugurated a thorough system of public schools, from the primary school to the university, and has stopped the Roman Catholic Church's drain upon the public treasury. When he became President the church party levied tithes for everything and supported cloisters, nunneries, etc., with lavish hands. Gen. Barrios wrought a revolution in that regard, and in all respects has made an able executive. If like results could be achieved for the several republics, the re-establishment of the union might be a gain to modern civilization.

Angels.

BY REV. J. D. A. ARRENS, D. D.

There is a species of Sadducism prevalent among many Christians. They believe not in the existence of angel or spirit. Because of the sinful conjurations of so-called spiritualists many true followers of the Lord have suffered injury by allowing their minds to recoil from a doctrine scripturally indisputable.

He who brought life and immortality to light is very plainly outspoken in regard to the existence and office of the angels. In the parable of the tares he speaks of the angels as the executive officers of the great Judge. Warning against giving offense to blasphemous, though apparently insignificant, calling them little ones, he declares that their angels—obviously meaning, guardian-angels—always behold the face of God, being intermediaries between the Father and his children. Alluding to the uncertainty of the time of the final judgment, he says that of the hour and day not only man, but even the angels are ignorant. In the parable of the lost coin he suggestively asserts that there is joy in the presence of angels over one sinner that repenteth. Setting forth the great sin of deifying him before men, he avows that, as a punishment, God would deny those guilty before his angels. When at the time of his betrayal he admonished Peter to sheathe his sword, he informs him that, if he desired, God would send more than twelve legions of angels to his rescue. Portraying the grandeur of the scenes attending judgment day, he expresses himself to the effect that the holy angels will be with him at the time of the gathering of all nations before his throne. In his parable of Dives and Lazarus the latter was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom.

Angels rendered Christ invaluable service. They announced and testified to his incarnation. After the temptation in the desert and subsequent to his agony in Gethsemane an angel appeared and strengthened him. Angels informed the astonished women and apostles of the accomplished resurrection of the Lord.

Whence are the angels? As the human race, so also did the angels emanate from the creative hand of Deity. They existed manifestly at the time of the creation of our terraqueous ball, for Job asserts that at that time the morning stars had sung together and all the sons of God had shouted for joy.

Setting forth the exalted character of our Savior, St. Paul, in Hebrews, incidentally describes the true character and mission of the angels: "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" They are ministers and, as their name implies, are sent on Divine errands. They are highly gifted servants of God—who, though omnipresent, requires at times special agencies for special purposes. Domiciled in heaven, worshipping God, they are ready to do his bidding in any part of his boundless domain. They are spirits; yet must be clothed with some kind of spiritual body, for Jesus teaches that after the resurrection on the last day we shall be equal unto the angels.

Their service for our benefit we can best estimate by viewing what they did for our fellow-men in days of yore. They prevail upon those tempted from sinning against God. To fugitive Hagar an angel appeared and induced her to return to her mistress. When Balaam was in danger of giving flattering advice to Balak and withhold Divine information an angel interrupted his progress, and, under circumstances very impressive, admonished him to withhold not the truth.

Guardianship and protection seem to be their special mission. They saved Lot and family, even laying hands on the "parties to impel" to immediate action. David asserts that the angel of the Lord encamped round about them that fear him, and deliver them. When St. Peter, in a dungeon dark, Herod being bent on his destruction, an angel came to him with light and liberation. Those who were for Elshah were numerous than the Syrians against him. The mountain was full of horses and chariots and fire round about the prophet.

God also employs the angels—good angels—to inflict punishment. An angel smote the firstborn of Egypt; another destroyed 70,000 Israel; one almost annihilated the Assyrian army during one night; an angel smote Herod, that he was eaten of worms and gave up the ghost.

The last service which angels render to believing mortals is to escort the departing soul to paradise. The exit from the body and the transit to the other world are shrouded in mystery. Even the believers look shudderingly to that catastrophe—death, and possible loneliness on the journey from earth to heaven. But here, too, angels come to our relief. There is not a death round which Divine messengers do not congregate. As soon as the soul is extricated from the mortal clasp, angels become visible, congenial, introducing themselves, ready to serve as companions and escorts to the glory land. Our transit to a celestial home will be more glorious than that of Elijah.

Those who prayerfully walk with God often enjoy the company of angels. Sometimes, as celestial denizens, they plant or overbush thoughts and affections. Again, Divine artists, they decorate the temple of the Holy Ghost, the human heart, with holy aspirations and fervent devotion. When tempted, they encourage us to withstand; when faint in fighting the good fight of faith, they strengthen and cheer; when disconsolate and sad, they soothe our tears and administer consolation.

Sin excludes these benign friends from our presence.

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sunday School Union will take place Sunday next, the twelfth instant, four o'clock P. M., in Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

It is to be hoped there will be a complete representation of the schools in the district, and that this the best anniversary held during the thirty-nine years of its existence.

All strangers who are co-workers with us and lovers of the Sunday school cause are cordially invited to be present.

There will be a meeting in Carondelet Street Church on Saturday (eleventh), at four o'clock P. M., a final rehearsal of the songs and addresses for the anniversary on Sunday following. Let as many of the schools be in attendance as get there.

—These are the significant words of Blackstone, the great author and jurist: "Common law requires that a man should not use his property to the injury of another: the consent of the party injured is no mitigation of the offense."

—Mrs. Vanderbilt has done a handsome thing. On reading Miss Blanch Gilbert's letter as published in a late number of the Episcopal Methodist, she sent her $100 for use at San Luis Potosi, Mexico.

—After spending a month in Liberia, preaching daily with marked success, Bishop William Taylor left February 22 for St. Paul de Loanda to meet his band of missionaries with their families from New York via Liverpool. In writing of his work in Liberia to a friend in the United States, he says: "The water is good, the climate salubrious and equable, the people seem in good health, in moderate circumstances, but dress well and present a good appearance. I enjoy this climate, eat well, sleep well, work hard, and keep close to Jesus. I have great cause for gratitude to God, and no disposition to be dissatisfied with God or man."

—Rev. T. J. Dodd, D. D., of Vanderbilt University, has been elected to membership in the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis of Boston, and also to the Board of Trustees of the Institute of Hebrew, of Chicago. He is a fine Hebrew scholar, and well deserves public recognition.

—Memorial tablets in honor of Bishop Pierce and Dr. Wm. H. Ellison, ex-Presidents of Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., are to be placed in the college chapel. An appeal has been issued to the alumni scattered abroad, by a committee of the Alumni Association, for contributions to this worthy object.

—Attorney General Garland went down to his office on Sunday morning and was surprised to see quite a number of his clerks at work. He ordered them home at once, and forbade any further Sunday labor during his term of service. That is worthy of Mr. Garland's Methodism and a Cabinet officer in this great government.

—Bishop McQuade, Roman Catholic, of Rochester, N. Y., proposes to reform the choir of his diocese. He has ordered that none but Roman Catholics and actual communicants shall sing in the choir. He says: "How revolting it is for the congregation to hear the voice of one who does not believe in what he or she is singing. It is mockery, instead of worship."

—The Ministerial Association, of Louisville, Ky., has adopted some very sensible and timely resolutions on the subject of funerals. They recommend "simplicity in ceremony, economy in expenses and perfect fidelity in the lessons drawn from the life of the deceased." They further advise that as far as possible, funerals be avoided on the Sabbath, and that burials, so far as practicable, be private.

—We see it stated that a lady in Georgia appropriated some time since, one thousand dollars to purchase an edition of a religious work for gratuitous circulation. Another purchased one entire edition of a publication for distribution among young men. A wise use of money. No better work can be done than the circulation of good literature. If we had means at command to put a copy of this Advocate in every Methodist home in our patronizing Conferences this year, a revolution would be wrought that would make the angels rejoice.

—Rev. Felix R. Hill, D. D., will preach the commencement sermon at Hwassee College in May.

—The regularly appointed Wesleyan Conference evangelist, Rev. Thomas Cook, is meeting with gratifying success. As specimens of the great ingatherings under his labors, 943 conversions were reported at Wallall and 230 at Oxford.

—We are indebted to Rev. F. M. Williams, presiding elder of the Brandon district, for a call to the Advocate office during his recent visit to the Exposition.

—The Rev. J. W. Lee, of Rome, Ga., has been invited by the Rev. Dr. Deems to read a paper on "Hegel's Contribution to Christian Thought," during the summer session of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy, to be held at Aabury Park.

—We are obliged to Commissioner Barrow for an invitation to take part in the ceremonies of Louisiana Day, April 30, at the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition. The date selected is closely interwoven with the history of the State, and we doubt not but that Louisianians will make it the grandest and most important event of the Exposition.

—There is a glorious meeting in progress at Clarkdale. Bros. Deiman and Honnell are assisted by Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Koeclusko. Ten joined the church one night.

—Remittances for the monument of Bishop Parker are coming in. They will be received at this office and acknowledged by the treasurer of the committee, Bro. Werlein. Rev. J. T. Sawyer sends ten dollars.

—We regret to learn of the very serious illness of Dr. C. C. Kelley at his home near Lebanon, Tenn. He returned from Mexico in seeming good health, but was soon prostrated with an attack of malarial fever. Prayers will go up from thousands of hearts that his useful life may be spared to the church. Such an incarnation of missionary zeal and courage rarely adorns the honor roll of any age or church.

—Bishop Wilson has been spending some days in Nashville, and preached recently in McKendree Church to an immense congregation on The Final Judgment. The Nashville Advocate says the Bishop's "long sickness had not diminished his mental force or abated his evangelical fervor." We join with our confere in exhorting the brethren not to tempt the Bishop to overwork.

—The postoffice address of Rev. J. L. Furell is Minter City, Miss. We regretted our absence from the office when he called with his wife, on their recent visit to the city.

—Dr. W. H. Morrow, of Nashville, the distinguished dentist and royal Methodist, was in the city last week attending the Southern Dental Association. He did not forget 112 Camp street.

—Bishop Spaulding said at Baltimore: "I am convinced that drunkenness has done more to diminish the number of Catholics in the United States than anything else. When a Catholic priest stands up in a pulpit and says the Catholic Church is the church of God, others can say, 'Look at the drunkards.' This will be so, unless you stop the cause of intemperance. When I meet a Catholic, high or low, who sneers at temperance, I say that he is not a good Catholic."

—Mr. Schermann, President of the National Brewers' Association of this country, recently made this defiant declaration in a public address: "I will countenance, advise, and help every saloon-keeper in his violation of the Sunday laws." But a formal announcement was not necessary to ascertain his purpose. The entire business betrays a contempt for all law and a disregard of the commonest morals.

—The Centenary contributions of the Baltimore Conference amounted to $76,454.44.

—Five thousand copies of Bishop McTear's "History of Methodism" were sold in six months after its publication. We have hope of the church if that book is widely and carefully read.

—Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, of Hartford, Conn., the distinguished author and editor, is in the city on an Exposition visit.

—The special meetings held at St. Charles Avenue Church last week were full of spiritual interest and real power. Bro. Carradine will continue the services this week. There will be preaching also at Felicite Street every evening during the week. The pastors of the city are hopeful of a general work of grace.

—Dr. Hardie Brown, of Birmingham, Ala., preached at St. Charles Avenue last Sunday evening, attended the preachers' meeting on Monday morning, and made a pleasant call at the Advocate office. He makes a cheerful report of Birmingham Methodism.

—The one hundred and thirtieth anniversary of Habineum's birth-day will be celebrated to-morrow, April 10, at Tulane Hall, University of Louisiana. A general convention of homeopathic physicians is in session in the city. We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to the anniversary exercises.

—Revs. H. J. Harris and C. F. Smith, conference comrades of the editor, called at 112 Camp street on Tuesday.

—The venerable and revered Rev. Joseph Nicolson, is in the city this week. He is removing from Ocean Springs, where he has resided for some years, to Covington, La. His health is quite feeble and the infirmities of years are evident in his tottering steps, but his faith is strong and his heart joyous with Divine love.

—For a week or more the entire nation has been sitting at the bedside of ex-President Grant, looking on with grief for his decease. At this writing (Tuesday) there is slight improvement, but his death is near at hand. He is enduring the trial with the same composure and courage that have characterized his eventful life. From every section of the country earnest prayers have been offered for him. It is very probable that he will pass away within a few days. Dr. Newman, his special friend and spiritual counselor, is with him constantly, and says the distinguished soldier is ready for the last struggle.

—The Winona District Conference will meet at Winona, April 16. We are obliged for a special invitation and hope to be present.

—We are indebted to the presiding elder, Rev. J. O. Keener, for an invitation to attend the Mobile District Conference next week. But for another similar engagement, it would be a great pleasure to accept.

—Rev. J. F. Scourlock, of La-fourche, La., is in the city to attend the New Orleans District Conference which meets this afternoon at Felicite Street Church.

In Memoriam.

BISHOP PARKER.

Bishop Parker's connection with the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE began February 12, 1883, and was severed January 12, 1885. For nearly thirty years he was a member of this committee, thus serving the church in that capacity for a longer period of time than any other member of said committee. During that long term of years Bishop Parker established a reputation in the church at large, and built up a character in the midst of his brethren of the Publishing Committee which they to-day look upon with conscious pride and hold in highest estimation. As a member of the committee, he was jealous of the good name of the paper and ever watchful of its interests. He studied with painstaking care all plans recommended for its improvement, and gave at suitable times wise counsels by which its progress might be insured. The committee never had a more conservative or a more progressive member. The paper never had a safer counselor. In the annual meetings of the committee his urbanity was displayed with a freedom which captivated and held in loving bonds the affections of his confidants, and his dignified, yet unrestrained, manner, illustrating the results of the working of the Divine Spirit upon his own nature, commanded their deepest respect. His criticisms of methods proposed for the good of the paper exhibited a thoroughness of thought to which few attained, and his advocacy of any measure was given with such broad wisdom and clear logic as almost invariably secured success. The success of the ADVOCATE in the past and its present position in the world of religious literature are in a large measure due to the wise counsels and self-denying work of Bishop Parker. The committee of to-day feel that in the death of Bishop Parker the ADVOCATE has lost one of its best friends. So keenly do they realize this loss that no recitation of words is adequate to give expression to their sorrow.

Insurance of Churches.

Mr. Editor: Bro. H. W. Bushman, of Yazoo, has published in your paper of April 2 a very striking plan for insuring our churches. There is much in it. The same plan can embrace our rectories, or parsonages, and thus save the church large sums of money and much controversy in obtaining an equitable and satisfactory settlement with insurance companies.

I think Bro. Bushman will take pleasure in formulating the plan in detail, so as to elucidate the practical working of the scheme, and assist, if possible, in its more ready adoption.

To me it seems advisable that every church joining the insurance guild, or association, should pay in advance, as do all insured people, and any church burnt while its annual assessment is unpaid should lose its claim to insurance money with which to repair or rebuild. If such a plan were organized throughout our connection, it must result favorably in many ways—especially in saving at least from $5 to $700,000 per annum to our people.

But I presume it will require the action of a General Conference to inaugurate the plan. However, if it should meet the approval of our Board of Bishops, at the May meeting, and they were to endorse it and recommend its general feature to the consideration of the people and the brethren who may be elected to the next General Conference, that would greatly facilitate the adoption and organization of the plan, or hasten its exit from our thoughts. If it should be made the duty of every presiding elder to wheel his district into line for universal insurance, in less than a year the whole work could be accomplished. At any rate, let us ventilate the suggestion and see if it is a seed thought or a sandstone. Yours,

C. K. MARSHALL.

"Insuring Churches."

Mr. Editor: Every now and then we are brought face to face with some new thing which is so important, and yet so simple, that we wonder why somebody did not think of it a thousand years ago. The plan suggested by H. W. Bushman for insuring churches is a new thing which at once commends itself as vastly important and preeminently practicable. If human lives may be safely and economically insured on this mutual plan, why may not church edifices? They can be, and I do not hesitate to say they will be. If not now, after awhile. I don't not that this plan will come into operation. Why should it not go so at once when the benefits would be so great and the cost so small? Let someone take the lead in a movement in this direction. He will not want for followers. Yours,

W. C. BLACK.

PEARL OF GOSPEL SONGS. By Wm. A. Ogden and Warren W. Bentley.

From our brief examination we judge this to be after the usual order of such publications, containing some excellent pieces and some rather indifferent. It is claimed that the songs are all new, original, and suited to every department of religious work. It is furnished in paper covers for twenty-five cents a copy; in board for thirty cents. S. T. Gordon & Son, No. 13 East 14th street, New York.

—The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Dr. J. W. Hinton, editor, for April, has come to hand. In this issue we can do no more than give the table of contents: United States Coast Geologic Survey, by J. H. Carls, L. L. D.; Mountain Observations, by the editor; A Poetical Genius, by Rev. Geo. W. Walker; Methodism—Demands and Needs, by Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D.; Religion, by Rev. F. M. Edwards; A Fortunate Flooding, by Rev. M. Callaway, D. D.; The Philosophy of the Will, A Criticism of Democracy and a Review of McTear's History, by Dr. D. C. Kelly.

—Christian Thought, for March and April, contains a paper by the Rev. Samuel S. Harris, D. D., L. L. D., Bishop of Michigan, entitled, "The Theistic Argument from Man." This paper is the Anniversary Discourse in behalf of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy, delivered in St. Thomas Church, New York, Sunday, January 18, 1885, and is an interesting and forcible re-statement of the argument from design from the anthropological standpoint. Wm. H. Platt, D. D., L. L. D., of Rochester, N. Y., treats ably the proposition, "The Law of Correspondence applicable to Moral Forces as to Physical." The question, "Where is the Land of Goshen?" is dealt with by Mr. F. Cope Whitehouse, A. M.; and the Rev. Jas. F. Riggs, A. M., contributes a study on "The Hittites." Chas. M. Davis, secretary, gives an account of the monthly meetings of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy. The regular departments—"Our Letter-Box," "Memorabilia," "Notes," and "About Books," contain much that is bright and valuable. Christian Thought is published at 4 Withport Place, New York City.

Enclose the bills, and, where letters containing money are sealed in presence of the postmaster, we will assume all the risk.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

LEXINGTON, Mo., April 2.—A few minutes after 9 o'clock this morning a cyclone from the southwest struck the little village of Waverly, Mo., ten miles east of this city, and totally demolished four dwelling houses and badly damaged two others. Ten minutes before the cyclone swooped down a bank coming rapidly up from the southwest. As it approached the town it began to settle down toward the ground. Two frame barns were leveled first, and then three dwellinghouses in succession. A sound was then made and another house was demolished. A corner of D. A. Venable's general store was blown down, while haystacks, trees, etc., were razed to the ground. Intense excitement prevailed, but an examination showed that, although a number of people were seriously injured, no one was killed outright. The cyclone cut a swath through both Lafayette and Saline counties.

BATON ROUGE, La., April 2.—Gov. McKeen issued the following proclamation to-day: "The 30th day of April has been selected as Louisiana Day at the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition at New Orleans. This is the anniversary of the cession of Louisiana to the United States and her admission into the Federal Union. It is a day memorable in her history and one worthy of enthusiastic celebration. It will be an occasion for the people of Louisiana to manifest their appreciation of all the benefits and advantages which have sprung from the great events accomplished on this historic day, and to express their gratitude to the people of the State for the mechanical and agricultural industries and in the arts and sciences. On said day all places of public business will be closed, and I invite all military organizations and civil societies to aid and assist in the celebration and earnestly request the business men of New Orleans to close their places of business and to make the occasion a holiday one for enthusiastic rejoicing and pleasure. All visiting military organizations and representatives of foreign governments and civil associations from other sections and visitors are invited to participate."

ATLANTA, Ga., April 2.—Col E. P. Howell, managing editor of the Atlanta Constitution, who was appointed consul to Manchester a day or two since by President Cleveland, after carefully considering the matter, declined the appointment to-day. His interests are all here, and are too great for him to leave Atlanta. He feels that it would not be right to accept the place without living abroad.

SAVANNAH, Ga., April 2.—Being interviewed on the withdrawal of his nomination as minister to Russia, Gen. A. R. Lawton stated that he had received telegrams from eminent lawyers in Washington assuring him that the pardon granted him by President Johnson was complete, and was not annulled by his fourteenth amendment. Concerning his personal situation, Gen. Lawton said that while he would not be in Washington to take steps in the matter, he would visit to capital in the course of a few weeks on private business and would then have a consultation with President Cleveland and Secretary Bayard on the subject. Whether he is not yet in the final stage, Gen. Lawton says that it is the case he will acquiesce without a murmur, preferring to submit rather than to press any claims which he might have.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—In the Senate to-day the Vice President said: "Senators, I desire to express to you my obligations and thanks for the kindness and support I have received at your hands. The Senate stands adjourned, without day."

LOGAN, U. T., April 5.—In accordance with the published notice from the presidency of the Church, the general annual conference of the Mormon Church convened at the tabernacle here yesterday morning instead of at Salt Lake, which is the customary place. A number of the three first presidents of the Church were present. Apostle Richards presided, assisted by four other apostles. A number of leading bishops and prominent elders from Utah, Idaho and Colorado were present. There is a feeling of confidence that the present opposition will ultimately result for the good of the Church. The speakers conveyed this impression, and predicted the final deliverance of the Mormons from the present trials. They had nothing to say against those who are opposing the Church, but claimed that the opposition was the result of a misunderstanding. There was no intimation of revelations or anything of an unusual nature by the advanced conference.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The United States Consul at Sierra Leone, under date of the 21st of February last, has informed the State Department that the arrival at Sierra Leone of Dr. William Barclay, an American Baptist for Africa, together with Dr. Somers and Mr. Chateleine, on or about the 21st of January on their way to Liberia, where they will stop for a short time before proceeding to St. Paul de Loanda. There arrived, also, at Sierra Leone, on Feb. 19, another party of missionaries, forty in number, on their way to Loanda. They intend to proceed towards the interior of Africa in hopes of meeting a party starting from the eastern coast. The Consul expresses much anxiety for the fate of these people, sixteen of whom are killed, the two youngest being fifteen months and the others twenty-three months old.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 4.—Gen. Wolsey has forwarded to the War Office a report on the Khartoum expedition. The subject of the report is the results of the exposure to desert heat of the British troops stationed along the borders of the Sudan. The report states that the British troops in the Sudan are being disabled by the heat before the arrival of autumn.

The whole tone of this peculiar report, which was undoubtedly readily inspired by Gen. Wolsey himself, indicates that a decision having been prepared to witness an early withdrawal of the whole British force from the Sudan to Egypt, and a complete abandonment of the Nile-Khartoum expedition.

It is announced that Gen. Graham has been ordered by the government to at once open peace negotiations with the Sudan and Berber possessing the power to control the natives. It is stated that Gen. Graham has been instructed to secure such terms as will enable him to evacuate the country at once.

—God sometimes draws us to Him, and this is with love for Him, not that He may love us,—that He always does,—but to make us feel how He loves us.—Faber.

—The world cannot bury Christ. The earth is not deep enough for his tomb, the clouds are not wide enough for his winding sheet, the heavens could not contain him. He still lives in the church which burns unconsumed with his love; in the truth that reflects his image; in the hearts which burn as he talks with them by the way.—Edward Thompson.

I KNOW I LOVE THEE.

I know I love thee, blessed Lord,
For thou hast died for me;
I would believe thy loving word
That I thy love shall see.
And while I journey to the end
Of keep me hourly by hour;
And in thy love without defend
My soul from Satan's power.
And let it be thy only aim
Thy perfect will to do;
And in thy love do thou my strength
From day to day renew.
Then may I mount on eagle's wing,
Follow the pilgrim's way,
Thine in the light "eye hath not seen,"
And the perfect day.

Washington Letter.

Mr. Cleveland has now been at the helm for one month. His exceedingly industrious habits, and his accessibility to common as well as to common people, has been commended upon favorably everywhere. His inauguration he has made a hundred and seventy-four nominations to office. The Senate contained one hundred and fifty-three members, rejected two, and adjourned Thursday sine die, leaving thirteen unacted upon. The Senate spent its last hours in session, and various views are entertained by senators as to the result of Thursday's events, regarding the failure to confirm certain presidential appointments. The issue that arose was tenure of office under the civil service law. Republican senators holding that certain officers were not liable to removal, and a number of them insist that there is no policy of antagonism against the administration, and that the nominations will be confirmed when the Senate reconvenes. It is understood that commissions will be issued to all those whose nominations are not confirmed and that they shall once enter upon the duties of the offices for which they were named. Should the Senate fail to action these incumbents when it convenes next winter, they will be replaced by other appointees. The fourth of April was the first day of the new regime. To the President it brought the sum of $100. It costs a good deal to live in the White House; but in view of the personal simplicity that is to mark this administration, it is thought Mr. Cleveland will not be more than one-half his wages. It reminds me that some one said the other day how the President was paid. I mean from what source of the government and in what manner he receives his salary, either by check or in hard cash, most of the subordinates of Uncle Sam. The President is paid by the United States Treasurer's draft, issued on the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury. The draft is based on account audited by the First Auditor and First Controller of the Treasury. The record of the extra session now shows that, with respect to the holding, the policy of the new administration is conservative and moderate. Relatively, the changes have been few. There would have been quite as many had Mr. Blaine been elected. Of course many others followed; but the statistics presented, as well as the character of the selections, prove that Mr. Cleveland inclines towards conservatism.

The new officials, as a class, are men of conservative tendencies and are not identified with active machine politics. It is a common complaint that the "workers" have been left out, and one has only to refer to the files of newspapers of the dates following the fourth of March and read the columns of hopes and claims in the political gossip of the hour to see how much ground there is for these lamentations. In scarcely a single instance has a man who was "prominently mentioned," "well backed" or "strongly pushed" for a place got it. The most significant political incident of the week was the renomination of Mr. Pearson as postmaster at New York. This confounded politicians of both parties and temporarily calmed forth much indignation and excited language from the Democratic senators. The act probably meets with the approval of those elements in the voting population with which Mr. Cleveland was identified. The Senate confirmed Mr. Pearson without contest or division, even those voting for him who had been loudest in their denunciation of his appointment.

Owing to the critical condition of Gen. Grant, President Cleveland has postponed the reception to the public, which was to have been given this evening. The White House, where the dying man lived for eight years, could not appropriately be the scene of a reception or large gathering while his life hangs by so slight a thread. His approaching death is deeply felt in many households here, and all intended movements in official society wait on that inevitable event.

The size of the congregation at the now so-called "President's Church" on the last two Sunday mornings has demonstrated the fact that something besides a revival can fill every pew in the church and leave the vestibule full of eager faces. Many strangers were in attendance, and they all wanted the ushers to seat them near the President's pew. This kind of magnetism is very distasteful to a man of Mr. Cleveland's unostentatious ways, but he must pay the penalty of greatness in the people's own way during the next four years. Doubtless he realizes this fact, and is resigned.

APRIL 6, 1885. CORRESPONDENT.

Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society.

BY MRS. S. O. WELLES.

Mr. Editor: Last Tuesday, April 7, a delegation of six ladies from Meridian, Enterprise and Brandon waited in the Edward's House, in Jackson, for a train to take them to Raymond, to Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society. At night four more from Hazelhurst and Crystal Springs came. Finding it would be utterly impossible to go on to Raymond—much to our sorrow—we decided to make our way to the church in Jackson, elect officers and attend to all necessary business to keep the work advancing another year. There were thirteen delegates present.

Officers for the year were elected as follows: Miss Jennie Petty, president; Mrs. C. G. Andrews, vice-president, Jackson district; Mrs. Gordon, vice-president, Vicksburg district; Mrs. Daisy Price, vice-president, Meridian district; Mrs. Bettie Parker, vice-president, Brandon district; Mrs. E. D. Jones, vice-president, Brookhaven district; Miss Emma Norworthy, vice-president, Woodville district; Mrs. M. E. Denny, vice-president, Seashore district; Miss Annie E. Linfield, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. G. Welles, recording secretary; Mrs. Annie DeMoss, treasurer; Mrs. R. S. Woodward, auditor.

Enterprise was the place selected for holding the next meeting of the Conference Society.

The following resolutions were passed on extension of work:

Resolved, That district meetings be held wherever practicable, and that the vice-president notify auxiliaries in her district and request them to have a delegate present, and that she select two or more ladies to read essays and some brother to deliver an address on the occasion.

Resolved, That the vice-president write short articles for the New Orleans Advocate, telling how to organize auxiliaries and forcibly presenting the work to our people.

Resolved, That we do all in our power to extend the circulation of our Woman's Missionary Advocate.

Resolved, That the vice-president encourage auxiliaries in her district to exchange letters of greeting one with the other as often as possible.

MRS. DAISY PRICE,

MRS. FANNIE ALLEN,

MRS. BETTIE PARKER,

MRS. ANNIE LINFIELD, Committee.

The Committee on Finance reported.

As we see the necessity of the prompt attendance of the officers of our Conference Society, at least the secretaries and president, in order to make the meeting a success; therefore, be it

Resolved, That each auxiliary be requested to raise during the year not less than three dollars as a contingent fund to meet the expenses of these officers. (See section 8, page 82, of our last annual report.)

Resolved, That the money be taken from the Conference treasury to meet the expenses of these officers to and from this meeting. Should there not be sufficient money in treasury now they shall be reimbursed as soon as possible.

Resolved, To save the officers any embarrassment let the corresponding secretary notify the treasurer one month before the annual meeting of the amounts needed by each one to meet her traveling expenses and remit the same in due time.

MRS. WELLES,
MRS. C. G. ANDREWS,
MRS. BETTIE PARKER,
MRS. ANNIE LINFIELD,
MRS. E. D. JONES, Committee.

Mrs. C. G. Andrews offered the following:

Resolved, That the vice-president shall write articles for the New Orleans Advocate in the order that their respective districts are published in the Conference Minutes.

So great was the disappointment of all the delegates in not reaching Raymond that the society adopted the following:

Resolved, That we regret our inability to reach Raymond and return to them thanks for their cordial invitation to meet there.

MRS. ANNIE LINFIELD,
MRS. C. G. ANDREWS, Committee.

From Arcadia, La.

While in Vernon we organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, each organization having in it a goodly number of the missionary society are as follows: Mrs. Bettie Doremus, president; Mrs. Fannie Allen, first vice-president; Miss Carrie McDowell, second vice-president; Mrs. Anna Smith, recording secretary; Miss Lelia Frantum, corresponding secretary; Miss Lilla McDowell, treasurer.

The officers of the Vernon Woman's Christian Temperance Union are as follows: Mrs. Judge N. M. Smith, president; Mrs. J. E. Frantum, Presbyterian, vice-president; Mrs. M. V. Colon, Baptist, vice-president; Mrs. Hon. C. Ives, Methodist, vice-president; Mrs. Fannie Allen, recording secretary; Mrs. H. L. Jamieson, corresponding secretary; Miss Maude Smith, treasurer.

There is a great deal of work to be done by these organizations and we confidently expect grand results, for it would be hard to find anywhere more capable ladies than those who have joined these societies. May God abundantly bless their efforts for missions and temperance!

Bro. Parish we found to be still very sick, but with his Christian hope undimmed and his faith in his Savior firm as a rock. This true and tried soldier is suffering much in the body, but is sustained by the Spirit and the everlasting arms are around him in his trouble. Let his brethren in the ministry pray for his recovery, that he may again stand on the walls of Zion and call sinners to the cross.

APRIL 7, 1885.

A Note from Dr. Lambuth.

Mr. Editor: Allow me through your paper to acknowledge, with a heart full of sincere thanks and gratitude, the kind words and sentiments expressed in the action taken by my brethren at the last Mississippi Annual Conference in reference to myself. Let me assure them that, for these many years while engaged in preaching the gospel to the dying heathen around me in all my trials and difficulties, I have always felt that my brethren were praying for me, and this thought greatly strengthened and encouraged me. The prayers of God's servants have gone up as sweet incense before the mercy seat and God has blessed us even in this remote part of the earth. I hope, if my health permits, to continue my work here or in Japan. I wait the action of the Board in May. Bro. Royall and Dr. Dukes are with me now on the district. There are but few pupils in the college, and Bro. Royall felt he could do more effective work preaching the gospel everywhere among this people. He has gone around the district this week with Dr. Dukes in my stead. With these two young men to help us we shall do good work. They are in the right place and must succeed. We look for good results through the blessing of God.

War and rumors of war are still filling our daily papers. Since I last wrote you the French have come almost to our door. Ning Po, one hundred and fifty miles from us, is threatened. It is now blockaded and we have no communication with the missionaries there. Frenchmen are near our own port boarding all outward and inbound steamers searching for contraband goods, etc.

We have peace and quiet here, but we do not know how long it will last. Pray for us and let the whole church pray that peace may be restored to the people of this great nation. I am,

Your brother in Christ,

The Foundation and Corner.

In the second chapter of the First Epistle of Peter, our Lord Jesus Christ is called "a living stone, chosen of God and precious." Unbelieving men have, indeed, disallowed his claim, and rejected him; but the believing disciples have seen in him a Divine Saviour, have come to him, and are built together upon him—a spiritual dwelling place for God. For a God dwelt in Jesus Christ in his fulness, so does he also dwell in us who are built upon him. The relation of the church and each individual believer in the church, to Jesus Christ, is that of the edifice as a whole, and the individual stones in particular, to the foundation. We then, who are in Christ share in him the honor and glory that God has bestowed upon him. "Unto you, therefore, which believe he is precious," or, as the margin has it: "There is an honor." (1. Peter ii, 2.)

For this beautiful figure the apostle is indebted to Isaiah xxviii, 16. The prophet speaks of him as both foundation and corner-stone, while the apostle speaks of him only as the corner-stone; but, doubtless, he carries both truths in his mind, as it is impossible to have a corner-stone without a foundation from which it springs. These two designations of Christ give us a beautiful conception of what he is to us. The foundation-stone is that on which the building rests, while the corner-stone is that which rises or springs from the foundation, and lies at the corner of the two walls, and unites them, being that into which all the material of the building is knitted together and made strong. In modern architecture we see this ancient device retained, both in fact and by way of ornament.

It would be difficult for us to conceive of anything more comforting than this view of Christ. We are not alone permitted to build upon him, as our lightness, but we are to build into him as our life. Strongly and on the Lord, but strong in the Lord. There is not only that which he has done for us in the way of bringing us a righteousness on which we may rest, but there is also that which he is for us. He is the hope of our life and the strength of our life. The foundation makes sure our salvation; the corner-stone keeps from falling after having built on him. What ever doubts may assail us as to our perfect justification with God are met by a reference to the foundation upon which we rest—the ground of our peace. Whatever doubts may assail us as to our preservation in righteousness are met by a reference to him as the corner-stone into which we are built.

In this double character we have a Saviour in whom we believe, and in whom we live. He is both the object of our faith and the substance of our faith. We look back on his finished work, and know that we are justified; we build our lives daily into him who is ever present with us, and know that our labor is not in vain. Because he lives we live also. Therefore, the apostle says: "The life that I now live in the flesh, I live by faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."

As to the foundation, Isaiah tells us that "He is a tried stone," that is, when he appeared for us, taking his place under the law, and submitting himself to all the trials to which man was subjected at the beginning, he proved himself equal to every test. The human righteousness of Adam failed under trial. The divine human righteousness of Christ related every assault that was made upon it. He was tried by the law, and met its every demand, both toward God and man. He was assaulted by Satan, and warded off every attack, beating him at every point. He was touched with every feeling of our infirmity, and yet yielded stintly to none of them. He was tempted in all points, like as we are, and yet resisted successfully every temptation. When the curse of the law, due to sinners, was poured out upon him, he endured it, nor shrank from the cross on which he paid the dreadful penalty. He was numbered with transgressors, and was made a spectacle to men and angels; and yet, for our sakes, he despised the shame. He was delivered over to death, and yet he rose triumphant from the grave, having secured by this victory the keys of death and the under world. God having taken him back into heaven in our nature, in which he was tried, now sets him forth as the foundation upon which sinners may build. When Paul saw this tried foundation, he abandoned the shattered foundation of human righteousness, which he had zealously sought to repair, upon which he had hitherto been building, and hung it from him with disgust and contempt, and fled to the tried stone, and henceforth built thereon. He thereafter based all his teaching upon this sublime truth: "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, Jesus Christ;" and declares that he that builds thereon shall be saved. Over and again the Scriptures give us this assurance. What can a sinner want more? God has laid in Zion the foundation and corner-stone. He has bidden us to build thereon, giving us assurance that, so building, we shall never be confounded, but shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be moved.—The Independent.

A Chant from the Old Testament.

We sat, some nights ago, in a concert room, and listened to a quartette of female voices chant Ecclesiastes xii, 1-7. They were not "stars," but they had fairly good voices, and had sung much together, so that the general effect was what the composer of the music intended. The solemn strains of the old Hebrew poetry fell distinctly upon the mind, and, without stretch of imagination, sounded like a voice from the other world. The bold imagery, the solemn theme, the pathetic cadence at the last, seized hold of the soul, and drove off frivolity and recklessness. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," so spake "the preacher," the royal moralist and song and proverb maker of Jerusalem. We could not help feeling that these uncelebrated singers were doing a better religious and moral work than the notorious Henry Ward Beecher in his lecturing through the South. He has done his best, the best that a great orator and man of distinction can do, to sap in the young the reverence and deference for the whole Bible they have learned in the family and Sunday-school. His theory of inspiration they do not understand, nor his acceptance of atonement and conversion; but they understood his sneers and rattle aimed at the narratives of the Old Testament and his demagogical levity at the expense of sacred doctrines and characters. The singers, on the contrary, have simply chanted the words, deemed inspired by Christians in general, and have thrown them upon the public heart to speak for themselves. And we warrant they were heard; their majesty, simplicity, sad truth, to nature, their revelation of immortality, were attested by the hearts of men who felt no deep longing of their nature satisfied by any "gospel of dirt," or utterances of "the false prophet."

We once chanced upon a bitter, uninvited sentence of Voltaire aimed at the prophet Habakkuk. It surprised us. We could not comprehend what harm the ancient man had done, even if he were a mistaken enthusiast. We had always thought of his few short chapters as sublime and unique, with a grandeur that might be attractive even to the unbeliever and scoffer. But in truth the seed-germ of the gospel are in Habakkuk and the man who cursed Jesus would not allow the old prophet to go unscathed. The seer who wrote of God, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity," and proclaimed that "the just shall live by his faith," and sung that incomparable challenge of faith to imminent destruction, beginning, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom," and so verified by Charles Wesley in his hymn, "A way my unbelieving fear?" was worthy of cursing if Christ deserved vilification. So it seems to us the root of these things at Old Testament history and biography, these decryings of the sacred books which were all that existed up to the days of our Lord and his apostles, and are so reverently handled and quoted by them, is at the last analysis, in "another gospel which is not another," a new version, and a corrupt and powerless one, of the Gospel of Christ, which "is the power of God unto salvation." Men like Beecher and Robertson Smith and Toy, not to say Colenso and his ilk, may claim to love and glorify Christ, but we "stand in doubt" of them. We do not like their critical company, and prefer our old superstitions, if they call them such, concerning the Old Testament. And we do not believe them when they teach, as our neighbor of the Central Presbyterian phrased it, that "Christ knew less about the Old Testament than a Harvard professor of 1853." Sing on those digressive words of the preacher. Converted or backslidden, reclaimed or penitent, he was uttering the truth of God. Shout youth, "remember"—"remember thy Creator."

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, April 2, 1885, the Hon. E. L. Faucher, LL.D., vice-president, in the chair.

Religious services were conducted by Secretary McLean.

The sad announcement was made that since the last meeting of the Board two of the resident vice-presidents of the society, namely, Frederick S. Winston, Esq., and Charles Tracy, Esq., had been removed by death. The managers placed upon the records of the Board an expression of their sincere regard for their late associates, and of the great loss which the society has sustained in their decease.

Letters and reports were presented from most of the foreign agents of the society, giving interesting and, for the most part, encouraging accounts of work in their respective fields.

Grants of books were made for benevolent distribution, chiefly in the United States, of the aggregate value of about $8,300. Appropriations of funds were made for printing and circulating the Scriptures in foreign lands, to the amount of $109,048.55. This includes grants to the agencies of the society in Mexico, Brazil, Japan, and the Levant, and also to the American Board for its missions in Spain and Ceylon, to the Presbyterian Board for its Siam and Lodia missions; to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for its work in Germany and Switzerland; to the Russian Bible Society; to the Bible Society of France; and to the Waldensian Committee of Evangelization.

Two Bible societies were recognized as auxiliaries in Nebraska, one in Illinois and one in Colorado.

The total receipts for March were $76,578.21. The issues from the Bible House during the same period were 68,440 volumes.

THE PREVAILING ARGUMENT.—Prof. Henry Drummond, the author of "The Natural Law in the Spiritual World," has been very earnestly at work in the revival in the Edinburgh University. His addresses have been intensely evangelized, and have been wondrously powerful in their effects on the students. Says the London Christian:

One anecdote seemed to have touched them deeply. Substantially it was to this effect: Some years ago, in the university, there was a fine, mainly fellow, a medical student, a very Hercules in strength, but as gentle and lovable as he was strong. He was immensely popular, the captain of the football club, and not a cricket match was considered complete without him. He was a man of good intellectual gifts as well. He caught typhoid fever while attending the Royal Infirmary, and soon he lay dying in a private ward. One of the house physicians, an earnest Christian and successful soul winner, spoke to him about God and eternity. The dear fellow listened, became anxious, and eagerly heard the story of redeeming love.

"Will you give yourself to Jesus?" asked the doctor.

He did not answer for a space, and then earnestly regarding the man of God he said, "But don't you think it would be awful mean just to make it up now, at my last gasp, with One I have rejected all my life?"

"Yes, it would be mean; but, dear fellow, it would be far meaner not to do it. He wants you to do it now, for he has made you willing, and it would be doubly mean to reject a love that is pursuing you even to death."

The dying man saw the point, and apprehending the excess of that exceeding love he launched his soul into the ocean of it.—The Presbyterian.

—Without a rich heart, wealth is an ugly beggar.—Emerson.

—The generous never enjoy their possessions so much as when others are made partakers of them.—Sir W. Jones.

—For want of self-examination many are like travelers skilled in other countries but ignorant of their own.

—In evil company, in corrupt places, it is hard to live unspotted from the world.—Candray.

Christian Advocate.

ORIGIN OF THE LUTHERAN, METHODIST AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE OF
THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL
CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS. REV. J. T. SAWYER.
REV. W. L. O. HENRICHT.

THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 1885.

The discussion about ministers' sons being bad suggests to the Christian Intelligencer the fact, that "the son of a Baptist minister very courteously bowed himself out of the White House on Wednesday, the fourth of March, and howed the son of a Presbyterian minister in. The ministers' sons behave in the most decorous and seemly manner." So they are not all bad, fifty millions Americans being the judge.

We publish in another column an account of the annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary meeting. On account of the terrible freshet sweeping away bridges and obstructing railroad travel, the session was held at Jackson instead of Raymond. The reports are certainly very gratifying. Over $1000 was raised last year, and twelve new auxiliaries were organized.

At this writing (Monday) active preparations for war between England and Russia are being pushed forward with tremendous vigor. While negotiations are pending, looking to a peaceful settlement of the Afghan controversy, each government is mobilizing her forces as though hostilities were imminent and inevitable. If the clash of arms is heard, we may expect a struggle of the giants. Russia is powerful, has an immense population, and many of them unemployed, a great army, but poor foreign credit, and for years has fixed her hungry eyes upon Constantinople. On the other hand, England has a well-disciplined army, the greatest navy of the world, an exhaustless credit and, as incentive to desperate struggle, her vast interests in India are at stake. If the issue is joined, there is no prophesying whereunto it will lead. All Europe will possibly become involved.

It is stated that the Ohio Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, reports by districts an aggregate of over 10,000 conversions. Commenting on this gratifying report, the Western Christian Advocate says: "The antecedents to these glorious results were a live, salvation, Conference camp-meeting in August, a very spiritual Conference session in October at Circleville, and the recognition and utilization of special evangelists. Besides these, the Conference furnished a large corps of pastoral evangelists in its own ranks."

In all our towns and cities now is as opportune a time as any for special services. Do not wait for the heat of summer with its physical lethargy and mental weariness. When the brain is active and the step is elastic the Spirit may find readiest entrance and accomplish the mightiest results. Waiting for leisure times and freedom from business cares is without scriptural warrant. Elisha heard the prophetic call while ploughing in the field, and every apostle left the active work of life to follow the Lord. Just now let us push the battle to the gates. The Lord is calling for help against the mighty.

The secular papers over the country are taking Rev. Sam Jones in hand. Their criticisms evidence a dense ignorance of spiritual things, and are, therefore, an additional appeal for apostolic zeal and faith in the pulpit. With the growth of imperious materialism—a subordination of everything to immediate monied gain—there is a corresponding depreciation of Christianity as a personal experience and of the preaching that emphasizes its infinite importance. The secular press is largely dominated by this spirit. What the Methodist Times (London), therefore, has to say of the needs of that great metropolis is the crying want of our country. It says: "The terrible destitution of London demands neither a business man nor a cautious man, but a man with a touch of Gen. Gordon in him—a man, in brief, who is really willing, if necessary, to die for Christ. The devil can not be dislodged from the London slums except by men almost as much beside themselves as the Apostle Paul." Such men in all our pulpits will see the triumph of the Lord over every opposition. Whatever may be said of his methods and some of his utterances, the spirit and power of Sam Jones needs to be enthroned in all our hearts.

"The Use of the Banded Knee."

This editor preached to a colored congregation recently, as he frequently does, and after the sermon one of the brethren offered a prayer. It was full of unction and abounded in striking and suggestive passages. Rendering thanks to God for many blessings vouchsafed to us, he concluded the list by saying, "And we thank thee, gracious Father, that there is still left to us the use of the banded knee." Right there we interjected a hearty "Amen!" And ever since the expression has recurred with every quiet meditative hour.

"The use of the banded knee!" And what use do we make of it? For upon that depends its virtue and value. It is not the mere bending of the knee, but the object before which and for which it is banded, that reveals and determines character. The use made of the banded knee, therefore, is the surest test of the soul. A man is known and measured by the object of his adoration—that unto which he kneels. Shakespeare vividly describes a certain class as those who

"Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift may follow fawning."

They flatter with "candied tongue" for sordid gain and worship only the god of worldly success. To secure his favor they are willing to become a mere "pipe for Fortune's finger to sound what stop she pleases." No more realistic picture could be thrown, upon canvass—no more accurate delineation of a numerous and well-known generation. Of the first Napoleon it has been said that "he worshiped no god but ambition"—unto no other divinity did he bend the knee. And his entire career of marvelous experiences—brilliant victories and humiliating defeats—sustained the justice of the characterization. He typed a multitude—was the conspicuous figure of an immense concourse. And so we might enumerate this different and diverse classes of human society; but our purpose is to consider the Christian's relation to "the banded knee."

There is power in the banded knee. In their last analysis all spiritual forces and resources must be submitted to the knee test. It is the Christian's mightiest weapon for both defensive and offensive warfare. When everything else fails it succeeds. After learning and logic, eloquence and exhortation, persuasion and protestation, have proved vain and fruitless, "the banded knee" has achieved an easy and signal victory. There are some enemies that can only be expelled by this means. All else may be resisted, but it is invincible. The words of Cowper have been verified in every humble experience:

"And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

This is the guardian and guide of the spiritual life. Easily besetting sins will perpetually menace and harass the Christian's path until he learns the use of the banded knee. By it he achieves a mastery over himself that emancipates him from the debasing servitude of sinful appetite. It also guarantees power in Christian work. We labor in vain in the Lord if we fail to use this banded knee. But when it is rightly and frequently used every Christian can say with the great apostle, "When I am weak, then am I strong." And he becomes mighty to this pulling down of strongholds. It is said of John Fletcher, the saintly vicar of Madelay, that he lingered on his knees in the vestry and would never enter the pulpit until conscious of the Spirit's presence and power. One of the early American Methodist Bishops, whose ministry was a perpetual spiritual triumph, so constantly used the banded knee that the flesh thereon became hard and rough. And that same diligent exercise of the hinges of the knees will make every pulpit a mount of transfiguration and every minister an apostolic chieftain.

There is comfort in the banded knee. Better than any words of sympathizing friends—better than any healing balm of earthly faith or philosophy—is the sweet benediction of the banded knee. How it calms the surging sea of passion and soothes the tried and troubled spirit! It weilds a wand that the winds and the waves of sorrow ever obey. No day can be all dark and dismal if the closet is visited and the prayer of faith is offered. We once heard a delightful testimony in an experience meeting from one of the most cultivated and elegant Christian women. In former times she had great wealth, but was then poor, working hard, supporting herself at the point of a cambric needle. But she said, "This is one of the sweetest, happiest days of my long and checkered life," and, with that expression, her features shone with an unearthly lustre and beauty. Such a testimony was possible because she had learned the use of the banded knee.

But the banded knee needs use. It is powerless and comfortless without exercise. The hinges lose their suppleness if neglected. So it will profit little to talk of prayer as a duty and virtue, unless we practice it. The great deliberation with which some respond to the call of prayer suggests stiffness from non-use. First among Christian accomplishments, therefore, let us enthroned the use of the banded knee.

At Half-Mast.

Our excellent confrere of the Western Christian Advocate must have had a slight return of the old war spirit the other day. The Hon. Jacob Thompson, Secretary of the Interior in President Buchanan's Cabinet, died, and, according to custom, Secretary Lamar ordered that the Interior Department be closed for one day and the flag of the United States be displayed at half-mast. That called forth the following from our usually quite fraternal confrere: The flag of the United States at half-mast because Jacob Thompson is dead is one of the marvels of history. It is probable, however, that the nation which was strong enough to survive his death, even though for the moment the government does assume the attitude of an official mourner at his grave. The people can stand it if the administration can. For the sake of harmony and peace, we are sincerely sorry that this thing was done.

Now, it so happened that about the time our brother was penning the above Gen. Grant, from his sick-chamber, sent out this loving message to the American people: "I desire the good will of all, whether heretofore friends or not." And about this bright spring-time the graves of soldiers who fell on both sides of the ever-to-be-lamented conflict are being decorated with flowers. Southern hands garland the graves of Union soldiers, while Northern flowers deck the resting-places of the boys in gray. The Interior Department paid respect to the memory of an ex-Secretary, and not Jacob Thompson, an ex-Confederate. Really, our brother must have been a little out of health or was dreaming over the days from 1861-65. The folly of such criticism is well answered by Secretary Lamar in the following interview which we find in the New York Herald:

I have no apology to make for my action in this matter. The possible criticism referred to could never have suggested themselves to my mind. Mr. Jacob Thompson was Secretary of the Interior four years. His successors and my predecessors thought his portrait worthy of a most conspicuous place in the office of the Secretary, among these many Republicans who have filled this office. If they regarded his memory worthy of such honor, I could not do otherwise than further remember the office he once filled and do honor to his memory exactly as has been the custom of the department whenever an ex-Secretary of the Interior has died. I never heard of an exception being made, and know of no reason why one should have been made by me. On the subject of honoring the dead I have very pronounced views, and I recall the adverse criticism which followed my eulogy on Senator Sumner. I have not changed my views, as I said in the beginning. If those who have preceded me found the portrait of the late Secretary worthy of their company, it was eminently proper that the usual respect for the memory of the deceased should be faithfully observed by this department. The duty of so ordering is not one requiring further explanation.

Feeding Horses with Young Men.

It isn't often we have opportunity to commend the pulpit or platform utterances of Henry Ward Beecher; but this entitles him to a good mark. The scene occurred in Plymouth Church, and is thus reported by an exchange. Mr. Beecher said:

"I don't think there's any harm in horse racing, the horses, but to the men there is a great deal. It is urged by some people that the authorities should not stand in the way of men who are developing forces. But I think it poor economy to feed horses with young men. All that makes it proper to open public schools or churches, and to maintain morality, says that these gambling dens in New York and Brooklyn, these pools on race tracks, now the worst form of gambling, are to be condemned by public sentiment, and no false appeals to reason or magnanimity should be permitted to weigh with us a moment. They are bad, and are encouraged by men who are not good, and the consequences are very mischievous. Although, abstractly, there is no more harm in running one horse against another than in running one boy against another, yet as an institution we are warned by experience that, unless very carefully guarded, race improve the breed of horses by deteriorating the breed of men."

At this juncture a man occupying a seat in the gallery shouted, "That isn't true." The people turned their heads to look at him in amazement. "What isn't true?" asked Mr. Beecher in a stern voice, but the author of the contradiction shrank from making himself known to the audience, and remained silent. Mr. Beecher stamped his foot and added emphatically:

"What I said is true; and I repeat it with thundering emphasis. (Loud applause.) I have sympathy with everything that enlarges the liberty of a man; but liberty should be so administered that it should not damn the ignorant and lowly, but it should inspire them and lift them up. That doctrine I shall teach to the end of my life. (Applause.) I do not like applause in church, but now and then I think a demonstration is permissible, and this is one of the occasions."

Our New Orleans Churches.

For some weeks past—there has been a growing spiritual interest in our city churches. It was first awakened in the preachers' meeting, and manifested itself in more direct, powerful, prayerful preaching.

CARONDEL STREET.

Dr. Carter is preaching to immense congregations an earnest gospel with marked eloquence and power. That spacious old temple is filled every Sabbath, and the weekly prayer meetings show an increased attendance. The indications are that the revival spirit will soon flame forth and large gatherings be witnessed.

FELICITY STREET.

Rev. S. Halsay Werlein, the gifted young pastor, is devoting himself with great zeal to his pulpit and pastoral work. So marked were the revival indications last week that services were held every day. Fourteen have been converted, and there were five accessions on the Sabbath. There will be preaching every night this week.

ST. CHARLES AVENUE.

Rev. Beverly Carradine, the pastor, whose zeal seems to know no flagging, is greatly encouraged. His regular congregations have increased, and the special daily meetings have resulted most graciously. During most of last week Dr. R. B. Crawford, of Mobile, rendered him timely assistance. There have been eight conversions, and the meetings continue. On last Sabbath that congregation contributed $170 for the Bishop Parker Monument.

LOUISIANA AVENUE.

This church, henceforth to be known as the "Parker Memorial Church," is prospering under the pastorate of Rev. B. F. White. He has good congregations, spiritual prayer meetings and indications of a pre-eminently blessed. The new church building is receiving much of his attention.

MOREAU STREET.

This church is reported by Bro. Kimball himself in another column. He is laboring diligently, and has encouraging tokens of success. That old church promises to revive and commence anew her history. There have been fourteen accessions recently.

ALOIERS.

This church, across the river, in charge of Rev. J. L. Wright, is located in a discouraging field for Protestantism, and the godly pastor has felt that he was leading a forlorn hope. But on last Monday morning he made a cheerful report, and expects to see a brighter day.

OUR GERMAN CHURCHES.

Rev. Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens, the presiding elder of our German district, is also an editor and a man of all work. He is an able preacher, a wise counsellor, and wholly consecrated to his Divine employ. He is assisted by three faithful, laborious preachers, and the churches at Dryades, Craps and Soraparu streets are reported as enjoying prosperity. From the weekly statements of the pastors we judge the outlook of our German work is especially cheering.

Not since our acquaintance with New Orleans have we seen such a positive and united desire among the preachers for a gracious and general revival. Let all the churches pray for us. If this stronghold of Romanism and sin could be taken for Christ and a pure gospel, the whole land would rejoice with an exceeding great joy.

We clip the following from the columns of the Western Christian Advocate, with this statement, that the Gospel in All Lands is by far the best missionary periodical of our acquaintance:

The Missionary Board at New York has entered into an agreement with Rev. Eugene R. Smith, editor of The Gospel in All Lands, The Missionary World, and The Little Missionary, by which those periodicals are to be published in the interest of the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The society assumes no financial responsibility; but has, through a committee, supervision of the editorial management of the papers. The announcement of terms to subscribers will be made soon. Mr. Smith is of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a chaplain in the Confederate army. It is said to be his intention to join the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that he is in hearty sympathy with all its work. His friends claim for him rare ability as an editor of missionary publications.

Canada Methodism.

We have watched with special interest the current history of Methodism in Canada, especially since the union of four separate bodies effected several years ago. And it gives us pleasure to note an enlargement in every direction. They may have been here and there some slight local irritations in the process of adjustment and assimilation, but they have not affected the general even, peaceful flow of the union spirit. Now the strong united body seems to move as harmoniously forward as if used to its present ecclesiastical machinery for scores of years. Our brethren in the far north are especially active and liberal in mission work, and are yearly demonstrating their claim to the apostolic Wesleyan succession. They have some grand men, strong in body, sturdy in faith and masterful in leadership, worthy successors of Freeborn Garretson, who planted the gospel in Nova Scotia. A Canada correspondent of the Methodist Times writes as follows:

The season has been favorable for special and evangelistic services in the churches. In the agricultural districts labor is not in such demand in winter, and mechanics of all kinds are generally at liberty, or are on short time, so that they can attend religious duties much more readily than at any other season. I am glad to say that there are some extensive revivals going on in various parts of our land. In some instances special evangelists are being employed; but, for the most part, the work is carried on by pastors themselves and their people. A few have organized revival bands, who go where their services may be required and co-operate with the minister in charge. One of our Conferences has a special evangelist. In another Conference two brethren asked to be left at liberty to labor as evangelists. All those brethren, I believe, have had more calls than they could respond to, and their labors have been crowned with success. It strikes your correspondent that the number of such agents might be increased to great advantage. Your readers will be glad to learn that the Methodist Union works very satisfactorily. It was not to be expected that such a gigantic movement could be effected without there being some friction; but the marvel is that there is so little of this. So far as I can ascertain, the greatest difficulty has arisen respecting church property. In certain places there were more churches than were needed. There were heavy debts resting on some of these edifices. All were desirous to retain the churches to which they were attached. It was almost impossible to get an amicable settlement. Those disappointed became disputants, and in some instances left Methodism. The churches not required had to be sold, and such as were in debt could not in some instances be disposed of to meet the claims of their liabilities; hence the trustees were placed in unenviable positions. It has been ascertained that about $60,000 or, at least, £12,000 sterling will be required to save church and personal property from seizure by the sheriff. An attempt is now being made to secure this amount by a conventional effort. The future must decide the success. The missionary cause is always popular in Methodism, and £200,000 is asked for during the current year. It will require a vigorous effort to reach this amount. The temperance cause is progressing most wonderfully. The Scott Act—which is local prohibition—has been carried in 47 cities and counties. Other counties will vote on the subject by the time this letter reaches you.

"Golden Pulpits—Wooden Preachers." Someone more than a hundred years ago said of the church before Constantine that it had wooden pulpits and golden preachers, but after that it had golden pulpits and wooden preachers. Perhaps the contrast is too strongly drawn, being more a fine verbal antithesis than one of fact. But there is doubtless in history foundation for the statement. Not that, intellectually, men degenerated, nor, perhaps, that their discourses had less morality or esthetic beauty. No doubt as to systematic arrangement, rhetorical finish and even orthodoxy they were superior. Yet in spite of this and more that might be said the preacher was not the man of power, that he was before.

In the development of secular governments the same fact holds. Men who project and achieve revolutions are more manly than those who succeed to the control of affairs. As the machinery of government is perfected, there is less demand for men who do their own thinking and a greater demand for those who do machine work. The owner of the machine does not want talent in mechanics, but muscle and train-oil. Thus it came to pass in the church after it had the patronage of the empire. It was not then inquired what the Holy Ghost wanted, but what suited the Emperor. Very soon the incumbent of an important church learned that, if he wished to retain position, he must preach a limited law and, consequently, a partial gospel.

Not only so; but success itself had brought a misfortune or, at least, produced a dilemma which was most difficult, viz: The thunder which had been hurled against bad men in power could not now be used unless upon their own allies. No doubt there were bad and ambitious men who espoused Christianity not for love of the lowly Nazarene, but through hate of the ruling power at Rome, and in the hope that the vigorous gratitude of the oppressed faithful would reward them. These men knew well how to come to the front, and were too prudent to doff the mask at once—perhaps never did. It is possible that some whom the church canonized are of this class. Gibbon has been much vituperated for this insinuation, which may with him have been a sneer, but still a probable truth. I see no harm in admitting it. The evident application is not to the corruption of Christianity, but of human nature.

But more than either or both of the foregoing was the rest and leisure granted to the preacher. This ploughshare rests between Sundays. The care of the preacher should be daily. Perhaps Monday ought to be a day of rest. A preacher ought to have Sabbath. But "blue Monday" is a Sabbath—especially if it be in an office with the smell of well-used pipes, and with the marks of the which lays no valid claim to angelic food. Nor is it the "sating down" of the fine thoughts or edicts of Sunday's inspirations. But granting that the preacher should rest, it should not be in order that his spiritual or mental muscles should soften, but merely recover tone. He who worked yesterday and slept last night ought to feel stronger to-day, but he who works only one day in the week will on the next day be the tired man.

The salvation of souls becomes a compelling power only in the heart of him who feels a direct interest in the soul to be saved. A member of our own family moves us much more than a neighbor, and a neighbor more than a stranger. Rome was Christian. A few generations of barbarians might take their chances in heathen darkness till the empire supplied itself with fine churches, organs, sculpture, parlor libraries, colleges, and the like. It became the great and wealthy empire to have the same simple earnest preachers. Times were changed. Much less was it becoming to devote nothing to the improvement of places of worship. The people who had had so many fine heathen temples ought not to have less imposing structures or ritual for the worship of Christ. Eschewed working with soft clothing on muscles soon made soft heads. Sedulity made men blind to the wants, miseries and destinies of the world. The church became an establishment, and office was sought to the church not to evangelize the world, but to earn a livelihood. Men who have no higher idea of life as going to be dummies as soon as they have reached their ideal. The least of a bread riot becomes a quiet citizen if fed regularly on oysters and champagne. The difference between the hero and the hog is no greater than that between the man whose burden is men's salvation and him who seeks only man's praise or money. So that, while outward appearances were very little changed, there was an utter perversion of the motives of men. One had all the force and unction of the Divine Spirit; the other all the inertia and beetle-like stolidity of those creatures that know no difference between life and existence.

Clarksdale Revival.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a series of meetings at Clarksdale, Miss., which resulted in quite a number of conversions and four accessions to the church. We were assisted six days by the intimate J. A. Bowen, of Kosciusko, to whom we have no more successful revivalist in our church, unless he be found in the person of Sam P. Jones. The good people here have been laboring for years without seeing fruit of their labors, and for more than two years Bro. Dorman, the pastor, has been working, hoping and praying, and now rejoice that these good people in the result of their labors.

We were assisted near the close the meetings by Bro. Standfield, Greenville, who came in the nick of time with his logical sermons and many advantages of the Christian religion. We have had a good thing—the first revival which has been here for years. Clarksdale is a growing town in one of the finest communities in the State. The preaching of the district are all at their pressing the battle for victory, and success will come.

Come up, Mr. Editor, and see. Come to our District Conference, which is to convene on Thursday night before the first Sunday in June.

Yours fraternally,
J. W. HONOLD.

APRIL 8, 1885.

Mrs. Bishop Ames makes her home with her daughter in Austin, Texas.

Thomas Jefferson's birthday was celebrated at the University of Virginia on Monday last, April 13.

Rev. G. F. Thompson preached at Moreau Street last Sunday morning, and had a real camp-meeting time.

The last Mexican Messenger contains a good portrait of Bishop Weaver, and the proceedings of the Mexican Conference.

Queen Victoria made a gift of $25 toward the cost of a new Wesleyan Sunday-school which is shortly to be erected at East Cotes.

The Methodist ministers of Cork district have arranged to receive their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Wales when in Cork.

Mrs. Sallie L. Reid, widow of the late Rev. Dr. N. F. Reid, of the North Carolina Conference, died at her home in Wentworth, N. C., April 1. She left a good name and a precious memory.

Rev. S. P. Wright, of the North-West Texas Conference, is afflicted with mental derangement and has been carried to Austin for treatment. What a great sorrow, that his strong mind should suffer an eclipse!

Dr. W. M. Lertwich reports to the Nashville Advocate the wonderful work of grace in progress in Tulip Street. In two weeks there have been 84 conversions and seventy accessions to the church.

There has been a great revival at Clarksville, Tenn., under the pastorate of Rev. T. L. Moody. Up to last reports there had been 70 conversions and 70 additions to the church.

Our old friend, Dr. W. H. Leith, now of the Holston Conference, and stationed at Athens, Tenn., is in the city, and, of course, called at this office. His face is as open and sunny as ever, and there has been no loss of avoidpols up in the mountains.

Mr. Cyrus W. Field, after fifty years of active business labor, has retired to a quiet, private life. His has been a career of remarkable success. He will go down to history as the hero of the first Atlantic cable enterprise.

Rev. T. A. S. Adams, President of Centenary College, will deliver the baccalaureate address at Mansfield Female College, June 10, 1885.

District Attorney Wycliffe, at Alexandria, La., last week announced that the present term of the court had a very short criminal record, and he attributed it to the good effects of prohibition. Of course, and other law officers bear the same testimony.

To Rev. J. H. Scruggs, of Columbus, Miss.; Rev. S. C. Stone and wife, of Hope, Ark.; Rev. E. R. Shapard, of Austin, Tex.; and Revs. W. L. O. Hunnicutt, D. W. Dillehay, H. P. Lewis, N. B. Young, J. A. Ellis and W. W. Hopper, of the Mississippi Conference, the editor is indebted for remembering these Crescent City Methodist headquarters.

Henry M. Stanley, the great African explorer, expects to visit the United States the latter part of this month. He will doubtless visit New Orleans, his boyhood's home, and from which he enlisted in the army. It will possibly be news to many readers, that he received the adopted name of Stanley in this city. Until ten years of age he was an inmate in a Welsh orphan home.

A note from Sister Parker informs us that her husband, Rev. J. A. Parker, of Bastrop, La., has been dangerously ill. For three or four days friends and physicians quite despaired of his life. At this writing, however, he is convalescing with prospects of speedy restoration to wonted health. And for which many grateful praises will be offered our heavenly Father. The note from his pen in this issue was written before his illness.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, of the Presbyterian Church, was held in New York City on the 8th instant. The reports showed that during the year the board received from all sources $43,219, and paid out for missionary work $41,305. About forty missionaries have been supported in Japan, China, Siam, Persia, India and Syria. Schoolhouses, missions and other Christian institutions have been erected in all these places, resulting in the conversion of hundreds of heathen women.

Rev. J. A. Bowen and wife, and Rev. E. H. Moon, of the North Mississippi Conference; Rev. Bro. Crow, of the North Alabama Conference; Rev. Dr. R. B. Crawford, of the Alabama Conference; Rev. J. W. McLaurin, of the Mississippi Conference; and Rev. Dr. J. J. Grace, Rev. F. G. Houghton and Rev. J. F. Scurlock, of the Louisiana Conference, have called at the Advocate's office since our last issue, and all found a Methodist welcome.

Hon. T. D. Elte, of Nashville, a member of the Book Committee, and an earnest, liberal Methodist, made us a delightful call this week. He reports all Nashville astir at the prospect of having a visit from Rev. Sam Jones.

The revival conducted by Rev. Sam Jones at Knoxville was remarkable, in results. One hundred and fifty were converted one day. On Sabbath, after a week's labor, the papers report that five hundred were received into the several churches participating in the meeting.

Rev. J. W. Rush, our excellent and genial confrere of the Alabama Christian Advocate, honored our sanctum with an appreciative visit on Tuesday. He is taking in the Exposition with some members of his family. It was a real pleasure to meet our journalistic co-laborer, but his stay was provokingly short.

Rev. Dr. William R. Williams, one of the most distinguished Baptist ministers in the United States, died in New York City, April 1. He was a great scholar and author, and a preacher of wonderful power and popularity. He had been pastor of one church more than fifty years.

Rev. Dr. A. S. Andrews, President of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., expects to publish a volume of the sermons and addresses of his son-in-law, the late Rev. R. T. Nabors. He was a brilliant young man, a model preacher, and a loveable Christian. From the large number of carefully written manuscripts left, no doubt a valuable volume can be made.

We are sorry to learn that the parsonage at Canton, Miss., was entered by a burglar recently and our friend, Rev. H. R. Singleton, bereaved of his suit of clothes and other valuables. It was on Sunday night after a hard day's work for the pastor. The city paper, the American Citizen, says, "If the thief is ever caught, it will be 'a dark day' for him if he is tried before a jury of Methodists."

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sunday-School Union was celebrated at Carondelet Street Church on last Sunday afternoon. The house was crowded as usual, and the exercises were appropriate and creditable. In the absence of the veteran president, Bro. W. H. Foster, Bro. T. J. Carver occupied the chair and conducted the proceedings. The songs, speeches and recitations by the young people were well rendered and filled up an enjoyable hour.

The preachers' meeting on Monday was largely attended—every pastor being present and the two presiding elders. Rev. Dr. W. H. Leith, Dr. F. M. Grace, Rev. Lewis A. Reed, Rev. J. F. Scurlock, Rev. C. F. Stivers and Prof. Thannessen, of Houston, Texas, were present as visitors. In addition to the reports of pastors, which were unusually gratifying, Dr. Leith talked of Holston Methodism, and its progress especially in church and parsonage building and the work of education; Dr. Grace represented Mansfield Female College; Bro. Reed talked of his pastorate and personal experience, and Prof. Thannessen reported our German work in Texas. It was a good religious meeting.

A Card of Thanks.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space for a word of thanks. Before writing to the publishers about my financial troubles about it to the Lord in prayer, feeling confident that, if he wished me to have it, he would open the way or provide the means in his own way. I left it all with him, and, thank God! my prayer is answered; but not in the way I expected, but in his own way by influencing a kind stranger in my behalf. "Blessed is he who considereth the poor." I desire to return my grateful thanks to Peter James, Esq., for sending me the Advocate for a year. May this, with his many deeds of kindness already "cast upon the waters," be recompensed to him a hundred-fold in heaven, is the prayer of a grateful invalid.

HENRIETTA V. ROOKES.

APRIL 8, 1885.

Meridian, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: I have just completed my first quarter in this new field, my first quarterly Conference having been held April 10. A few of the items reported to the Quarterly Conference may be of interest to your readers: Number of accessions to the church, 50; subscriptions for a new church edifice, $7,000. Besides this we have indefinite promises which will probably aggregate $500. We expect to build about a $10,000 church, and we hope to have the Sunday-school room ready for use by the time our Annual Conference meets here in December, next. It is possible also that we may move the old church down to West End, and start a mission enterprise there. Our Sunday-school is flourishing, and our prayer meeting is growing in interest and attendance. We thank God and take courage.

W. C. BEACK.

New Orleans District Conference.

The New Orleans District Conference met at Felicity Street Church, Thursday, April 9. Bishop Kenner presided, and Rev. J. T. Harrison was elected secretary. All the pastors of the district were present except one; but the attendance of laymen was quite small. The Bishop conducted the business in his usual thorough and searching manner. Dr. F. M. Grace, president of Mansfield Female College, was present and represented the institution he has in charge as in a good condition, with prospects of large prosperity in the near future. Bro. Carver represented the Advocate, and in a very earnest speech urged its increased circulation in the city. Bro. E. P. Mackie made report for the Seashore Camp Meeting Association, which was altogether cheerful. The association is relieved of financial embarrassment, and will make ample provision for a grand meeting this year. The next District Conference will be held at Carondelet Street.

The following delegates to the District Conference were elected: W. H. Foster, B. O. L. Rayne, W. H. N. Magruder, T. J. Carver. Alternates: W. B. Thompson, J. D. Nettles.

The following trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground were elected: W. H. Foster, B. O. L. Rayne, J. H. Campman, E. P. Mackie, Thomas J. Carver, J. H. Keller, L. T. Belt, H. Jamieson.

Louisiana Conference Minutes—Correction.

The minutes report no missionary money from Minden except $23.10, reported in statistics, from the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. There ought to have been over one hundred dollars reported by the treasurer.

It was agreed, and Bro. Carriline so announced it, that donations might be directed to the credit of Minden, and that the "hat collection" should be so reported. This last amounted to over eighty dollars, and besides that Capt. Webb, Bro. Warren, and others, directed their donations that way. This oversight by the officers of the Board of Missions leaves a congregation without credit for a very noble deed—the payment of more than their assessment to the cause of missions.

The littleness of the report for pastor is the result of some peculiar views of the stewards (for which they thought they had good reasons), following which they determined not to make a final collection till the close of Conference year. After Conference adjourned they paid up in full, at Minden, the allowance for the preacher in charge.

J. A. PARKER.

The Baltimore Conference very cordially endorsed the Paine Institute in a stirring report, and passed unanimously the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Bishop be requested to designate a member of the Conference, who shall be submitted to the trustees of Paine Institute for their confirmation, to represent the Baltimore Conference on the Board of Trustees.

Resolved, That our preachers be requested to bring the claims of Paine Institute to the attention of our people, and to give the people an opportunity to make contributions for its benefit.

Moreau Street Church.

MR. EDITOR: I am pleased to let the brethren and friends of our church know what we are doing in this part of our city for the cause of Christ.

Our people are encouraged, and are taking a deeper interest than at any time since we have been among them. We have added eleven to our church within the last month, and hope for more soon, upon whom the Spirit is working. Our altar for several nights has contained penitents seeking Christ for pardoning love.

The congregation is gradually growing larger, and now is over twice as large as it was six months ago. We have a goodly band of ladies whom we will never forget for their kindness to us. They gave us a most severe, yet pleasant "pounding" a few evenings ago, in strokes of love, long to be remembered. They have made our burden lighter, with precious contents for food, and bless these dear people in their efforts to make Christ's discipline comfortable. I must acknowledge the efficient service rendered by Dr. Walker and Bro. Thompson with many thanks.

HORACE KIMBALL.

MR. EDITOR: The revival at this place continues. Perhaps one hundred conversions to date. Fifty additions to Wood Street Church, and more to come. Most of the converts are well advanced in life. Bro. J. A. Bowen has been with me two weeks. He won all hearts and did good work for the Master. Bro. Bowen is the Sam Jones of the North Mississippi Conference. After listening to Bro. Ritchey nearly two weeks, the people said, "We had no idea that he was such a big preacher." He is one of our best. Bro. Thames, the good, the faithful presiding elder of the district, has worked well in the meeting. I am also indebted to Bro. Malloy for good service. And now last, but not least (in height) is Bro. Freeman. Happy and well balanced, he is a whole team. Pray that this good work may continue.

Truly yours,
JOHN W. PRICE,
WATER VALLEY, MISS., April 5, 1885.

Will the presiding elders of Cobin-bus, Winona, Grenada, Smith, Greenville and Holly Springs Districts, North Mississippi Conference, please send me at once, the apportionments to the various charges of their districts, for foreign and domestic missions. Please do this at once, brethren, and you will confer a great favor on your brother.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. H. ADAMS, REV. J. T. SAWYER, REV. W. L. O. HUBBARD.

THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1885.

The Board of Church Extension will meet in the city of Louisville to-day.

Just now brethren can do much for our Zion by securing the renewal of every old subscriber to the ADVOCATE and opening new doors for us.

The old camp fires of Methodism are ablaze in many sections. Let every minister be aflame with zeal until the whole church shall see a Pentecost.

The following from Mr. Spurgeon has a keen edge and, as an exchange suggests, a double edge: "There are two reasons why people do not mind their business: One is, they haven't any business to mind, and the other is, they haven't any mind."

Bishop McTear said, in a church extension speech: "God will bless Jacob lying down on a stone; but when Jacob got to be better off the Lord required him to build a house." Those resting on a stone because too penurious to build will please take notice. In this connection, "Gild-eroys'" letter, in another column, should be read.

Bishop Keener has been suffering for a week past with a painful attack of lumbago. It has arrested locomotion, but in no wise affects the sparkle and flow of his genial spirits. He has a good line of District Conferences arranged, and expects to be out in a few days. The cancellation of those appointments would probably be the part of wisdom. Our Bishops are in danger of being overworked.

The discussion with reference to the International Sunday-school Lesson System will bear good fruit. The conception was a grand one, and the results have been most gratifying. Never has there been such an interest in intelligent Bible study. With some necessary modifications, relieving the course of its fragmentary character, the system will retain its hold upon popular favor and repeat the glory of its early history.

The Catholic Examiner, of New York, says the party that passes the Freedom of Worship Bill will get the Catholic vote, and with it the governorship and all the offices. Just what we have been saying. It is a menacing political power that will be wielded in the State for the use of the church. Its vote will be given to those who will pass measures to enrich ecclesiastical institutions. Such a power is a perpetual danger. The "Primate of America" announced the true Jesuitical doctrine, last year, when in an after-dinner speech he said, "We are American in voice, but Roman in heart."

The question of changing the name of the church will be voted upon by the several Annual Conferences this year. The following resolution was passed by the last General Conference on the last day of the session:

Resolved, That the matter of changing the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, be referred to the several Annual Conferences by the Bishops during the ensuing four years, and that they report the result of the vote to the General Conference of 1886 for ratification.

As the subject has been thoroughly discussed in other years, we expect a quiet vote and a satisfactory result. Let everyone be persuaded in his own mind and act accordingly.

The old enemy of public education is desperately at work in Ireland. The Irish Christian Advocate discusses the subject ably and earnestly, and clearly indicates the evil and danger of making concessions to the insatiable Romanists. When Mr. Gladstone effected the disestablishment of the Protestant Church, in 1869, it was supposed that the principle of state aid to religion was doomed forever. But now this insidious and restless Romanist are moving all available influences to secure aid for their convent school from the National Board of Education, and have in a measure succeeded. It is a dangerous concession to ecclesiasticalism, violative of political faith, and sooner or later, will foment revolution. In the meantime let Americans keep their eyes open. We have the same hungry animal in our midst, whatever innocent and loyal cloak he may assume.

Charity by Iniquity.

There is an institution in New Orleans known as the Shakespeare Almshouse—a home for the aged and infirm. The buildings are excellent, the grounds ample and beautiful, and the internal management worthy of all praise. There are 117 inmates, the average age of whom is sixty-nine years. The published report of monies received for the year ending March 31, 1885, is $163 80. Rather a small amount to sustain such an institution. But the innocent public has no information of other receipts, and must, therefore, be content to study that marvelous problem in domestic economy—how 117 inmates, besides employees, can be sustained a whole year on $163 80. The report is a fraud, but, at the same time, a tribute to public decency. As a matter of fact, the house is supported by privilege licenses derived from gambling dens. The law does not recognize the exacting of such revenues; but by a tacit understanding the gambling houses are allowed to exist and ply their nefarious business on penalty of paying a stipulated sum for the sustenance of the aged and infirm of the city.

The whole thing is an iniquity, and ought to be stamped out. If such a charity has to be sustained by the licensing of evil, far better for the city for the institution to fall and the infirm poor to die on the streets. It is fastening upon our community a moral outrage that dooms it to be classed with Monte Carlo and Baden-Baden as the home and throne of the meanest vice. And how plausible it looks! What a salve for a weak conscience! These places are going to exist, and we had better make them serve a good purpose. Specious, dangerous reasoning. It countenances and encourages a terrible evil for a possible good. It opens a dead-fall for young men and the destruction of public morals for the sake of relieving the pockets of some philanthropists. It is educating gamblers among our sons in order to feed and clothe a few old people. The principle is iniquitous, and its countenance a calamity. And we are reaping this terrible harvest. Within the past two weeks visitors from the country, with large sums of money, have been enticed into these dens and robbed of every farthing. Laborers, with large families, are led in there only to lose the last hard-earned dime and be sent home to children in want. But by making them patrons of a great charity the moral outrages are approved, and some gentlemen are applauded as real philanthropists. The philanthropy of the gambling den is a new ethical discovery for which New Orleans claims the credit.

Death of Rev. R. T. Parish.

A note from Rev. J. H. Stone, of Vienna, La., brings the sad intelligence of the death of Rev. R. T. Parish, an esteemed and valuable member of the Louisiana Conference. He died at his home, near Vernon, on the tenth instant, having fought a good fight and finished his course with joy. There was not a fleck of cloud in his sky, and without fear, hurry or flurry he walked through the valley of the shadow of death. We knew him to appreciate his godly walk, earnest zeal and Methodist loyalty.

Since the receipt of Bro. Stone's postal the following letter from Bro. Sawyer was received, which is substituted for some reflections of our own:

Last Friday, at his home, near Vernon, La., Rev. Robert T. Parish went to his eternal reward. He came into Vernon to the second Quarterly Conference, and while there was taken very sick on Sunday afternoon. Before leaving Vernon on Monday, at his request we read and prayed with him. He seemed filled with the desire to preach again, but was entirely submissive to the will of God. His faith was unshaken, and he commissioned us to tell the brethren that he was ready to go if God should so order. A good, true man, a faithful preacher of the word, a successful worker in the vineyard of his Lord, a thoroughly ripe Christian, Bro. Parish did a grand life-work and rests well after his abundant labors. Bro. Stone, who preached his funeral, will doubtless send the Advocate an extended notice of his life and death. The Louisiana Conference has lost one of her best loved and most efficient members. May God's arms encircle the widow and children, and his grace be given them in their great sorrow!

The Silent Co-Pastor.

The most effectual assistant every pastor can secure in his great work has no voice to speak. It moves unobscured among the flock and often accomplishes results when the shepherd himself has failed. It feeds the hungry, comforts the sorrowing, and in the absence of the pastor sometimes preaches with telling effect. This assistant is none other than the religious newspaper. Without its timely aid the minister has to struggle against wind and tide alone, and mourn over repeated failures and meagre results. The people read, and if not furnished that which is wholesome and healthful, they will feed upon the impure and poisonous. An Advocate in a family has changed its entire current of thought and conversation. Though for a long time members of the church but little was said of its work beyond the neighborhood. Nothing was known of our chief pastors and their labors, our missionaries and their successes, and our great connection progress everywhere. Now their field of vision is broadened, faith is strengthened, and they feel a thrill of joy at the triumphant march of the gospel in all lands.

A distinguished writer says that over the arch of the Ramesseum at Thebes, which during the reign of Osymandias was used as the repository of his library, was the inscription, "The treasury of remedies for the soul." An eloquent and not extravagant tribute to the value of good books. We need to cultivate their companionship. And likewise our weekly periodicals in order to catch the spirit of the age and understand the currents and counter-currents of social and religious life.

There is this common error abroad—a pastor considers a little activity in circulating a church paper as service and kindness to the publisher, rather than an assistance to himself in his work and a blessing to his flock; hence for a slight misunderstanding about a single subscriber he says, "I will work for you no more." In such an one conviction has never taken very deep root. His are surface methods, and purely personal.

Another class is thus happily described by the Richmond Christian Advocate:

"The certain attention and pleasing ecstasies that attach to the pulpit make the delivery of a sermon a more agreeable part of a preacher's duty than the distribution of tracts. Yet the history of these fugitive pages reveals a wide and deep power for good. The spade turning the turf and heaping it into mounds is inferior in noisy pomp to the roar of cannon. Earthworks, however, have turned the tide in many a fight. The steam dredges that clang and scoop in our river channels excite our admiration. Bundles of willows, matted and hid along the margin of streams, gather the waters in narrow currents, quicken the tide and plough the bottoms deeper and broader than all the iron buckets ever let down into the waters. The silent influence of quiet forces tells in religion. The church journal glides noiselessly through the mails, visiting the thousands and thousands of homes without the announcement of presence or demonstration of dignity, catches the attention and persuades to a better life. It sounds the thrilling notes of bravery and victory. It scans, like the war balloons now in this air above the sands of the Soudan, the whole field, and reports the position of the foe, the movements of our advanced forces, and brings the information that guides the battalions to the front. No skilled captain neglects this aerial scout. No worthy and wise leader of the sacramental host fails to command the aid of the religious paper."

Bishop McTear has been on the Mexican border and sends the following note to the Texas Christian Advocate:

Having visited the picket stations of the Mexican districts, I returned here today on my way to the San Sabá and Abilene districts. It is enough to say that a great door, and effectual, seems to be open in Nuevo Leon and Coahuila and other States of the neighboring Republic; and the Lord is raising up native laborers well adapted to this peculiar work. I have good news of other openings in Durango also. The Lord be with our brethren who are entering and working there.

The following pleasant personal is from the columns of the Church Record:

The soil of South Carolina has been very fruitful of Methodist Bishops. Of the seventeen Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, three were born in this State: Bishops Chapers, Wightman and McTear. Bishops Andrew and Pierce, though born in Georgia, were both members of the South Carolina Conferences, and received no little of their growth and development, intellectually and spiritually, while laboring in this State.

Winona District Conference.

This body met in the thriving town of Winona, on the morning of the sixteenth instant, with Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Sr., P. E., in the chair. We were glad to see this honored veteran in good health and fired with the spirit of youth. He is closing up a quadrennium on that district with unflagging zeal and with the pleasure of noting a forward movement all along the line of the church's activities. After all the reports were in he made an address full of apostolic fervor, and gave some gratifying statistical information as to the development of the district under his presidency. Three years ago there were thirteen pastoral charges; now there are nineteen on the same territory. The membership has increased from 4,000 to 5,100; parsonages from seven to thirteen, with two others in process of erection; ten new churches had been built, quite a number remodeled and beautified, and several others removed to more eligible locations. At the close of his address, which made every pastor weep, the Conference passed some well-worded resolutions in acknowledgement of his faithful labors. They will be found in another column.

Bro. J. B. Streeter was elected secretary, and Rev. W. W. Hoskins, assistant secretary. The silvered locks of the secretary, the beloved friend of our novice ministry, reminded us that the almanac had not failed to register the passing years. Eternity hastens to meet us all, and the exhortation to be always ready should be solemnly heeded.

There was a full attendance of the pastors and a creditable representation of laymen. The district is ably manned, and in all respects the personnel of the Conference could hardly be excelled. Some apprehension was felt that the early season would diminish the attendance; but the falling off is not perceptible. We have long been of the opinion that an early District Conference was greatly advantageous to the work of the district. If any new plans are projected, there is time for their full development. If the spirit of the meeting is aggressive and full of revival power, it will be communicated everywhere. From that mountain summit the prophets of the Lord will go down to their charges with shining faces and hearts aflame for more zealous and more successful labor.

The first day of Conference was devoted to the consideration of Sunday-schools. Prepared addresses on given topics were delivered, followed by general discussion, which took wide range, and at times was spirited and enjoyable. This was crowned by a consecration meeting of great spiritual power. We have not attended a District Conference in which the devotional spirit was so positive and prominent. Every preaching service was attended by the presence and power of the Most High.

The pastors generally made favorable reports. Some hard and dead places had been revived, while a hopeful outlook over the entire district stimulated the faith of the brethren. In no Conference have we ever seen the temperance sentiment at such high tide. Every pastor reported specially on the subject, and no prophet's ken was necessary to foretell the speedy overthrow of the rum power in the Winona district.

As Winona had become a prohibition town, we were anxious to learn whether or not the temperance "fanatics" had ruined the place, commercially. The testimony was universal almost that marked improvement was manifest in the morals and general well of the community. So great has been the decrease of crime with the close of the saloons that a petition is in circulation to increase the Mayor's salary from $150 per annum and perquisites to $600 a year. The reason assigned is that now there are no perquisites—not enough "drunk and down" cases before his Honor to enable him to live. So prohibition does prohibit. Tell it in Gath and publish it in Askelon!

The hospitality of the place was unbounded. Several visits will be necessary to accept all the invitations received. Rev. W. B. Murray, the pastor, is in the midst of his fourth year in that community, and all Winona—Methodist and non-Methodist—is lamenting that inexorable statute of limitation.

The next Conference will be held at Carrollton. The following delegates to the Annual Conference were elected: J. B. Streeter, J. G. Hamilton, H. B. McGee, O. J. Moore, Alternates: J. W. Scarborough, H. C. Williamson.

For many courtesies extended and kind words in behalf of this Advocate we are profoundly grateful. We gladly give place to the following resolution from the report of the Committee on Religious Literature: Resolved, That the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, as the official organ of our Conference, is entitled to emphatic recognition and, on the ground of merit, to cordial commendation; that we are gratified to have the editor with us, and we hereby pledge him our earnest support.

Temperance at the White House.

The newspapers and political wine bibbers who made themselves by turns merry and mad over Mrs. Hayes' Puritanism at the White House now have another engagement with Mrs. Cleveland. She has made a history on the temperance question, and her sturdy convictions will find no abatement or compromise in her new position. Possessing a vigorous mind of rather philosophical cast, and tenacious of her opinions until modified by undoubted fact or convincing argument, we shall expect a repetition of Mrs. Hayes' administration, which banished wines and liquors from the President's table. The chief magistrate of a great nation like ours ought to be an example of many virtues and propriety. And when he refuses to offer intoxicants at his receptions, he will greatly aid in expelling an evil from the conventional hospitalities of social and official life. When "state dinners" are no longer marred by tipsy guests, smaller affairs will not be considered incomplete without claret and champagne.

Miss Cleveland, it will be remembered, has been a teacher, successful and accomplished. In the school-room her temperance convictions had fervent advocacy. She has also been a charming writer, and in 1882 wrote a beautiful article for young girls in the Youth's Temperance Banner. That article we quote entire:

RESPONSIBILITY OF OLDS IN TEMPERANCE WORK.

J. G. Holland wrote in Mrs. Hayes' album these words: "Women only can make wine drinking unfashionable and heal the nation of this curse." You and I need to know this first, because if only we women can do this thing, why it is an awful responsibility upon us—each one of us. And if somebody else can do it, we, like all the others, would like to give that somebody else the job. Five years ago, at Washington, Mrs. Hayes became mistress of the White House, and it was for her, and no one else, to say what the social atmosphere should be which surrounded her guests, and how they should be entertained at her house. Well, she did an unheard-of thing. She banished wine from all her entertainments, with just one exception. Secretary Evarts made a fuss. He was mortified. He could not endure to have Lord and Lady English, Count and Countess French, Baron and Baroness German, come to the White House dinners and have nothing fit for them to drink—not a drop of poison! It was too utterly queer! So Mrs. Hayes made one exception in favor of those great foreign highnesses, and allowed wine upon her table in their presence. But only for once. Her conscience—high-souled woman that she is—smote her for that one little cowardly compromise with wrong. She could better endure to have Secretary Evarts and the Smiths ashamed of her than to be ashamed of herself. So she quietly and forever after prohibited wine from her table, and cheerfully endured the lifted eyebrows and shrugged shoulders of the diplomats, British, French, Russian—all, and this little short-lived fuss. He was mortified. He could not endure to have Lord and Lady English, Count and Countess French, Baron and Baroness German, come to the White House dinners and have nothing fit for them to drink—not a drop of poison! It was too utterly queer! So Mrs. Hayes made one exception in favor of those great foreign highnesses, and allowed wine upon her table in their presence. But only for once. Her conscience—high-souled woman that she is—smote her for that one little cowardly compromise with wrong. She could better endure to have Secretary Evarts and the Smiths ashamed of her than to be ashamed of herself. So she quietly and forever after prohibited wine from her table, and cheerfully endured the lifted eyebrows and shrugged shoulders of the diplomats, British, French, Russian—all, and this little short-lived fuss.

What Mrs. Hayes did in the White House every woman can do in her own home, if she will. If the girls who read these words will think of them, all together, use their influence on the side of temperance, they can make temperance fashionable. Will you do it?

Gen. Grant does a manly thing in refusing to drink wine everywhere and in all society. It is only a strong man who can keep his wine-glass upside down—in this case right side up, too!—while all the grand people around him are sipping champagne and teasing each other in sparkling drinks. No one can tell how far this little candle sheds its light. But no man can do for a fashion in society what a woman can. It is women only, as Dr. Holland said.

I wish some strong, bright angel stood before you just now with you read, girls, to flash before you, as no words of mine can, the power you possess to help or to hinder the exodus of temperance; to make you feel your responsibility, because you are girls, in this matter; to shudder at its weight, and to never cease trying to fulfill it! Doubtless you have heard a great deal about the value of your smiles; but do you know the value of your frowns. I wish I could make you feel the value of your frown and the importance of knowing just what to frown upon. What a man must do by a blow a woman can do by a frown. When the time comes that the young man who now shares his time in your society and the saloon—who jokes about temperance in your presence, and takes a glass socially, now and then, is made to feel that these things can be done if you are to be his companion at party, ride or church—that good society can out-tolerate these things in its members—in short, that this kind of man is unfashionable and unpopular, then alcohol will tremble on its throne, and the liquor traffic will bide its cancerous fate.

"Gimme a Light and Lemme Go."

Uncle Jim is well nigh ubiquitous. Everybody knows he is older than his own recollections, and they are the oldest things he knows of, except the fact that he "had been in this world and got need to it before he could recollect." But Uncle Jim is like the sand of the sea for multitude. He fills Paul's expression, "Dying, and behold we live;" for he dies daily somewhere, but never all at once.

Such was Uncle Jim in general. Uncle Jim in especial was: His occupation in life was to kindle fires in the morning on the old plantation. In those days one remembers reading out of Webster's Spelling Book, "A wise man will rise with the sun, or before it." The next morning he rose with Uncle Jim, who generally came in about five in the morning. Later in life Webster's Spelling Book was dismissed. Uncle Jim went with the spelling book into the Freedman's Bureau. I believe the young people rejoiced at the exodus of the twain—not that either Uncle Jim or the book was bad, but a change was wanted all around.

Uncle Jim and Noah Webster (i. e., spelling book) both were old and could sympathize. Uncle Jim frequently went from the camp to his log of prayer in the woods, taking the well-worn speller with him. There he would get upon his knees, and, spreading the book before him, he would pray out of the spelling book, asking that when he could read some angel would bring him a Bible. He did not learn much in the way of orthography or reading. "Much study became a weariness of the flesh," Uncle Jim wanted work. He longed for the old plantation. He grew more and more anxious every day to return to the place and business he had left. The good days of October came. It was too much for him to bear. Someone would take the place and do the work which had been his for twenty years. He resolved to forestall any such calamity.

Gathering up his ragged pack and taking his spelling book in his hand, he bade the camp farewell and turned his steps toward the old home. When he reached the gate the dogs ran out and barked furiously; but their growls changed to whines and yelpings of delight as the old man reached out his hand and patted their heads.

"God bless dese puppies," said Uncle Jim in deep emotion; "dare hearts is jess es lovin' es when de ole man went erway. An' now he's come back to make fires in the mornin' for de whil' fokes, jess es he done fo' de wail. God bless Mars Jimmie! He was named arter Uncle Jim, an' de angels er de ole man's heen gone to help watch whil' he'sen. I spec; for dey hain't been round bossin' for de ole man lately."

Thus soliloquizing, the old man reached the steps of the old plantation mansion. Soon the young master came out.

"Good morning, Uncle Jim," said he, rather coldly.

"Good morning, Mars Jimmie," replied Uncle Jim; "I've come back to live whil' ye agin."

"But I don't want you," chillingly responded the young man.

"Mars Jimmie, you know I've allus made fires in winter. Ye can't do without me, klu ye, dis winter?"

"Yes, I can make my own fires. We have no use for you. Besides you went away when we hogged you to stay. Now we don't want you—you may go back to the camp."

Uncle Jim was overwhelmed. Tremulous and husky, his words came without much coherence; but the eloquence of despair was in them. In vain the young master called him an old sinner and hypocrite. Uncle Jim made the dogs his advocates.

"Mars Jimmie," said he, "dese puppies knows me. Dey knows I never was a hipperkrit to dem. Dese didn't lick de hipperkrit's sleek hand, but dey'd rather lick de sores o' po' Laz'rus; and dogs is dogs now, jess es dey wuz when Jesus knowed 'em. 'Pears like dese here two's 'em' in de same class o' de angels. Mars Jimmie, honie—God bless ye! Ye won't turn me out now, will ye, Mars Jimmie? Joss lemme kinde de fires one morn' time—jess one time mo'."

The young master broke down before the pathetic appeal, and after some purposed delays the old man was told that he might go to his old cabin in the quarters. But here was a picture that Uncle Jim had not imagined. He had thought only of the clean-swept room of cabins, with the little garden patches, the fruit tree here and there, the wash-lug-place, the hen coops, wagon sheds, and in the background the

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 19.—Eight live-story tenements on the south side of West Sixty-second street, between Tenth and Eleventh avenues, that had been recently put under roof, fell this afternoon while efforts were being made to brace them up that the yielding foundation might be made secure. The wreck was complete not a stick remained whole in the entire row. Half a hundred workmen were at work in or about the building at the time and at least thirteen of them were injured, none fatally. The examination of the debris showed the cause of the disaster to be wretched workmanship and poor material. The mortar contained lime or no sand, but loam or mud instead, and was wholly unfit for use. This, and the fact that the building had been erected during the cold weather with wet and frozen bricks, were directly the cause of the collapse.

Toleno, O., April 14.—While a party of school children were gathered together to play upon the platform of a new roller coaster, the cars of which were being tried for the first time, the floor gave way, precipitating the entire party, about twenty-five in number, to the ground, a distance of twenty feet. Three boys were seriously injured, one fatally. Six or eight others were more or less hurt.

Washington, April 16.—The colored people of this city celebrated the day of the third anniversary of the emancipation of slavery in the District of Columbia. The celebration consisted of a street parade during the day and commemorative exercises at Lincoln Memorial Church in the evening. About 5000 persons, members of the various civil and military associations of colored people of Washington, took part in the parade, which was reviewed by President Cleveland from the portico of the White House.

Philadelphia, April 16.—Prof. Wise, the aeronaut, accompanied by several members of the signal corps stationed in this city, made another balloon ascension today from the city and College Park for the purpose of taking observations of wind currents and other meteorological subjects. The air ship rose about noon and catching a northwest current sailed off toward Southern New Jersey. A dispatch received at the signal office here this evening stated that the balloon landed at Williamstown, Gloucester county, N. J., at 2:30 p. m., with a thump, breaking several of the meteorological instruments.

New York, April 17.—Gen. Grant's progress toward convalescence, for the past two days, has been truly phenomenal. The physician now openly expresses his opinion that he will recover.

Lafayette, Ala., April 18.—A heavy hail storm passed over this section last evening, doing considerable damage to the fruit trees, many of which were almost stripped of both fruit and foliage. Stones as large as hen's eggs were found in some places.

St. Louis, April 19.—In opposition to the petition of the business men of St. Louis, against the strict enforcement of the liquor law, the ladies of St. Louis, to the number of nearly 600, have united in a protest against the enforcement of the law. The ladies signed a petition, and the Journal of to-morrow morning will publish the paper, with a list of the signers' names. The business men's petition is claimed to represent 10,000,000. The ladies say that their protest represents nearly 500 husbands and fathers, and more than 100,000 children. The signers to the protest were all seceded in less than twelve hours' time. It would have been easy to have largely swayed the list. One leading lady, who was on the committee to obtain signatures, said it was better than a prayer meeting.

New York, April 19.—Last Tuesday an old woman named Sands died on a sidewalk near West 10th street. She was supposed to be poor. When her effects were examined to-day there was found sewed in an old petticoat $30,000 in greenbacks, bank books showing deposits of $10,000 and $100,000 in bonds. In addition to this, Mrs. Sands had real estate in various places in this city and one for upon which she resided. The bulk of the estate under the will will go to her four nephews.

St. Louis, April 19.—Despatches from Fulton, Mo., state that the people of Callaway county are becoming greatly discouraged at the failure so far to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia among the diseased cattle. The spreading of the disease in Callaway county, but in adjoining counties, and that no adequate measures are being taken to prevent it, much less eradicate it. It is said that over 1000 cattle have either become diseased, or have been exposed to the plague, and that it will not be long before the disease will be found in the county.

Fort Smith, April 20.—After a desperate fight, in which he was severely wounded by United States deputy marshals, Arch London, a notorious Cherokee whiskey peddler, was captured, brought in from the Cherokee Nation and placed in the United States jail to-day. London had been serving a term of imprisonment in the House of Correction at Detroit for introducing and selling whiskey in the Indian Territory in violation of the revenue and intercourse laws, and he will doubtless serve another term.

New York, April 20, Gen. Grant rested and slept through the night until 6 o'clock this morning. When Dr. Newman left the house he said the General was yesterday asked if he would not go out to drive in the afternoon. He was silent a little while, and then announced, "No, this is Sunday. Prayers for my recovery have been offered to-day in many places, perhaps through the country, and I think I better I should not go out until Monday." At 1:50 o'clock this afternoon Gen. Grant's family carriage was driven to the door. Dr. Douglas arrived about the same time. The General was driven to Mount St. Vincent, and back to the house, having been gone thirty-five minutes. He left the carriage the first of the party, and walked firmly and unaided up the steps and into the house.

FOREIGN.

London, April 13.—The House, after rejecting by a vote of 145 to 29 the amendment offered by Mr. Henry Labouchere that England at once evacuate the Sudan, agreed to reply to the Queen's message calling on the reserves.

Panama, via Galveston, April 17.—It is reported that Dr. Payson has been taken into the hands of the rebels. Many radicals are being imprisoned at Buenaventura, contrary to the conditions of surrender. Government troops at Buena Ventura are numerous. Communication across the Isthmus is interrupted.

St. Petersburg, April 19.—The arrival of men-of-war at Cronstadt continues. Orders are issued to-day to have all of them put to sea. Advances from Samarkand state that Gen. Konigoff's victory over the Afghans has favorably impressed the inhabitants of Bokhara. Eleven last steamers have been bought ready equipped, at various parts, for use as Russian privateers.

London, April 19.—The government has accepted tenders for a new man-of-war, two 110-ton gunns and numerous smaller gunns and torpedo-boats.

Kilbenny, April 20.—The Prince and Princess of Wales left for Dublin to-day. The people cheered, fired off military salutes and sang the national anthem in demonstration of their loyalty as the royal visitors took their leave.

Dublin, April 20.—The royal party on their way to Dublin from Kilbenny stopped at Limerick, and were welcomed with a most brilliant reception. They were also presented with an address. During the journey between Limerick and Limerick the Prince and Princess of Wales were met with some hostile manifestations.

It is stated that the Queen has arranged to visit Ireland in the autumn.

London, April 20.—The situation of the Russo-Afghan question is again serious, owing to Russia increasing her demands to such an extent as to be impossible for England to accept the terms. It is now feared that Russia has overstepped the bounds of British forbearance, as it is asserted, on high authority, that England would not recognize the Russian demands of Russia. A large number of important dispatches have passed between England and the Russian foreign offices Saturday and Sunday. All the members of the Cabinet remained in London Sunday awaiting a reply from Russia to the Russian ultimatum.

Vienna, April 20.—The Grand Duke Constantine, the uncle of the Czar, while here recently repeatedly declared that the Czar and the entire Imperial Court of Russia desired peace.

A LEAF.

(For a friend in trouble.)

BY MRS. L. C. RAY, PAULINE.

Lord,
my life is but a leaf, And
to and fro 'tis tossed, by winds of unbelief, Which gives me agony and grief, And bids me low. O, wilt thou, Lord, pierce and break this leaf to-day?
The subtle now, and my desire, Is to be saved, even as by fire. Have me, I pray, But, Lord, a leaf or broken leaf, Thou wilt not break. Thou canst to heal, and all my need is just to hold this leaf to thee.
For this one sake.

(Job xiii, 25.)
(Is. xliii, 3.)
(Rev. xii, 1.)

"Fifty Reasons."

This is the title of a book which I find in the paragon library, written in the interest of the Roman Church. Nothing could be further from a correct description of the book than its title. "Innumerable falsehoods and exaggerations of facts concerning Protestantism," would give a much better idea of its contents.

The writer gives us to understand that he was raised under Lutheran influence, and early in life set out to decide what religion he was to choose. This led him to visit a great number of universities and papal and royal libraries, to read thousands of voluminous works of the fathers and modern writers on historic and dogmatic theology, and to fall—if we are to believe what he says—in company with all the Protestant cranks of his time. In this he was wonderfully lucky. As to the rules which were to govern him, you have an example in the following:

1. "In his estimate of the choice of things a man is always to prefer better to worse." His own prejudices are to sit in judgment on the merits of the thing.

2. "The certain must take the place of things less certain or altogether uncertain." From this rule he argues that: "It is certain that Romanists have been saved; it is not certain that any of the evangelical sects have. Hence, Romanism is to be preferred before Protestantism." O logic! O truth! But so be "reasons."

Those are fair samples of the rules under which the writer proceeds with his investigation. That, under these rules, his prejudices and his papal blindness should cause him to pervert almost every fact that he attempts to deal with is no marvel.

In his first "consideration" he reaches the conclusion that the "Catholic communion" is composed of "those who, all the world over, and in all times, follow the Roman persuasion, which everywhere agrees with itself as to the Articles of Faith." Celestius, one of the Roman saints, denied the doctrine of original sin, and Zozimus, one of the Popes, approved it. Does that agree? In A. D. 794 the Council of Frankfort, which council was composed of 350 bishops, coming from Germany, Italy and France, approved Pelagianism. Then this doctrine was preached in those empires by "the Roman Catholic communion," while in Africa just the reverse was proclaimed. Then there were two Popes, Zozimus and Innocent; two churches, the African and the Roman. One was preaching the Pelagian doctrine—that man is born without sin (and this was the Roman Church); the other, that man is born with sin. Does that agree? In 848 Gotescaulus was condemned by a Council at Mentz, and in 859 was again condemned by a Council at Quierzy. In 855 the decisions of these councils were rescinded by another at Valence. The decisions of the Council of Valence were confirmed by Pope Nicholas, who was indignant at the conduct of the Council at Mentz in condemning Gotescaulus. Does this "agree"? But why continue the proofs of discord, doctrinal variations and papal whims in the "Catholic communion"? This history of Romanism is a history of frauds, of whims, of variations, of persecution and authorized wholesale murder.

In the fifth "consideration" the writer reasons thus: "Since no salvation is attainable without the Catholic faith, I was bound to choose that of the Roman Catholics." How is one to tell what "the Catholic faith" is, since it may be changed any moment by any Pope or council? The "faith" of Nicholas was not the "faith" of Innocent, although both of them were infallible Popes. The only unchangeable "faith" of Romanism is in the power of force and ignorance as a means of furthering their cause. (Tetzell and the Inquisition.) Why made the writer so wise as to know what he affirms? According to the Bible, it is not the "faith" of the Roman Catholics which saves, but "the faith of Jesus Christ"—the faith which the penitent exercises in Him.

In his eighth "consideration" he tells us he met with Augustin, "Irenaeus, who is more ancient than Augustin," Tertullian and Gregory, of Nanglengen—all of whom insisted that the "Roman faith" was the only true way. He says that Augustin "was a Manichee, converted to the Roman Catholic faith." I find nowhere—and I have searched the records very extensively—that this saint was ever anything other than a leader of the African clergy in the councils of the church, and that, too, when it was the "Christian Church"—before the numerous superstitions and moral monstrosities caused it to take on the appellation, "Roman Catholic Church."

Whether or not the writer in question knew it, Augustin, though he admitted the possibility of purgatory, expressly declared that "the idea without any proof and unsupported by canonical authority." So Augustin was not a good guide into modern Romanism. As for Irenaeus, "who is more ancient than Augustin," it seems that he never so much as wrote about purgatory, and as for his teaching this prime dogma of Romanism, he certainly never did anything of the kind. Tertullian, his next patron saint, spent his life in opposition to one of the leading doctrines of the church, not only at Rome, but everywhere else in all history before him. This saint, closely followed, would have made a good Campbellite of this world-heseker.

Either the writer was an ass, else he supposed he was writing for a set of geese; otherwise he would not have mentioned Gregory, of Nanglengen, as one of those who led him into Romanism. For a long time Gregory held a patriarchy at Constantinople; but in supreme disgust at the petty discussions and mortal strife of the clergy over matters of no moment "he resigned his dignity and left the city." (Edgar.) Surely that example would not lead one into the Roman Church, especially when it was that Romanizing tendency which so supremely disgusted this man as to drive him from the highest place in his church to the quiet ranks of an humble preacher.

In his ninth "consideration" he "appealed to the saints of God"—among whom he names Nicholas and Dominick, the first of whom endorsed Pelagianism, and the other!!! As the perfecter of the Inquisition, there drips from the skirts of Dominick more innocent blood than ever flowed from the guillotine. A fit guide to such a conclusion, as that by these means "they arrived at eternal bliss." If they dared do it, this "bliss" would still be sought by such means!

After this he turned "to the holy martyrs," and found that "they shed their blood and * * * patiently endured banishments, prisons, and all the most cruel torments" for the faith which "was no other than the Roman Catholic." He consulted "the thirty-three Bishops of Rome," but never once approached the tens of thousands of the victims of Nero, of Trajan, of Charles V., of France! He consulted Laurence, but he took good care that it should not be the Laurence roasted on a gridiron by Nero. Ridley and Latimer? No, no. St. John, the divine? No; none of these. His guides were such as he knew beforehand.

From the "saints of God" he turns "in thought to hell," where he finds "Simon Magos, Novatus, Vigilantius, Pelagius, Nestorius, Macedonius, Marcion," etc. With one voice "they told" him "it was for their breaking off from the Roman Catholic Church." I suppose he did not find Luther, nor Calvin, nor Wesley there; and if Pelagius was there "for breaking off from the Roman Catholic Church," it is so strange that Pope Nicholas was not there, too, for becoming a party to the crime after the fact!

After all this rambling among the damned till every sense was blunted and every susceptibility to truth had been blotted out, in true "Roman Catholic" style, he then turns to the Apostle Paul, and goes into very much such a state of ecstasy as his "Roman Catholic" brethren, and to enjoy in the "festival of the use." (See Edgar.) Romans v, 11-12, he says he finds, (1) "long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift to the end you may be established—that is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith of both you and me." Now, my dear reader, here you have an opportunity to see how Rome teaches the Holy Scriptures. Get your Bible, turn to Romans v, 11-12, and you will not find one word of all this quotation at that place. But suppose you could find it, how could you reach the conclusion from it which he reached, viz: "Therefore, the Roman faith was once the apostolic faith?"

In this "consideration" (twelfth) this reasoner gives an illustration for this fashion: "A certain family was owned by all the world to have been in ancient times of a noble race, and someone should now maintain that of late it had lost its rank, * * * would not such a man be obliged to point out the time when, and the reason why, it lost its nobility?" Now, let us answer. Yes; for to evil judgment can be taken without cause. This "noble family"—Roman Catholics—lost its rank:

1. In A. D. 1229, when the Council of Tolosa passed a law that no lay member of the church should own a Bible written in his own language. Can the once respected Church of Rome hold its good name while professing to fight for God and at the same time suppressing his word?

2. In A. D. 736, when Pope Gregory II, recognized bigamy, Epiphanius, one of the Roman saints, taught bigamy. Is this respectable?

3. In A. D. 1056, when it established the whipping-post as a means of disciplining men and women, whether princesses or lords or menials. Is this a sign of ecclesiastical respectability?

4. In A. D. 971, when Boniface VIII, after murdering his predecessor, was recognized as head of the church in 985. Is a murderer respectable?

5. By the establishment of houses of the most demoralizing character, and the annual collection of large sums of money from them in Rome for the use of the "family." If proprietorship in brothels is not enough to "lose a good name" to a family, there can be no such thing as disgrace.

6. By enacting a law in A. D. 1213 that men, for specified performances, might have pardon of ecclesiastical offenses (or offenses against the church) granted by the Bishops; and in A. D. 1330 applying this law to murder, theft, and every other crime, and so changing the law as that each sin had a commercial value, upon the payment of which it was to be forgiven. Is it respectable for a man to usurp power which belongs to God, and by misrepresentations to the ignorant make them believe such unparagoned sinners? Is it respectable for the adulterator of the law to collude with crime and sell the dignity of the law and the peace of the people by pardoning all breaches of the law on the payment of a certain amount of cash?

7. By adopting the mendicant ideas of Francis, the ancient dudo, in A. D. 1223, and afterward through this mendicant order exacting immense sums of money from the deluded victims of the Franciscan friars.

There is not a family on earth, however "noble" it might be, which in the practice of either of these seven villainies would not lose its "standing." But the Roman Church has practiced all these and many that are worse—too obscene and base to mention. We honor the memory of the mother, the apostolic church; but this degenerate and profligate daughter, soiled and disgraced in every characteristic of her being, we can not honor.

But why follow these "fifty reasons" further? I have given the readers of the ADVOCATE a fair and ungarbled sample of the whole. Like most other Roman Catholic productions, it depends more on assertion and misrepresentation than on "reason." The tenderness and veneration with which it speaks of the basest men of the medieval ages as "holy fathers," and of the mistresses of the depraved priests of that age as "saints of the Almighty," impress us with the idea that the true mark of a good Romanist, as viewed by those writers, is moral filthiness.

The Church of Rome is an enemy to liberty and science. Dr. Draper, in the preface to his work on "The Conflict of Science and Religion," expressly declares that "in the use of the term 'church' he wishes to be understood as meaning the Roman Catholic Church, and not the Protestant Church of the present day. There is not a republican government in existence in any nation which is under the domination of Catholicism as it comes from Rome. It is the enemy of the Bible, except as it translates and expounds by it. It opposes all school systems which it can not control. In every age of the world, when it has had the power to do so and defend itself, whoever rejected its arrogance and crimes has been called to give up life. It has murdered all those whose conscience and better informed judgment forced them to differ from it. The Crusades, with its tens of thousands of precious lives, its thousands of beautiful homes and its millions of money destroyed; the Inquisition, with its untold and unexpressible suffering and deaths; the system of indulgences, with the attendant demoralization and unutterably shameful crimes—these all, and thousands of other disgraceful things, have been resorted to merely to enforce an opinion! Though 'in league with death and in covenant with hell,' we are called upon to associate with this 'mother of harlots' as a respectable 'family.' Many of the communicants of Romanism I do respect for their gentle manners and their charitable deeds. As friends, I love them and, religiously, I excuse them because they are deluded—they do not 'know the truth'; but as for the church, as a church, it is an enemy to righteousness and a foe to God.

From the Work.

STONEWALL, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Our second quarterly meeting was held at Whittington Chapel last Saturday and Sunday. The Lord was with us in convicting and converting power. The church greatly revived, two accessions and seven conversions as a part of the results. Bro. B. Jones was with us and rendered valuable assistance. Also at Coalville the Sunday before the church felt and enjoyed refreshings from the presence of the Lord to whom be all the glory.

We have partly organized the class meeting according to our presiding elder's regime. Some oppose the methods, many are indifferent, whilst some are finding it a blessing to themselves and making it so to others. Does not the resistance which so many give it show the extent of our departure from the old landmarks? It has done great good already on my work, and when it passes through some modifications will doubtless work great and gracious results throughout the entire district. We hope for a speedy revival of the old-fashioned Methodist class meetings. Pray for us.

A Tribute of Love.

BY ETNA.

On the grave of my beloved friend, Rev. J. S. Davis, of the Louisiana Conference.

"They say Bro. Davis is dying." This message came to me in a note from a dear friend, and filled my heart with sorrow that I should see his face no more. I could not visit him, but prayed fervently that he might be spared to his family awhile longer; but an all-wise, merciful God has seen proper to remove him from suffering to a brighter and happier home above. My friend is at rest, and why should we selfishly mourn over the departure of this well-worn veteran, who has laid his armor down to rest forever on the bosom of Jesus, whom he loved and served so well on earth. Though I shall sadly miss him, and oh, how they will "miss him at home!" yet "I am satisfied our loss will be his gain," for his joy is unto "eternal life," so grievous, bereaved ones, for he has gone home not bearing one spear, but many to lay at the Lord's feet and in exchange "receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." My heart's desire is to lay this imperfect offering on the grave of one whose friendship I valued so highly, leaving to an abler pen than mine to portray his many excellences of heart and mind. In the latter part of January, 1882, I first met Bro. Davis. The moment he entered my room I felt intuitively that I was in the presence of one who had made "the Most High" his daily trust and refuge. Love to Christ and his followers shone in his countenance, conversation and every-day walk, and I have felt better for having known Bro. Davis. He visited me almost every Saturday, read and prayed for me until I started down. In all his visits I never heard him censoriously criticize, judge harshly or speak unkindly of any one. Charity, humility, candor and patience were his marked characteristics. He was a devoted, consistent, Christian minister, a true and sympathizing friend, and "None knew him but to love him,

None named him but to praise."

On July 6, 1884, in company with other invited friends, I went to the home of good Sister Hayes to partake of the sacrament with our invalid brother. This was a blessed privilege indeed, as it was my first and last visit to his bedside. As I entered the chamber there seemed to be a holy influence pervading every heart. Surely, God's presence was felt by all. My eyes filled with tears at the thought of so soon losing my friend, who was near the "verge of heaven," but in the heart's depths there was joy and peace unnumberable as I gazed at the calm, patient face of the sufferer and witnessed the wonderful grace of God triumphing over physical pain. While hearing the fervent prayer offered by dear Bro. Bradley, and as the sweet songs of Zion floated out on the evening air, I felt it was better to be in the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting. Yes, methought as I listened to the godly words that fell from the lips of this old soldier of the cross, that when so near the "margin of the river" that he must have caught a glimpse of the "sweet fields arrayed in living green" or heard the "awestest words of comfort borne by angel band from the shining courts above," to strengthen him and bring back to cheer the hearts of his loved ones while here on earth they stay," for his utterance were so fragrant with holy triumph and resignation to the Divine will that all felt that it was "good to be here." All this was but a foretaste of heavenly joys so soon to be realized. This noble brother, for many years, patiently and faithfully fought the good fight and without fear, but in suffering slowly journeyed down the stream of time listening for the Master's voice to bid him come up higher. After long waiting the summons came and he has crossed over the river to be greeted by the glad refrain wafted from the heavenly shore, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Dear "Uncle Davis," you will now know how much I appreciated your visits, prayers, sympathy and alms bestowed "in secret." His last visit and chapter read, the fervent "God bless you" and prayer offered in my behalf with the communion taken together in his "benediction" can not be forgotten. My body was weak, but my soul was strengthened and refreshed by this profitable visit and Christian fellowship which will ever linger in memory like the echoes of sweetest music. The best medical skill, the tenderest nursing, the most devoted love, could not save him. May God send his angel to comfort the devoted helpmeet and other loved ones in their sorrow. He has left a legacy to his family which is far better than wealth—a spotless reputation, a good name which will ever remain green and fragrant in the hearts of all who knew him. Before closing this feeble tribute I wish to give one incident of his unselfish nature. Once during a paroxysm of intense pain some member of the family unknown to him sent to me for my reclining chair. On learning where it came from they could not prevail upon him to use it, saying, "She needs it more than I do; send it back." God bless him for this noble act of self-denial in order not to deprive another. One more bright gem out of so many already added to thy crown.

Farwell, my beloved brother; we shall never meet again here, but I trust to meet you with all our dear ones in heaven where God shall wipe away all tears, where pain, sorrow and parting are unknown.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, JR., J. T. SAWYER, REV. W. L. O. HENRICHS.

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 1885.

It is gratifying to read in our Methodist exchange, North and South, of revivals in our colleges and universities. Unless the revival spirit is prominent in our institutions of learning, and heart culture has equal attention with academic discipline, we had best have no church schools. They are an imposition on innocent credulity.

The gate receipts at the Exposition on last Sunday were a little in excess of one thousand dollars—less than the amount necessary for current daily expenses. On Saturday the receipts were about four thousand dollars, and a like disproportion has characterized the entire history of the Exposition. As a financial venture, Sabbath desecration has been rather unprofitable to the Board of Management.

In his address, on the recent anniversary of his coronation, the Pope bewailed his inability to close houses of heresy in Rome, and affirmed that if he had the power, he would soon suppress all Protestantism in his dominions. Exactly. And what he longs to do for Rome would be done for America, if he had the power. That is our interpretation of Archbishop Gibbons' famous utterance, "American in voice, but Roman in heart." The issue of the future is thus very clearly indicated.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, the twenty-fifth anniversary of whose pastorate of Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church was celebrated a few weeks ago, is a signal instance of great personal and pastoral popularity, united to a courageous, outspoken condemnation of wrong. At the anniversary he showed the spade he used twenty-five years before in breaking ground for that church, and said he had made it a rule of his preaching to call a spade a spade. A manly discharge of duty always commands respect. Pulling sentimentalists in the pulpit are the grief of the saluts and the disgust of sinners.

Though the war cloud seems to thicken and a storm to threaten all Europe, the prospects of peace yet abide. Mr. Gladstone will exhaust all possible resources consistent with England's honor to avert a clash of arms. This the English people well know, and they trust him entirely. But if war is inevitable, he will fight to win. The proposition to leave the Penjdeh battle dispute to disinterested commissioners may be accepted by both parties. If so, peace will prevail. We have much to fear from this war. It hodes no good to America. With high prices for breadstuffs and low prices for cotton the South would especially suffer.

Some recent writers in the New York Christian Advocate claim to have made a discovery in the ecclesiastical history of America—that before Strawbridge preached in Maryland, or Philip Embury and Barbara Heck began their labors in New York, there were Methodist itinerant preachers and regularly established churches in this country. After reviewing all the facts stated, and the testimony produced to support them, the New York Advocate concludes that our old historic landmarks abide; that Methodism, as such, with a distinctive system of doctrine and form of government peculiar to itself, did not exist in the United States until Strawbridge, Embury, Barbara Heck and Capt. Webb began their labors. And in that judgment he is correct.

A number of our exchanges this week contain a flat denial from Miss Frances E. Willard of the report that she had received a Divine revelation that she should work for woman's suffrage. We never credited the ridiculous statement and, therefore, made no mention of it in our column. Miss Willard is too well-balanced a Christian character and is too richly endowed, intellectually, to be made a victim of such nonsense. She is a firm believer in the doctrine of "no sex in citizenship," and, to our regret, does advocate it in some of her temperance addresses; but she claims no special inspiration on the subject. We believe it to be a mistake to weight and freight the temperance cause with the woman's suffrage issue. That question is too unpopular to be allowed in any way to stand sponsor for the temperance movement. The one, single, sharply defined issue of temperance and prohibition is enough just now to fill our hands and brains.

Mechanics and Manslaughter.

We do not mean the science of mechanics, but workmen engaged in the business of contracting and building. It transpires in these days of the revival of justice that men who do hiecenre work, resulting in loss of life, are held to rigid account by the criminal law. A few weeks since a row of tenements on West Sixty-second street, New York City, tumbled down, and many persons residing in the buildings were crushed to death. The official inspector of buildings in the city thoroughly investigated the cause of the disaster and reported that the houses were constructed of inferior and unlawful materials, the walls "were built with a mortar which had not the qualities required by law," and that "inferior materials were used without objection from the examiners." The contractor and builder, one Buddeniek, has done a large business in that line, and has in many instances violated the building laws. The grand jury found indictments against him and Sub-contractor Franck for manslaughter in the second degree. Buddeniek is at large on $30,000 bail, and Franck is in the Tombs in default of $10,000 bail. They are to be tried on these indictments, and, if convicted, the penalty is State's prison for fifteen years and a fine of $1,000. It is certainly an interesting case, involving a great principle. If the facts can be proven that unfit materials were used and the work slightly done, and the building fell in consequence, destroying human lives, the penalty is none too severe.

Apart from its immediate judicial determination this case contains many suggestive lessons. We indicate a few:

Dishonest work is murderous. We know it kills the soul of the laborer himself; but, as in the instance above, it may also destroy other innocent and unsuspecting lives. The few dimes saved by using un-sound timbers and untempered mortar were as so many cartridges discharged from a revolver into the brains of those fallen victims. Of course, the builder had no such intention; he had no thought of staining his hands with a brother's blood. He was only cheating to make money; but, alas! his was the deceit that worketh death. He increased his bank account no doubt, but with it also the solemn death-roll of a great city. He became a manslayer, not by gleaming dagger or fatal trigger, but by nuzzed barrels of lime, "knotty timber" and cheap, unskilled labor. True, it is manslaughter in the second degree, but, nevertheless, manslaughter. These cases are numerous, though but few are ever discovered. Faulty iron and defective timber used in vehicles of travel, resulting in breakages with loss of life, are a part of every day's history. They are not investigated and the guilt traced to its source; but the fact is of common observation.

Dishonest work soon brings no work. This is the age of the workingman. Everybody admits his grievances and discusses possible remedies. He is discontented, wants higher wages and shorter time, and the brains of political economists and philanthropists are taxed to devise measures for his relief. One class finds it in a protective tariff, another in free trade, and yet another in the practical confiscation of the property of the rich. One solution has not been intimated—more honest work on the part of the employed. These New York contractors, even though they escape the State prison, are not likely to command business in future. Those falling walls sounded the death-knell of their successful careers. Beneath that debris, with the crushed bodies of innocent tenants, have been buried all their hopes of possible business attainments. And many have stood in the market places and street corners all the day idle because their dishonest labors had rendered it impossible for them to get a job. How rigidly contracts have to be drawn—the last item specified, with bonds and penalties—in order to secure its faithful performance. And unless an eager eye is kept upon every hod of mortar and every brick that goes into the wall, unfit and cheaper material will be used. No sooner does the average laborer secure a job than he begins to study how to slight this and substitute that, thereby saving a little honest work, and filch out of the innocent employer some unearned cash. A merchant remarked to us that he had numberless applications for clerkships; but in nearly every instance the young man accepted seemed chiefly concerned to do as little as possible, draw his salary and retain his position. And then what bitter complaints against the rich are heard! They are hard, cold, selfish, mean and refuse a poor man work. And these complaints are the very ones whose portraits are drawn above. They are the noisy disturbers of town meetings, the pets of the politician out of office, and the whining church members demanding the constant attendance of a wet nurse.

Other lessons will be suggested to the reader. When these things are considered much will be accomplished in the solution of the labor problem.

Our Church Extension Work.

The report of Secretary Morion for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1885, now before us is eloquent with facts and redolent with hope. That so much has been accomplished in the short period of the Board's history, and amid the stringent times in which its birth and initial labors were cast, assures us of the mighty possibilities of the future. Some of these facts we take pleasure in reproducing:

Received for "Loan Funds" $18,322 11
Other assets to " " 10,316 75
Giv'n last year to " " 2,740 11

Total $31,388 97

Received on general account, $18,776 07; total last year was $17,585 13. The report shows the amount paid and pledged during the year to the General and Conference Boards to be a grand total of $65,280 89.

Now, with this amount 206 churches have been helped—an increase of 76 over the year previous. The parent Board has aided churches in seven States, four Territories and the District of Columbia. And by the Conference Boards sixty-three more churches were helped than last year. Thus great good has been done to many local communities by assistance rendered, while the whole church has been blessed in the privilege of giving. But how thrillingly suggestive is the secretary's question, "If this much has been done with our limited resources, how much might be accomplished if all assessments were full?" Waste places would be made to blossom, and where the Methodists are a "feeble folk" they would wax strong and valiant for the Lord.

This fact is noticeable and gratifying—the increase in receipts in 1884 over 1883. It shows the growing popularity of that great connectional interest among the churches. Already our collections were so numerous that many progressive thinkers and aggressive spirits feared it would meet a cold reception, if not a general protest. But so broad and scriptural are its foundations, so wise and convincing the reasons for its inauguration, and so imminent the necessities that demand its timely aid, that the church hailed its birth with a welcome that dispirited Israel failed to accord Nehemiah when commissioned to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. Active pastors find it now quite as easy to raise the collection for church extension as for missions, or any other connectional claim.

The church extension idea lies at the very basis of denominational life. Whether it is wrought out through a distinct organization, or by hazard, as through all the years of our history, the idea itself is woven into our ecclesiastical existence. That first chapel at Bristol gave a new expression to the Methodist movement. Whatever the declarations and protestations of Mr. Wesley and his preachers may have been, the logic of that first dedication service was separation from the Establishment and an independent, distinct ecclesiastical organization. The chapel was to stand beside the church as the representative of a pure gospel, and in generous rivalry for the world's conversion to Christ. It was the expression of separation, but not, necessarily, of alienation. We can not have an orthodox Methodism in spirit, purpose, power and methods in school-houses or union churches. Not until we abide under our own roof-tree can we maintain a good family government. The Methodism that is content to dwell in a cabin school-house, or in copartnership with other denominations for a term of years, has a name to live, but, in truth, has very little breath in its body.

In the name of connectional Methodism we rejoice in the achievements of our Board of Church Extension. The beneficent gift of Sir Francis Lyett, which established the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund, marked an epoch in the history of London Methodism. Like gracious results will be vouchsafed to our Zion by the continued wise administration of this department of connectional machinery.

Revival at Winona.

The following note from Rev. W. S. Lagrone brings gracious tidings from the revival at Winona. We expected just such thrilling news. Never have we attended a more religious District Conference than the one at that place two weeks ago. All the indications were favorable for a Pentecost. May the good continue until the entire community has been redeemed!

"The Lord is doing great things for us. Twenty have joined the Methodist Church, and fifteen the Baptist Church, and the work goes on. This town and community were never so thoroughly stirred before. All denominations and all classes are deeply interested. Rev. J. A. Bowen holds the people."

The Southern Outlook.

We quite agree with the Atlanta Constitution that the South does not desire indiscriminate immigration—much less the pauper classes from foreign countries. For the better, permanent development of our section we only want those who can be readily assimilated and become an integral part of our social, religious and civil life. Dr. Newmas said, not long since, while in New Orleans, that the North and West had become so Europeanized by immense immigration that the nation must look to the South for pure Anglo-Saxon blood. And he might have added, for our old historic virtues and customs. The immigration of the last two decades has been a perpetual strain upon the assimilating power of our national life. And in many cases and places it has been overstrained and stunted. In our great cities the continental, revealing Sunday has destroyed our blessed Sabbath, and the beer garden has become a vicious rival of the sanctuary.

The Constitution contends, and wisely, that the sort of immigration the South needs she is getting. "Men from the East, the North and the West, with capital to invest, are coming among us. They are to be found in every State of the South. These are the pioneers of the kind of immigration the South desires." For all such there are inviting investments. We are moving upward. Sections, here and there, have suffered depression; but the country at large is improving and destined to more rapid growth in the immediate future.

And with this advance in material development there is to be a corresponding enterprise in the church. All denominations are alert and are feeling the impulse of mighty movement. To our Southern Methodism the past decade has witnessed large numerical increase. Whether the spiritual power of the church has been alike conserved is gravely doubted. This calls for prayerful consideration on the part of the ministry, and a diligent seeking for the old paths.

Short Articles.

BY T. A. S. A.

So Sam Jones was not far wrong in saying that the churches furnished the whisky, if Nashville he taken as the index. We are sure, though Nashville is known as a modest city, that she would not refuse the compliment, if offered, that she furnished the brains and piety. She would accept from a sense of duty, and we pray her not "to let duty seem a load in the present case." Sam Jones ought to be let go away with his "bucket," but he ought not to deprive Nashville of its "mud." We now recommend the reading of 1 Corinthians xi, passim, and sing Watts' version of Psalms ii, 13-19. Let the 19 Catholics, 15 Methodists, 15 Presbyterians, 12 Campbellites and Baptists all be at the monnmer's bench, and after long-meter doxology we will be dismissed.

Many people are troubled because their prayers are not answered. The trouble lies in taking the wrong thing for the answer. The blind man that prayed for sight got the answer, "Go wash in Siloam." When he washed he received sight. The rich young man got the answer, "Go sell that thou hast and give to the poor." He failed to do that, and he never inherited eternal life. There are too many mendicant prayers. Suppose Bartimeus had answered Jesus with, "Lord, give me a penny; help a poor blind man!" But the manly sentiment in Bartimeus was stronger than the mendicant, and so he prayed "that I may receive my sight." Jesus never fails to respond to our manly prayers. It is our sniveling mendicancy that he rebukes. Many a spirit voice in our conscience has been neglected, and, like starvings, we have hung around God's door begging for crumbs when, if we had gone a-field and wrought his will, we might have spread our own table and invited him home with us; and he would have gone and left his blessing and promise with us forever.

Paul was a most appreciative man of the genuine affliction of others. This talent in him was so largely developed that it marks one trait of his genius. The world has yet to learn that the power to appreciate kindness is a mark of greatness. Paul had enjoyed the most touching and timely sympathy of the Philippians. But he noticed that it was simply exhausting itself without becoming an instructive and enlightening influence. So he prayed that their "love might abound unto all knowledge and judgment." Love that would endure must at some time become the maid-of-all-work. Sentiment can not last longer than steam. Away from active service it cools or evaporates. Love, to grow, must learn. The streams of sentiment are too shallow—the deepest barely afford swimming room. But the love that is learning things new is like a river that grows deeper into its channel at every turn. To continue to love one must continue to learn more, and vice versa. The wisdom of hate is always narrow and narrowing. It is a bold stream making out into a rainless desert. Never was man misanthropic but to that extent he was a miserably ignorant. He who hates can not judge fairly. No court in the land would accept as a jurymen one who avowed his inveterate hatred to the accused. Were a jury of such to find a verdict of guilty, there is no court of appeals but would reverse it. So then we may fairly conclude that the world will never accept the verdict of that self-constituted jury who openly avow their hatred of Christ. Nor will the world ever grant that such men could know more of human wants and humanity's possibilities than he who loved them so much as to give himself a ransom for all.

Man has but a short time to live; but it is long enough to sow seeds that will yield immortal harvests of joy or woe. None lives so long who lives aright; none dies too soon who has met death in the path of duty. Virtue's measure is its intensity rather than its duration. He who at some critical moment has saved a nation is remembered forever, though nothing else of his life be ever heard of.

Discrimination is a faculty akin to comparison. It may be said to be practical comparison. But the proverb, "Comparisons are odious," indicates that discrimination should be very discriminative. For example: In the Baltimore Conference Bishop Granbery showed the discrimination when he pointed out to a member that a preacher could not claim to do a duty as a matter of courtesy. In the same Conference there were members who could not discriminate between Church crow and State crow. What is lawful to say in a public meeting may not be lawful in a church Conference, not because the moral of the question itself is changed, but the relation has changed. The converse also holds, viz: Things lawful in a church Conference wrong in a public assembly.

In these latter days there is great pressure upon Legislatures by ecclesiastical bodies to bring about legislation. The instrument is a dangerous one. At the same time it is necessary that public morality should be affected by the church. But there is a point where I think the leakage of moral influence, if stopped, would soon ensure such a volume of power to Christianity that legislators would be constrained to act. I mean that the churches have abundant work to do inside their own field killing crows for some time to come. What is the use of a Conference or Church petitioning Legislatures to pass laws against gambling when they do not enforce church rules against it? If the money spent by professors of religion in lotteries, futures, marriage associations, and other forms of gambling, were given me, I would engage to run the churches in many parts of our land. It is folly to say that when the State allows it we can not punish it. We can try. Until we have tried, let us not call for more law.

Now that it is reported that Cleveland was sworn into the presidency on the Bible his widowed mother gave him, it is expected that all the preachers' widows will at once give each of their sons a Bible to be used after many days.

In a very readable article on "Medical Work in China," in the Christian Observer (Louisville), Rev. H. M. Woods pays a generous tribute to Dr. Walter R. Lambuth. He says the hospital at Sochow is most efficiently managed, and that it is an important factor in our mission work. We make a short extract from his letter:

I can only mention the excellent impression this charitable institution has made on all who have seen it—on the 7,500 patients who have heard the gospel and had their bodily ailments relieved in its walls. These patients embraced all classes, high and low. There were four mandarins and others high in rank. The good name of this institution, and with it the "Jesus doctrine," it represents, will be carried in time over the empire by the soldiers who have there been treated.

—Rev. J. D. Haye and wife, from Pearlinton, were in the city this week.

—There will be 380 delegates in the next General Conference—an increase of 30 over the last.

—Rev. J. Fred Cox and wife, of the North-West Texas Conference, while in the city honored our sanctuary with a pleasant visit.

—Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, will preach the commencement sermon at Whitworth Female College in June.

—The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church will hold their annual spring meeting in St. Louis on Thursday, May 14.

—A new book by Rev. Dr. J. W. Buckley, entitled, "Oats or Wheat?—Common sense for Young Men," is announced as in press.

—Rev. H. C. Parrott, of the North Mississippi Conference, spent last week visiting the Exposition, and several times called at 112 Campbell.

—We see it stated that Prof. J. W. Dodd has resigned the chair of Hebrew in Vanderbilt University, to take effect at the close of the present term.

—The sum of $10,000, proceeds of the sale of Mr. Saukey's hymn books, will be applied to the erection of a building for a public library in Newcastle, Pa., his home.

—Rev. J. M. Weems, of Enterprise, spent several days in the city this week visiting the Exposition, and then went over to Pearlinton to assist in a revival meeting.

—Rev. Sam Jones is engaged to conduct a series of meetings with churches in Baltimore next October. Nothing succeeds like success. Every body is after him now.

—There are twenty persons who give to colleges aggregate over $2,000,000. Three of these rich men—Stephen Girard, John Hopkins and Asa Parker—gave over $14,000,000.

—Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman is again a member of the New York Conference. After an unpleasant experience as a semi-congregationalist, was glad to return to the itinerancy.

—It gives us pleasure to note in the Texas Advocate that Rev. S. A. Wright is greatly improved, and is speedily restoration to health and assured. He expects to return home in a few days.

—Sam Jones makes effective answer to his critics after this style: "Sometimes I let my bucket down too deep and it muddies the well in Nashville. Well, it was my bucket and their mud."

—Information reaches us that the Gabriel Hawkins, of the Paulding circuit, Mississippi Conference, is critically ill. The gravest apprehension is felt as to the result, but at account he was slightly improved.

—Mrs. W. H. Whitton, wife of Judge Whitton, of Springfield, Missouri, and youngest daughter of the late Bishop Marvly, died at her home on the 20th inst. Her remains were carried to St. Louis and interred in Bellefontaine Cemetery.

—Rev. H. R. Caldwell, of the Mississippi Conference, and one of the active friends of this Advocate, has been spending a week in New Orleans. He says a man had as well attempt to eat out Poydras Market to take in the Exposition.

—The New York Advocate says the preachers' meeting of that city "listened, last Monday morning, with very great delight to an address by Dr. Howard Henderson, on the 'Benevolences of the Church.' It was full of eloquence and wit."

—Rev. C. A. Fullwood, of the Florida Conference, paid our office a pleasant visit last week. He spoke tenderly of Bishop Parker's visit to his Conference, and the fine impression he made as a chief pastor. And such a memory he left in every conference.

—Gov. St. John, since his return from the South, admits that the temperance work is further advanced in the South than in the North. Mississippi has 930 saloons; Minnesota, with about the same population, has over 3,000 saloons. And other States show a like proportion.

—On our second page this week we publish the Montague Assembly programme for next summer. The list of subjects and distinguished speakers offers a rare intellectual and spiritual feast to all visitors. These are delightful summer heights. A large attendance is expected.

—The Chautauque Society of Fine Arts which has recently been established under the general direction of Dr. J. H. Vincent, with Mr. Frank Fowler, as director, is meeting with unexpected success. The facilities afforded by Meers, Cassell & Co., in the line of lesson-papers and books-in art, with the well-known ability of Mr. Fowler, guarantee the enterprise great success. Miss Gildred of the Critic, first suggested to Dr. Vincent, and afterward elaborated the plan of the C. S. F. A.

begin to work. One or more might memorialize the General Conference where the plan can be perfected and set a-working. I think it will meet very general favor, and save a vast amount of local distress.

Mr. Bushman is one of our intelligent laymen and Sunday-school superintendent of this place, and has wisely and luckily hit on this scheme of church indemnity. And I would like to say further, that being an old insurance agent of long experience in earlier years, I am familiar with this fire insurance business. I consider the present general rate of insurance on churches to be enormous; but the different companies combine and keep up the rate. Churches are the most profitable class of property to insure. Forty or fifty years ago the rate used to be from one-half to one per cent. Now it is from one and a quarter to two, or more. Why all rates of fire insurance have advanced so greatly I do not know. But by the above plan of Bro. Bushman's we can protect ourselves and keep our money. It is likely, if it could be accurately ascertained, that loss by fire on churches does not actually amount to one-quarter of one per cent. per annum.

YAZOO CITY, Mississipp.
Moonlight on the St. John's.

MR. EDITOR: A journey of two hundred miles up the classic St. John's of Florida—extending from Jacksonville to Sanford—if the soul has any poetry and song, it would be strange if it were not evoked. That wonderful river, for perhaps one hundred miles, resembles a series of coulees of lakes—broad and placid, with no islands—upon which our goodly craft moved as a "thing of life." Then in serpentine folds it turns upon itself and by a tortuous route passes through numerous lakes and boundless marshes we arrive at the beautiful and thrifty city of Sanford, situated on Lake Monroe. This river and these lakes are fringed with most luxuriant vegetation. Where the bank is a little elevated we see the unique cabbage palmetto (a species of palm) gracefully lifting its head far up, asserting its rights, its straight and symmetrical shaft and evergreen crown, reminding us forcibly of the beautiful and significant Scripture symbol: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree."

The lakes abound with fish, many of which were hauled out in a seine in the presence of quite a number of interested spectators. These lakes afford ample scope for bathing and sailing. To move on the bosom of this noble river, with a gibbous moon beaming down, gilding the wavelets and shedding her silvery beams upon the whole face of nature, and especially inspiring the wake of the boat, is quite inspiring.

A drive among the orange groves of the vicinity of Sanford shows us that beautiful and exciting industry now enlivening the attention of many people and their millions of money. Some of those orange groves are commanding fabulous prices—$5,000 per acre. And in that land of shells and flowers and fruits (orange, banana, pineapple, etc., in perfection), to meet old friends and form new ones, is a delightful episode in our life.

Bro. Partridge, stationed at Jacksonville, is faithful and true, and I learn ministers to an interesting congregation. His church and parsonage are "beautiful for situation." While our old friend, Rev. H. B. Frazee, presiding elder of Live Oak district, formerly of Louisiana Conference, is busy and burning with zeal in prosecuting his glorious and heaven-appointed work in the blessed Master's kingdom. They have a beautiful home near Jacksonville, with a valuable orange grove. Sister Frazee dwelt much on the scenes and reminiscences of the past until we all felt our time was too short.

On leaving, Bro. Frazee placed in my hands a small package, which proved to be a few pieces of pine knot, light wood and a half dozen matches. My brief stay seemed suggestive, hence the package with the interpretation written on it: "Did you come after a chunk of fire?"

Centenary College Alumni.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to make an earnest call through your paper upon all the graduates of Centenary College of Louisiana. For several years, at its annual meeting, the Alumni Association has re-enacted a purpose to endow a chair in the college. Up to date, however, nothing has been done, owing mainly, perhaps, to the fact that no definite plan for immediate action has been suggested.

The time for us to act has come, unless we are willing for all the other friends of the college to leave us ignominiously in the rear. Under the impulse of the centennial of American Methodism money enough to put the buildings in good repair was contributed and to raise at least eight thousand dollars towards an endowment.

Rev. T. A. S. Adams, the newly-elected president, brings rare qualifications for the position in thorough and varied culture, in a life experience as an educator and in a polished, yet robust, Christian manhood. Above all, he has taken hold of his duties so vigorously and so judiciously as to show that he means to succeed.

Fellow-graduates, let us help and help at once in the good work. The chair most needed in the college now is that of chemistry and natural philosophy. There are now living about one hundred and forty graduates. A yearly contribution of six dollars from each would, for the present, secure the services of a well-equipped professor for that chair.

I propose that every alumnus of the college execute and forward by earliest opportunity to Prof. W. F. Norworthy, secretary of the Alumni Association, Jackson, La., worded thus:

On demand I promise to pay to Rev. T. A. S. Adams, president of Centenary College, or his successor in office, One Hundred Dollars for the purpose of endowing a chair to be called the alumni professorship of natural science in Centenary College of Louisiana. It is understood that the principal of this note is not to be demanded, so long as I promptly pay to said president of the college, on or before the first day of June of each year, the sum of six dollars as an annual interest thereon.

(Signed)
My note goes forward to Prof. Norworthy by this mail, and I hope that those of the one hundred and forty living graduates will follow in rapid succession.

C. O. ANDREWS.

Help the Pastor.

Help the pastor to draw a congregation. It is a great work to draw a crowd in these days. Many seem to think this the great end of preaching. If the preacher can only crowd the house and fill the aisles and the gallery every time he blows a blast on the gospel trumpet he has the necessary qualification for a modern pastor. But why leave all this drawing to the minister? Many a minister has found members in his church who could drive away more people than he could draw, do what he might. And they never think, poor souls, that while they are driving away men they are doing what they can to break down the pastor. Why not the church gather in and help the pastor? We have been told of a self-constituted society in one church called the Invitation Society. It consisted of eight or ten members, and sought merely to invite people to go church. Within sixteen months the members of this society succeeded in persuading two hundred persons to abandon their Sabbath-breaking habits and become regular attendants upon the worship of God. This is a very simple organization, inexpensive, not burdensome, and useful without; far more useful than most of the so-called aid societies one meets with. It is a very proper and polite thing to do to invite a neighbor to go to church. And in doing this one may save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins.

Help the pastor in all the useful measures he adopts. Some of his methods may not be the best. You might be able to suggest much better. But infinitely more good will be done by co-operating in the measures he sees fit to use than by criticizing and trying to defeat them. It is an easy matter to say "It won't work," and by talking it down you may prevent it from working. What then? You have done no good. You have hindered good from being done. You have hurt your pastor and grieved the Spirit. How often has the pastor's heart been gladdened by some one saying to him in reference to some measure which he has taken with fear and trembling: "I am so glad that you did that. It is just the thing. We will all stand by you and help you out." These are fellow-helpers in the truth.

Help the pastor in your home. His usefulness in the home is sometimes neutralized by parents, even when they do not intend it. The hearts of the unconverted members of the family are naturally set against religion. They are looking for some excuse. A word of unfavorable criticism concerning the pastor in the presence of those children will effectually bolt their hearts against his appeals. If you have a thought against the man who preaches the everlasting gospel to your children, do not breathe it in their hearing, but use the influence of your parental love to open the door of their hearts to the truth as it shall fall from his lips. You can help him there as no one else can.

Help the pastor by your testimony. Help set for the defence of the gospel in your community. He is the advocate, pleading the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ before men. You are witnesses called into the court of society, and the pastor asks for your testimony. If you know anything in this case; if Jesus Christ has saved you from sin, comforted you in affliction and delivered you from trouble, and you sit still and refuse to testify, you weaken the hands of your pastor and grieve the Lord who bought you. Every soul that bears witness to the saving power of Jesus Christ strengthens the hands and encourages the heart of his pastor. But our most emphatic and telling testimony is delivered through our actions. The pastor declares to the world, upon the authority of the word of God, that the grace of our Lord is able to save from bad temper, ungodly dispositions and unholiness. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. Every one who holds a membership in the church makes a profession of religion in the eyes of the world. If you manifest these same evil dispositions while you continue to be a member of the church, you do as much as in you lies to neutralize the effect of the sermon and hinder the gospel. Help the pastor by the testimony of a holy life. Even those who never hear a sermon and seldom see the minister may help him. The writer knew an invalid, who had not left her room for thirty years, and had not been free from pain for one waking hour during all that time, and yet she was one of the most efficient helpers the pastor had in all the region where she lived. She was full of faith and the Holy Ghost. A smile of heavenly peace shone through the dark lines which pain had drawn across her face. Her words of exhortation and spiritual wisdom were a benediction to all who came into her room. Many went to her with their troubles and doubts because they had learned that the secret of the Lord was with her. The careless were awakened by her exhortations, the serious were led to trust in Christ by her instructions and the wayward were brought into the narrow way by her prayers. At thou afflicted? Go and do likewise. Art thou blessed with health and prosperity? Remember that to whom much is given, from him much will be required.—W. C. Advocate.

Our Nashville Letter.

MR. EDITOR: It should be gratifying to our church to know that there is a steady, normal increase in our missionary contributions. This indicates that we are scriptural in our aims and objects. I present a few figures indicative of the advancement we are making in this great department of church work. For the missionary year of 1882-83 our contributions to foreign missions amounted to $169,272 32—an advance of $57,000 on any former year of the Board; for 1883-84, $183,962 81; for 1884-85, $190,619 27. Could the church realize that the demands made upon the Board for men and means to place them in fields needing their services are increasing faster than our increase in contributions, we believe there would be an advance movement along the entire line and that in the next four years our contributions would be doubled. Surely, we ought to average fifty cents a member for the cause of foreign missions.

The sad news has reached us of the death of Mrs. Minnie Marvin Winton, daughter of the late lamented Bishop Marvin and wife of Judge Winton, of Springfield, Mo. We learn that she had been in delicate health for some months past. A cultured, lovely Christian character, she adorned the home circle and was a conspicuous figure in every good word and work for the church. She will be sadly missed.

One of our strongest and most devoted workers in the far West, Rev. H. S. Lee, of the Denver Conference, died a few days since. For a number of years he labored in the Holston and Tennessee Conferences, and was one of our most efficient and popular preachers. His work on Denver circuit was flourishing under his oversight. Our church mourns the loss of one of her best men.

Rev. J. W. Burke, of Macon, Ga., was in this city a few days ago visiting his son, who is a Vanderbilt student. He delivered a good sermon at West End Church, on Sunday, April 26.

Dr. R. A. Young, while attending the sessions of the Church Extension Board, in Louisville, saw and heard the celebrated revivalist, Thomas Harrison, who is conducting a wonderful meeting at the Walnut Street Methodist Church. It is Dr. Young's opinion that in all the essentials of a gospel minister, Sam Jones is far ahead of Thomas Harrison.

Miss Lochie Rankin, one of our missionaries to China, is now on a visit to her Tennessee home. Our State is proud to claim two such able workers in the foreign field as the Misses Lochie and Dora Rankin.

The revival influence is still felt in mighty power in our local Methodist Churches. A rich harvest of souls is being brought into the heavenly garner.

Rev. Gross Alexander, the popular pastor of West End Methodist Church, was called to Louisville, Ky., April 27, by the death of his brother.

Rev. H. J. Brown, of the Western Conference, has been on a visit to Nashville, and reports favorably as to the outlook of our church in Kansas.

At this writing, Saturday, May 2, the Bishops are holding their annual meeting. Arrangements have been made for them to preach in the following churches to-morrow: At Foster Street, 11 A. M., Bishop Keener; at Elm Street, 11 A. M., Bishop Wilson; at Tulip Street, 11 A. M., Bishop Hargrove; at McKendree, at 3 P. M., Bishop Graubert, a memorial sermon on Bishops Pierce and Parker; at 7:30 P. M., sermon by Bishop Hargrove. By the time your paper goes to press all of our connectional Boards will be in session. A large delegation of ministers and laymen are expected in this city at these annual meetings.

Dr. Safford, of Vanderbilt University, has been on a tour with his class in geology to the western portion of middle Tennessee, examining the many valuable products of iron and coal in that section. Such practical work is a great help to the young men. They take such a tour every year.

W. J. Knott, of Mississippi, won the medal of the Dialectic Literary Society in the declamation contest at Vanderbilt University a few evenings since.

All of them, except such as were anonymous, were most carefully considered and most conscientiously acted upon. They were then referred to a sub-committee, consisting of the Rev. Drs. John Hall, John A. Broadus and John Potts, who were requested to embody in a compact form the views and conclusions brought out by the discussion. This sub-committee afterward presented the subjoined report, which was adopted as the sense of the entire Lesson Committee:

Having been appointed as a sub-committee to report upon communications addressed to the International Sunday-School Lesson Committee, we beg to offer the following statement:

The memorials and other communications, through its officers or members, were submitted and carefully read by the body. Many contained strong expressions of appreciation of the lessons selected, and acknowledgments of the good effected, through the blessing of God, were gratefully noted. It is hardly needful to say that there was not unanimity in the recommendations thus conveyed. A large number of friends had signed petitions with a uniform call for Quarterly Temperance Lessons. These came from various sections of the country, and were prepared without any regard to denominations. Appreciating the earnestness with which the cause of temperance reform is being prosecuted, the committee, while including the Scripture references to the subject in their course, have arranged to suggest—for the year for which they have made their selection—lessons on temperance and on missions, except for the last quarter, to be used where it is deemed best by the managers of schools in the room of, or in addition to the Quarterly Review.

Suggestions have been earnestly made to the committee on a variety of matters which had been most carefully discussed in the progress of arranging the previous courses. To some friends, for example, short lessons seem desirable. They are so to those who have great facilities for preparation and ample intellectual furniture; but, unappreciated, large numbers are not so furnished, and then we are especially bound to consider. Many such teachers find all they have to say upon a short lesson exhausted while time yet remains. In like manner, modifications of our plan have been suggested, the carrying out of which would involve the appearance of settling matters about which the churches are not yet agreed, or would involve what we are precluded from entering upon by the constitution of the committee.

The most careful consideration has been given to the earnest wishes of the friends who have thus communicated with us. Information was obtained not only concerning the condition of things in the great centres of intellectual activity, but also in less favored but wide regions, both East, West and South. The proportion of lessons from the Old Testament has been deemed undue by some; but the weight of evidence before the committee was to the effect that great and widespread good had been the result of the revived and earnest study of the Old Testament portion of the Canon.

To some there is an appearance of abruptness in the transition from passage to passage; but this is rendered inevitable by the amount of Scripture over which the mind of the pupils has to be carried as intelligently as possible, and within the time to which the instructions under which it acts. In a book so full of treasure as is the divine word, every plumed bird finds that which to itself is luxuriously dear; and that others should seem to fail to realize this preciousness appears unaccountable. The gentlemen placed on the committee, from different branches of God's one great church, with widely differing environments, and all of them practically engaged in some form or other of Sunday-school work, have been unanimous in these decisions, and have done their utmost in view of all the objects committed to their hands to bring the topics and portions of the word, most fitted, on the whole, to the end in view, into use; and they commit their work to the kindly forbearance of their fellow-laborers (for they well know that all can not see alike in such matters), and to the good blessing of the Father of lights.

For the third term, of seven years' study, the Lesson Committee agreed upon three years in the Old Testament, and four years in the New, with an alternation once in six months, save in a few exceptional cases.

The selections made for 1887 will be given to the public as soon as possible after our corresponding members in Great Britain and France shall have considered them, and shall have informed us what modifications they may think desirable.

The ADVOCATE advocates "Christianity in earnest."

The most liberal and loyal church members are ADVOCATE readers. Mark that.

This ADVOCATE would be a strong leverage to every pastor in his work if introduced into all the families of his charge. Try it.

The editor left on Monday afternoon for Nashville to attend the annual meeting of the Board of Missions. Correspondence from there may be expected in our next issue.

The article on our first page by Dr. C. G. Andrews, advocating an alumni professorship in Centenary College, we hope will find a ready and generous response. The sons of that grand old alma mater owe it to themselves to liberally endow a chair in the institution.

As we go to press the war cloud still hangs over Europe; but it is not so threatening as a week ago. It is now hoped that peace will be preserved. And for this gratifying result the world will be indebted to the broad Christian statesmanship of Mr. Gladstone. His speech on the occasion of asking a vote of credit of $55,000,000 was one of overpowering eloquence, and the vote was taken without division—almost the only instance in English parliamentary history.

The New England Conference refused to accede to the request of Rev. William McDonald to appoint him editor of the Christian Witness, and gave him a supernumerary relation. That action is significant and suggestive. Unless the paper had been endorsed by the General Conference, it was manifestly wrong to officially appoint any man as its editor. But if able to do full editorial work, he was hardly a disciplinary supernumerary. But the too ready appointment of men to private enterprises, whether schools, newspapers or agencies, needs some General Conference attention and legislation.

For the benefit of those Methodist parents who want more social freedom for their children, and are thereby teaching them aversion to the church of their baptism, we quote the ringing words of Bishop Huntington, of the Protestant Episcopal Church. It gives us the more pleasure to publish these utterances, because the reputed larger liberality of the Bishop's church is the perpetual vexation and aspiration of worldly-minded Methodists. We are charged with being "straight-laced," "old fogey," "righteous overmuch," etc., because like latitudinarianism is not encouraged or allowed. The children are consoled with because they have such a hard time and so few pleasures. And in consequence, it is asserted, the church loses many valuable members. We hold the ministry of that communion largely responsible for religious worldliness. If more pronounced against it, and if their preaching re-echoed more positively the deliverances of their conventions and councils and the pastoral letters of their Bishops, we would witness a much-needed check to the prevalence of worldly conformity that is so destructive of true piety. Bishop Huntington speaks out in words of truth and soberness:

"If it had been proposed a few years ago to open to each of our cities and villages large and attractive places of amusement where, at night, any number of persons of both sexes could come together for an exciting kind of sensual pleasure, with the freest possible latitude as to acquaintanceship and intercourse, and with no possibility of excluding the worst elements of society therefrom, the whole moral and religious sense of the community would have been shocked and outraged. Yet we have this very thing at the corners of the streets, and it is claimed that it keeps one class of our youths from grosser dissipation. It is, however, forgotten that another class is drawn from safety to immorality, or even from virtue to vice. Doubtless, discrimination and moderation would correct the evil. But while virtuous and benevolent ladies in the city are taking praiseworthy pains to save female honor in India, China and Japan, ought they to leave the other more important work close by undone?"

Influential Church Members.

That congregation needs sympathy and much prayer that contains many or any so-called "influential members." They are a distinct class, and are readily recognized. They are not noted for excessive piety or for loyalty to the church except in enterprises under their own leadership. The pastor is subject to their censorship, and according to their approval is acceptable to the congregation. If they disapprove of his course or discourse, the fear becomes general that a change is necessary or the church will suffer damage. They act as a sort of ecclesiastical weather-vane to the membership at large. When they lift a danger signal the brethren reef sail and look out for breakers.

Such "influence" is usually a hurt and hindrance instead of a help and hope to the church. It prevents the healthy development of ecclesiastical responsibility in the membership at large and enforces the wants of a church by a false standard. Habitual deference to the dictation of one or two "influential members," so-called, destroys independence of individual character and causes valuable talent to sleep in sinful inactivity. And, as they are ignorant of the spiritual wants of a church and community, acquiescence to their wishes in pastoral administration is violence to the work of the Spirit and at variance with the solemn imperatives of ministerial fidelity.

This "influence" is the result of financial, social or political prestige. The brethren who "serve tables" are careful to conserve, and not offend it. It is a timely and blessed relief, especially at the fourth Quarterly Conference. And, in consequence, the "influential members" aforesaid assert their claims to shape the policy of pastoral administration.

With this brief portrayal of a fact of common observation we offer some practical suggestions:

1. The burden and administration of any local church will rest upon a few. The proportion of active to non-active members is a revelation of sorrow and loss of power. That is the ideal church in which every member is a cross bearer and not a single soldier sleeps on his arms. But the ideal is not the actual. The history of every church shows that a few are zealous while the many are at ease in Zion.

2. The character of a church is determined by these leaders. If they are intelligently pious, liberal and connectionally loyal, so will be the congregation. On the contrary, if they are anti-missionary in their sentiments, illiberal in their offerings and disconnectional in the ecclesiastical convictions, the church will be like-minded. All this variety of church life may be seen in one presiding elder's district, or on one circuit of four appointments.

3. Consecrated common sense can only be trusted to lead a congregation. If good men of upright lives, consistent conversation and intelligent zeal are placed in official position, whether poor or rich, their influence will be wholesome and they will represent a pure Christianity. And in all the chief councils of the church political or other position ought not to determine the appointment of representatives. If with distinguished honor there is united true piety, they may command recognition; but the latter, and not the former, should be the chief qualification.

4. The mission of Methodism is to all classes of society. While we have carried the gospel to the poor, we are none the less debtors to the rich and great. To the "influential" we must carry the same solemn message as to the obscure peasant. They are possibly the most sadly neglected, spiritually, of any class in our social organism. We may warm and instruct the humble when we hesitate to tell the rich and great of their sins and their need of a Savior. While, therefore, we condole with a church afflicted with godless "influential members," our solicitude should be to see them become Christ's real disciples.

Rev. J. V. Penu, writing from Natchez, Miss., under date of April 27, ultimo, thus reports a Pentecost in his charge:

Wesley Chapel is ablaze with a grand revival. Bro. H. D. Kimball, of New Orleans, has been preaching during the past week with great power. The church was jammed full last night. Many accessions and conversions. More next week.

The Boston-Exception.

At the recent session of the New England Conference Bishop Foss created a real sensation by changing the pastorship of the People's Church, of Boston. For nine successive years the Rev. Dr. J. W. Hamilton had been in charge of that church, and his removal created some dissatisfaction. Dr. Hamilton projected that enterprise as a mission, and carried it forward to a gratifying success. It is an immense structure in a central location, capable of accommodating the largest congregation of any Methodist Church in the city. Between three and four thousand people can be comfortably seated within its spacious walls. And in the meantime the membership was increased to about six hundred.

The continuance of Dr. Hamilton with one congregation for nine years was allowed by that provision of the Discipline which gives a Bishop authority to reappoint "missionaries to neglected portions of our cities" for a longer term than three years.

The conviction has been growing for some time that the Boston exception was a violation of the letter and spirit of the law; that the pastor was in no proper, technical sense a missionary, and that his continuance had a tendency to unsettle itinerant fidelity. The influence doubtless was disloyal, and the Bishop wisely made the change. To the pastor's credit, however, it must be said he gracefully accepted his new appointment and made a manly address to his old flock, urging them to connectional loyalty and gracefully introducing and endorsing his successor.

Church Extension.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PARENT BOARD, 1885.

The Connectional Board met in annual session at Louisville, Ky., April 23, with Hon. J. S. Litgow, the president, in the chair. Other members were present as follows: Presley Megalar, David Morton, G. W. Procter, Bishops Granbery and Hargrove, Dr. W. T. Harris, Dr. F. B. Carroll, Rev. H. C. Settle, Rev. J. C. Morris, Hon. C. S. Grubbs, James G. Carter, Esq., and Mr. John L. Wheat. The annual reports of the secretary and treasurer, covering the entire administration of the year, were patiently considered in detail, and plans for enlarging the resources of the Board were projected. Provision was made for the necessary office-help of the secretary, in order that he may travel through the churches and present the increasing claims and needs of church extension.

Two points in the admirable report of the special committee, Bishop Hargrove was the chairman, are as follows: One, urging each pastor to report the excess of his collections over the regular assessment as a special Centenary contribution to general church extension, in accordance with Bishop McTear's suggestion, published some weeks ago, entitled "Two Lines of Work for 1885;" the other we give in the chairman's own words:

Since the largest utility of the edifices we erect requires, under our present economy, that accompanying structure—the parsonage—for which the church has never yet organized any specific agency; that the Board invoke the co-operation of the women of the church in the department of domestic and household comfort—a department directly in the sphere of their activity and enterprise, and having a correlation to church extension as direct and imposing as the work in which their potency has already been demonstrated in connection with the missionary cause; that we appeal to our devoted and godly women to signalize the Centenary by the inauguration of this most needed measure, and ask the next General Conference to equip them for this work by a matured organization. That they can brighten and bless the abodes too often made dark and dreary for those who have borne light and hope to others. Too often the home in heaven has been pointed out by those who have had none provided for themselves on earth. The wives and children of the homeless itinerant make an appeal to the mothers and daughters of every Methodist home made blessed by the gifts their endurance has dispensed.

The by-laws were so amended as to provide that in future the annual meeting shall be held on the second Thursday in April in each year, and that in addition there shall be three stated meetings in each year—on the second Thursday in July, October and January. It was also agreed that one-fifth of all funds reaching the treasury through the assessment of the year and one-half of all special donations shall be passed to the Loan Fund. That was wise action. It is very important to increase the Loan Fund to a half million dollars with all possible speed. When that is accomplished, the work of the Board will be unembarrassed and its beneficence more manifest in each yearly report.

"Southern Schools."

This is the title of an article in the Educational Gazette, published at Rochester, N. Y., by F. M. Thrasher, in which he gives an unfavorable account of our schools in the city of New Orleans. The evident animus of the communication is not very creditable to the writer. Some statements made are at variance with the facts, and what is true has such a setting as to make a false impression. The bill of indictment may be summed up in three counts—poorly constructed and inadequately furnished school buildings, bad financial management and invidious discrimination against the colored schools and pupils. Indeed, this last is the most serious complaint. He says: "After carefully going over the whole ground of colored schools I have come to the conclusion that what life they do have is simply from the natural desire of the pupils to get an education, and not because their so-called white friends of the South desire to have them educated or are willing to assist them." That is a grave charge, and, if true, our people deserve censure. But what are the facts?

To the Hon. J. G. Parham, president of the City School Board, and Prof. Ulric Bettison, superintendent of public schools, we applied for information, from which we make the following statement: The school buildings are nearly all substantially built of brick, of modern designs, and are of imposing appearance. These McDonough buildings, so called in honor of the philanthropist whose beneficence made their construction possible, are divided equally among the races. They have each the same number and of like appointments and furniture. The teachers in charge of these schools are of the same grade and are selected in the same way. Their examinations are so conducted as to prevent any possible discrimination as to color. The examination papers are marked by figures, and not names, so that the committee is unable to tell the person or color of the author. This eliminates the prejudice complained of and secures selections solely on the ground of merit.

The books used are the same for colored and white schools. Of course, these are not furnished free to the pupils. They purchase their own books. The poverty of parents may occasionally cause some embarrassment in this regard, but not sufficiently to invite complaint or appeal for charity.

The several colored schools are graded up to the Southern University, which has an elaborate curriculum and is under superb management. The pupils in the white schools advance by regular graduation up to the high schools, which are scarcely so well equipped or have so extensive a course of study as the Southern University for blacks. If, therefore, distinction is made, it is in favor of the colored pupils.

The salaries of white and colored teachers in the several grades are exactly the same. There is but one pay roll, and all share alike in the disbursements. As to the complaint of arrearages in salaries, some words of explanation are necessary. The School Board is rapidly bringing order out of a financial chaos bequeathed to them by a post bellum regime whose history is too well known to allow repetition. The funds available are inadequate for the demands; but the future is bright with promise. There are 17,000 pupils in our public schools, taught by 400 teachers, and only $200,000 is appropriated for their maintenance.

Among the best representative men of the community are members of the Board, and their zeal for the efficient administration of the schools is worthy of all commendation. These facts are a sufficient refutation of the correspondent's complaint. We may yet be amid the days of small things, according to our critic; but men of broader views, like Dr. Mayo, speak in a different tone and spirit.

Dr. Young in Louisville.

MR. EDITOR: By invitation I spent the last three days in Louisville, Ky. Dr. Morton's office is a pleasant and well-regulated room. Nothing ever gets into the wrong box or drawer in that establishment. The church extension secretary is no "budget full of blunders," but a man trained and equipped for the development of this great work. And has not he developed it!

The Board of Church Extension was in annual session—all present. Three sessions a day for three days and nights did the work. When they reached the final conclusion one weary Bishop arose, and said, "Brethren, with all my heart I move we do adjourn." The Methodist pulpits of the city were divided up among us yesterday. The Mexican Border Mission was remembered in the list of appropriations, and I came away satisfied.

The business of building, or helping to build, churches in desolate places should now be relegated to the Board of Church Extension. It was created for that purpose. It is three years old, and in perfect working order. The Board of Missions has as much as it can do to support our representatives in the foreign fields without undertaking to build churches anywhere, except in China, Mexico and Brazil.

The Rev. Thomas Harrison, "the boy preacher," is in Louisville. I met him twice—once at dinner, again at supper. He was born in Boston, is thirty-two years old, five feet and five inches in height, and weighs one hundred and sixteen pounds. He parts his hair in the middle, shaves clean and wears his coat "all buttoned to the chin." In the parlor he is nervous, has a restless eye, chops his words and talks by fits and starts. Bro. Harrison has great reputation as a revivalist—is invited from city to city, where committees, carriages, homes and immense congregations await him. So it has been for sixteen years. He holds four services a day for six weeks at a stretch, and seems never to be tired. If ever any evangelist is worth one hundred dollars a week, it is he.

Talk of Maffit! His manner in the pulpit was repose itself compared to Harrison's. He stamps his foot, he claps his hands, keeps time, walks all over the pulpit, runs all over the altar, leaps the railing, darts into the congregation, stands on the seats and holds forth everywhere, everywhenever. He reads, sings, prays, takes up collections, exhorts, tells his experience, and is anecdotal without. Nor does he omit to make the usual interesting allusion to himself and his achievements. His list of regular communicants in the church who have died and gone to perdition is a long one, and is terribly alarming. Well, wherein lies his power? He is converted himself and knows how to tell the way. He has pluck before men, and power with God in prayer. He is furiously earnest, and the Holy Spirit chooses to accompany his words to human hearts. He has been tolling terribly in the vineyard of the Lord from childhood, and God has owned and crowned his labors with the conversion of thousands. I heard him preach no regular sermon, as we do, with a text on top; but "many things in his exhortation preached he unto the people." He calls the serious forward to the altar for instruction and prayers. He believes that of all methods this is the best, and he is right. I predict there will be hundreds of converts before this letter is published. The preachers and people attend in great numbers. The singing is grand, the helpers are abundant, and their prayers indicate a present and powerful faith. May the harvest be great!

Bro. Harrison seems to take great interest in Rev. Sam Jones—asked me several questions. Of course, I grew somewhat luminous on "our Sam," and wound up with what I know of the Knoxville meeting. He had not heard of anything like it. There being no room in Walnut Street Church for hundreds of us on Sunday night, Mr. Cochran and I went to hear Dr. Willis in Broadway Tabernacle. Thence to Nashville on the first train after midnight.

APRIL 27, 1885.

The following note from Rev. C. Brown, at Sedalia, Mo., April 27, brings intelligence of a great revival in his church:

We are now closing up the fourth week of our meeting here; but we are not closing the meeting itself. This is the third revival meeting since my pastorate of this church began. Of the three all say this is the most potent in its results, awakening and converting. The church is triumphant. I have never known a better and more faithful class of Christian workers. We have had between 90 and 100 conversions, and about 60 additions to our church. The Holy Ghost, in most wonderful demonstrations, is present at every service.

Rev. C. N. Terry, presiding elder of the Sedalia district, North Mississippi Conference, announces his district Conference in another column and thus writes of an interesting work of grace:

Bro. Thomas has a splendid meeting going on at Batesville. It commenced about ten days ago, and results of the first week were eighteen or twenty conversions, a great and increasing interest. Doubtless you will hear more from this meeting after awhile. Bro. R. Gore is with him, and is doing good work.

Rev. W. B. Murrah, the pastor, gives further news from the great revival at Winona in the following note:

We are now in the midst of a powerful revival in Winona. The whole town is moved, and we are realizing the most hopeful results. We can not estimate the number of conversions. Members who were almost lost have been reclaimed, and twenty-five have joined our church. We are under great obligations to Bro. Bowen, Bachman, Hobbins, Burroughs and Lagrone for the valuable help they have given us.

Death of Rev. R. M. Crowson.

The following note from Rev. M. Johnston brings the mournful tidings of another watchman having fallen at his post:

I drop you this note to inform you of the death of Bro. R. M. Crowson, which took place at his home in Sparta, La., on the morning of the twenty-seventh instant, of dropsy. He died as the servant of God, in his armor on, without a struggle. His request to me was, "Tell his brethren I am ready." A more tender notice will appear soon.

North Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society.

MR. EDITOR: Please give out that the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, will hold its annual meeting at Aberdeen, June 26 and 27. Sunday June 28, special missionary service will be held by one of our ministers. It is earnestly desired that each ministry send a delegate. Could they realize the importance of this, they would be no hesitancy about the matter. If I could, would say something to urge them not to neglect it. Suffice it to say, the delegates will not regret making the sacrifice necessary to attend. I speak from experience.

Names of delegates should be sent at an early day to Miss C. Houghton, corresponding secretary, Aberdeen, Miss., that arrangements may be made for their entertainment; also to Mrs. J. B. St. Verona, Miss.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. M. M. THURMOND,

"Wood Notes."

In response to my call for subscriptions to "Wood Notes," I have received a number of letters enclosing money, or stating that they had forwarded subscriptions to the publisher; but as some have expressed their impatience at the delay of appearance, I offer an explanation. If within sixty days the entire is not contributed for the publication of "Wood Notes," the money subscribed shall be refunded and the withdrawn from the Publisher's House. Those ever intending to subscribe for my book can do so with perfect safety, as the money will be returned if the book is not published. Please do not send subscriptions to my address, but address Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

CANTON, MISS., May 1, 1885.

—The just published Year Book of Boston University gives the number of students in all departments as 620. Last year it was two years ago, 555; three years ago, 505. There has thus been a steady and healthy growth for four years. Of the present total, no less than 100 have already received literary, title or professional degrees, and a hundred and one bachelors of Philosophy.

—The skating-rink craze has reached the Sandwich Islands.

—Prof. W. F. Norworthy, of Centenary College, was in the city on Monday.

—Rev. T. D. Lewis, of the Louisville Conference, died recently at his home near Auburn.

—United States Minister Lowell will unveil the bust of Samuel Taylor Coleridge in Westminster Abbey today.

—The books and tracts of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse have had a wonderful sale. Over one million copies have been sold.

—The Sunday-School Board met on Monday, of this week, at Nashville. A report of their proceedings will be given next week.

—Revs. J. S. Oakley and S. D. Long, of the North Mississippi Conference, were among the clerical visitors to the Exposition last week.

—Mrs. R. J. Fisher, one of the grand men of Methodism in Texas, is in the city and is stopping at the Windsor Hotel.

—Jenny Lind is engaged to sing for the benefit of the Children's Infirmary in Norwich, England. This will be her first public appearance in twenty-two years.

—Revs. J. H. Stone and J. D. Harper, of the Louisiana Conference, have been spending some days in the city, and were welcome callers at the ADVOCATE office.

—There are seven Congregational churches that have each over four hundred members. They range from 458 to 2,618, and their contributions to benevolent purposes from $2,490 to $18,000.

—It is stated that the Vatican is preparing to hold another general council next spring, to consider the internal administration of the Roman Church. The Pope has formulated the programme.

—Bishop Wilson reports himself as "steadily improving," though not strong as yet. If his restless spirit can be content with longer quiet, it will hasten his recovery and lengthen the years of his great service to the church.

—It is said that the Princess of Wales is the first of her success who has ever attained the distinction of an honorary degree. On the occasion of her recent visit, the Royal University of Ireland conferred upon her the Doctorate of Music. And so the world moves.

—Rev. A. B. Lee, of the South Carolina Conference, died April 18, and Rev. H. S. Lee, of the Denver Conference, died at Denver, April 26. The one was a veteran in the field, the other a leader in the strength of his days, and both consecrated soldiers of the cross.

—The Bishop of Exeter has been preceded by the congregation of Christ Church, Hampstead, of which he was vicar for thirty years, with a check for £1,000; his late parishioners having also decided to erect a mission hall, to be called "The Bickersteth Memorial Hall."

—We very much regret our absence from the office when Rev. H. W. Bays, pastor of the Broad Street Church, Knoxville, Tenn., called at our office. We wanted to inquire about the after-revival spirit of Knoxville Methodism. From other sources, however, we learn that the work of Rev. Sam Jones abides.

—Rev. Beverly Caradine, pastor of St. Charles Avenue Church, has moved his family over on the sea-coast for the summer, and will spend much time there himself, recuperating his health. He needs rest, and his congregation have shown generous appreciation of his zealous pastoral labors among them.

—The Methodist preachers' meeting of St. Louis decided to have a series of Sunday evening discourses on the cardinal doctrines of the church. The sermon on "The Witness of the Spirit" was preached by our friend, Rev. Dr. Felix R. Hill, in St. John's Church. It is fully reported in the Republican and is a fresh, learned discussion.

—We are indebted to Dr. C. F. Deems for a neat little pamphlet entitled, "Manual of the Church of the Strangers." It contains a history of that enterprise and a list of the membership. What a prodigious worker and successful pastor has been Charles F. Deems. His pastoral success in the great American metropolis is our only compensation for his loss to Southern Methodism.

—The friends of Rev. Dr. Osborn, the venerable ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference in England, have arranged to present him a handsome testimonial at the close of the present Methodist year, on the occasion of his retirement from the chair of theology at Richmond. A large sum of money has already been subscribed, and the offering will be a worthy tribute to noble worth.

—The Rev. Thos. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference, and stationed at Yazoo City, was married to Miss Matilda J. Jones, youngest daughter of the Rev. Jno. G. Jones, at Hazlehurst, on April 23, the interesting ceremony being performed by the venerable father of the bride, assisted by her brother, the Rev. Jno. A. B. Jones. We congratulate our young friends and invoke the Father's blessing upon this union of hearts.

—As evidence of the extensive postal service of the United States, the following figures will be of interest: The total issue of postage stamps, stamped envelopes and postal cards during April aggregated 271,008,819, as against 204,645,200 during the corresponding month the previous year. The number of stamps issued showed an increase of 13,000,000, while the issue of postal cards fell off 4,000,000, and stamped envelopes 4,000,000.

—During several days last week the American Medical Association was in session in this city—in many respects the most notable gathering of this year of great assemblies. Many of the distinguished scientists and specialists of the nation were present, and the addresses on various surgical, medical and sanitary topics were of intense interest even to laymen. The Nestor of the Association, and the recipient of special honor, was Dr. Davis, of Chicago, a brother-in-law of the late Bishop Linus Parker.

—Twenty-seven Mormon polygamists were indicted recently under the Edmunds law, and all Mormonism has been struck with terror. John Taylor and George Q. Cannon, Mormon leaders, were not present at the recent annual convention, but from some hiding place issued an address, bewailing the persecutions they are called upon to endure. Since the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, we see no hope for polygamist Mormonism except to emigrate or go into liquidation.

—The Bishops met in their room at the Publishing House, Nashville, on Friday of last week. The plan of episcopal visitation for the ensuing year will be given in our next issue. Since their last meeting two of their colleagues have fallen on sleep. They were each assigned full work and went forth with unabated zeal, but one was never able to preside at another Conference, and the other was called hence just before the last Conference of his round. With depleted ranks and sad hearts they met again. We pray that a special Providence may assist them in the increased labors of the coming year.

—We have noticed in its rounds of the press a certain utterance attributed to Dr. J. P. Newman, with numberless denunciations of every variety and degree of vigor. Not crediting the report, we carefully examined it from our columns. In speaking of Gen. Grant's illness and faith, Dr. Newman was reported to have said: "Great men can gain nothing from religion; but religion can gain much from great men." It now transpires that he said just the reverse, namely, "that religion can gain nothing from great men, but great men can gain much from religion." Our contemporaries who "always did think Parson Newman a toady, etc.," will now have the pleasure of a retraction. It is well to know whereof we affirm.

—We are glad to note the progress of the revival in our Nashville churches. At Tullip Street, Dr. Leftwich, pastor, there have been 160 conversions. At Elm Street, Rev. J. P. McFerrin, pastor, there have been seventy conversions, and the work continues. At Foster Street, Rev. J. D. Scott, pastor, between 60 and 70 have professed faith in Christ and larger results are anticipated. Rev. Gross Alexander is preaching with marked power at West End, and the Methodist revival spirit is all aglow. All of which is a fit preparation for the coming of Rev. Sam Jones. The "Gospel Tent" with a capacity of several thousand, is being prepared, and the meetings promise an abundant harvest.

—Earnest efforts are being made and the ablest scientists and sanitarians employed, to prevent the introduction and spread of cholera in this country. United States and State authorities ought to exhaust all possible means to protect us from this scourge. An International Cholera Conference will meet in Rome, Italy, on the fifteenth of this month, and President Cleveland has acted wisely in appointing a delegate from the United States in the person of Dr. Geo. M. Sternberg, a surgeon in the United States Army. He is said to be an expert in the investigation of germ diseases, and has passed through several cholera and yellow-fever epidemics.

—The Temperance Reform is an organization entered in 1860, and is doing a good work in a grand cause. It has spread over a number of States and is reaching all classes, old and young. The Rev. R. A. Allison, once a member of the Arkansas Conference, is the Supreme Lecturer and is the general officer. He can be addressed at New Orleans, care of Y. M. C. A.

—Thursday, of last week, was "Louisiana Day" at the Exposition, and in many respects was the grandest occasion of the season. The crowds were immense and from every section of the State. Very few parishes, if any, were unrepresented and by substantial citizens. As the Exposition is located in Louisiana, it was fitting that the State should make the fine display she does in the Government Building, and the "Louisiana Day" should be "the pearl of days" of the whole year.

Woman's Board of Missions.

The seventh annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions will be held in Church Street Church, Knoxville, Tenn., on June 4, 1885. Members of the Board and all visitors who expect to attend will please notify me as soon as convenient, that we may have ample time to make arrangements for their accommodation. Preliminary meeting on Thursday, ten A. M. Public meeting, with address of president and others, Thursday evening. We add a cordial invitation to all who may desire to attend this meeting to be with us in our business sessions as well as public occasions. We expect a feast of spiritual things. Mr. and Mrs. Reid and Miss Lochie Rankin, of China, will be present; also Miss Blanche Gilbert, from the Central Mexican Mission. Please address immediately Mrs. B. Pamphrey, Knoxville, Tenn., corresponding secretary, Holston Conference Society.

The second Friday in May is set apart for fasting and prayer in behalf of our approaching annual meeting to be held in Knoxville, Tenn., commencing June 4. I earnestly desire that our whole Woman's Missionary Society shall faithfully observe the day. As a united body, let us present ourselves at the Master's feet, invoking his blessing on our work and his divine guidance in our executive deliberations. As far as is practicable, I would suggest that each auxiliary hold a special meeting for prayer on that day. May the Holy Spirit meet with and bless us! As the time of the annual meeting of our executive Board is rapidly approaching, I desire to call the attention of delegates to the importance of arranging to remain throughout the entire session. The executive Board assumes the traveling expenses of the delegates for a specific object, viz: To secure the united consideration of the whole body of representatives from different States of all the solemn interests committed to its jurisdiction. The presence of all the delegates is, therefore, just as important the last as it is the first day of its session.

MRS. JULIANA HAYES, Pres., W. M. S., M. E. Church, South 228 Madison Ave., Baltimore, April 20, 1885.

Books and Periodicals.

ELIAS POWER, OF EASE-IN-ZION. By John M. Bradford. New York: Phillips and Hunt. Price, 30 cents.

This is a book to be read and then read again. It has freshness, vigor and value. There are no dull pages, no dry disquisitions, no monotonous repetition of insipid platitudes. Elias Power at work, at home, in the prayer-meeting, everywhere, is an original, attractive character. This book is full of old Methodist life, and he who reads will not wish to be at ease in Zion.

DELIVERED FROM AFAR. By Ralph Roberts. New York: Phillips & Hunt. Price, $1.50.

This book has a Western aroma and richness, representing as it does, "hopea realized in Dakota." It is largely a story of fact and is intended to show that educated, refined and religious people may overcome the dangers and difficulties of frontier life, serve God, and help themselves and their fellow-men. It is a good book and well deserves a place in Sunday-school libraries. The mechanical work is superbly done.

VALERIA, THE MARTYR OF THE CATACOMBS. By W. H. Whitrow, D. D. New York: Phillips & Hunt. Price, $1.00.

The name of the scholarly Dr. Whitrow is quite sufficient to ensure the wide circulation of a book. We have known him as a magazine editor and writer for some years, and have read with pleasure the work of his pen. He has made a special study of the catacombs, and has written an elaborate volume as the result of his investigations. This story is designed to give a popular account of early Christian life and character as illustrated by those interesting monuments of the Christian church. Historical accuracy has been maintained, and a most interesting story related.

—The Triology of "The Triology of the Future," Mr. Roe's "Driven Back to Eden," is continued, and grows in interest. "His Own Fault," by Mr. J. T. Trowbridge, is one of his best and has been much enjoyed. "Animal Traps and Trappers" will capture the boys. These, with many other capital articles, make up an excellent number, $3.00 a year. New York: The Century Co., 43 East 17 St.

—The Popular Science Monthly, for May, is on our table, and is always welcome. "Can Man be Modified by Selection," by Prof. Brooks, is a curious and learned discussion. Our readers among the clergy will be most interested in an article on "Religion Without Dogma," by Prof. L. L. Training in Ethical Science and other papers are of special value. Though we may not accept the writer's conclusions always, these are important discussions. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1, 3 and 5 Bond Street.

—Good Housekeeping is the title of a new family journal, condensed, and it claims "the interests of the higher life of the household." It is published in magazine form, and is quite convenient for easy reading. The initial number is on our table, and if it is a sample of future issues, the periodical will be a success, and worthy of wide circulation. At the department of home life are considered by selected specialists. Such writers as Marion Harland, Rosa Terry Cooke and Miss Devereaux will contribute to its pages. Clarke W. Bryan & Co., publishers, 111 Broadway, New York. Subscription price, $2.50 a year, with a premium to every subscriber.

—The Century Magazine, for May, is on our table. The frontispiece is a portrait of Gen. George B. McClellan, and the leading illustrated article is on the "New Orleans Exposition." Mr. Howell's "Rise of Silas Lapham" is continued, as is "The Bostonians," by Henry James. "An Artist Among the Indians," will be read with great interest. This number is especially rich in war papers by distinguished authors on either side. Geo. McClellan, Gen. Jos. E. Johnston, Gen. Adam Badeau, Gen. Gustavus W. Smith and Warren Lee Goss contribute articles. This is a superb number. The Century Co., Union Square, New York.

LITTLE'S LIVING AGE.—The numbers of The Living Age for April 23 and May 24 contain, Echoes of the Eighteenth Century, Scottish Review; The Black Death in East Anglia, Nineteenth Century; On Style in Literature: Its Technical Elements, Contemporary; On Patterson's Memoirs, March in Magna Græcia, and the Astrology of Shakespeare, Macmillan; Sir Henry Taylor's Autobiography, Longmans; Gladstone's Thoughts, and Arab Courage, Spectator; Inside a Catholic College, Chambers Journal; Some Secrets of the Silk Trade, St. James's; with instalments of "A House Divided Against Itself," by Mrs. Dymond, and "The Blue Posts of Chester," and poetry.

OARVER & JAMISON.

New York, May 4.—Mrs. Frank A. Vanderbilt, the widow of Com. Cornelius Vanderbilt, died of pneumonia this morning. She was taken seriously ill last Tuesday. On Sunday she was given up, and before farewell to her eleven up, and before farewell to her eleven up, and before farewell to her eleven up.

Mrs. Vanderbilt was a regular attendant at the Church of the Strangers and was a directress of the Sisters of the Stranger. The funeral will be on Thursday morning at ten o'clock. Dr. Beach and his son will conduct it. Bishop McVey, of the Methodist Church, of Nashville, Tenn., is expected to assist also.

LEMONT, Ill., May 4.—The strike among quarries here and at Joliet has finally assumed proportions of magnitude. It became evident on Friday that the county authorities could not control them, and the Governor was asked to send troops. He responded promptly by sending five companies.

The following official report from Adjutant General Vance has been sent to the Governor: Col. Bennett removed his command except one company from Joliet to Lemont, arriving about nine A. M. and forming a line south of Lemont. Deputy Sheriff Potter conducted the troops into Lemont near the Alton depot, where a mob of about 500 to 1,000 strikers were congregated. They were commanded to disperse and to the strikers were ordered to disperse, but they would not. The strikers rushed toward the troops, throwing stones. Major Heffernan and one or two others were struck and slightly wounded. The air was full of stones. In self-defense the troops fired. Two strikers were killed and several wounded.

BROOKLYN, May 5.—Shortly after 9 o'clock this morning there was a crash at No. 55 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, and the people looking up from the street saw that the roof of the building and a portion of the walls had fallen. They could hear the screams of the people injured, and there seemed to be a moment when a volume of smoke rolled up, showing the building had taken fire.

A dozen manufacturing firms occupied portions of the building, and employed altogether 600 hands, chiefly young women, all of whom were at work in some of the five stories of the building.

Before an alarm could be sounded, the timber-like woodwork of the exterior was all ablaze, and the first firemen who arrived found the panic-stricken operatives crowding and shrieking to the windows, which opened upon the interior area of the works. Dozens of people assailed the officers with tearful inquiries for their relatives who had not answered to the call of their names since the casualty. These, at noon, whether true or false, it is possible that some of them may be found in the neighboring tenements.

SEND $1 BILLS.—We wish our patrons to bear in mind that in payment for subscriptions we do not desire postage stamps, and that they should be sent only or fractional parts of a dollar. A dollar bill is much more convenient and safe to remit than the same amount in one, two or three cents stamps. The actual risk of remitting money is slight; if properly directed not one misarrangement will occur in one thousand. Increase the bills, and, where letters containing money are sealed in presence of the postmaster, we will assume all the risk.

"So you have six girls? What treasures they must be to you?" "Yes, but just now, you know, it behooves every patriotic citizen to do what he can to reduce the surplus in the treasury."

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Trephearn Farmer, of Stone H. O. Pickens county, Ala., having to often read in the ADVOCATE, of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having closed the sale for one of these lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $100, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. ## Obituaries.

FULLILOVE—HENRY F. FULLILOVE was born June 27, 1815, in Oglethorpe county, Ga., and died at his home in Keesh, La., February 25, 1885, aged sixty-nine years, seven months and twenty-eight days.

Bro. Fullilove lived in Natchez county, Miss., two years, after which he commenced business in the city of Mobile, Ala., where he continued until 1853, when he purchased land and commenced farming near Keesh, La.

After the close of the war he commenced merchandizing again in Keesh, where he continued till death overtook him. Immediately on his settlement in Louisiana, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; whether by letter or profession is not known, as the records are lost. The supposition is he joined in Mobile. Bro. Fullilove never claimed that sudden change and overflow of joy that many experienced in conversing. His Christian life was seen in a straightforward, unassuming course of life. One of his old partners in business, some years since, remarked to the writer of this memoir, that he never knew a more conscientious, upright man than H. F. Fullilove. As to his business transactions of thirty years in Keesh, La., he has never heard his character impeached by any one. His community as well as the church, has sustained a heavy loss.

In 1873, on a return trip from New York, he was shipwrecked on an island for three weeks, and on reaching his home, found that his wife had suddenly passed away. So he lived to see all his family pass away. Besides, his bodily ailments for several years was painful; yet like one of old, "all this moved him not." Bro. Fullilove was interested in the south-west corner of Caddo parish, near the side of Rev. J. C. Borrass, of historic fame.

DENHAM—SISTER MARTHA JANE DENHAM was born in West Feliciana parish, La., in 1825, and died in East Baton Rouge parish, La., August 17, 1884. After the death of her parents, she remained with her Uncle William Ogden to Yazoo county, Miss. She was married to Bro. Ruben T. Denham in 1842. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1853, and lived a consistent life until her Master called her to the saints. She was always ready to minister to the needy. The weary servant of God found her ready to sacrifice to his comfort. Sister Martha was a faithful servant in the Master's vineyard, caring and watching for the opportunity to relieve those that might need help around her.

"Aunt Martha" leaves two children, both sons; three grandchildren and a husband, with a large circle of friends, to mourn her departure; but not without hope. The evidence was plain and clear, no cloud darkening the horizon of her setting sun.

Having set her home in order, all was ready, and when God's messenger of death announced his errand, she left earth's cares and toils and wearily followed.

Sister Denham suffered a great deal, having been confined in her bed near the two years; yet wearily bowed to the will of him who was. Nothing seemed to trouble her, unless it was the delay of the summons. "Come up higher." She was often heard to say, "Why was others taken and me left."

The writer has known Sister Denham about thirty years; has lived with the family a part of the time, and known her to be a consistent, obliging Christian lady, an indulgent and dutiful mother, and an affectionate wife. She was the mother of one Methodist preacher, who preceded her to their home in heaven. She is now clothed in her garment of shining purity, and around the great white throne of Divine mercy mingles her voice in celestial anthems with them gone before.

Partings are short and eternity is long. And yet do we ever part from them who are called from earth to heaven! They are only gone to the fair fields of endless light. Aunt Martha awakes, writes and watches for those she has left behind. O grave, where is thy victory! O death, where is thy sting! For she who has been lost to us here, has been borne over the mystic tide and anchored safe in the peaceful harbor of the eternal rest, that our Father has for his saints. Yes, there on the farther shore of the bright beyond, she awaits the coming of her loved ones, to guide and direct them to the realm above.

There are gains for all houses, and though the silent tear drops fall, we mingle ours with our prayers for the bereaved ones, who bend in contemplation with a Supreme will, for he doeth all things well. Bereaved father and children, look up and move forward; your departed one is "not dead, but sleepeth."

BINGHAM—ELIJAH BINGHAM was born August 29, 1807, in the State of Georgia, and was married July 23, 1830, to Elizabeth Morrow, in Fayette county, Ala. They had eleven children, all of whom are still living except one, who died at the age of fifteen months. He moved to this country in its early settlement by the whites in 1837. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church about 1833, and maintained his character, quiet Christian character until his death, which occurred at his home in Webster county, Miss., March 31, 1885. His funeral was preached by Rev. G. S. Bradford, of the C. P. Church, to a large congregation of his old friends and adjoining neighbors.

CATO—Died at his residence in the northern portion of Warren county, Miss., March 9, 1885, Mr. J. D. CATO, aged seventy-six years, eight months and twenty-four days.

He was born June 15, 1808, near Hicks' Ford, Greenville county, Va.; came to the State of Mississippi in the fall of 1831, and began life as a planter, which vocation he followed successfully during life. He married Miss Martha Whitley in 1817, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Oak Ridge, Warren county, Miss., during a protracted meeting in the summer of 1848. He was in the militia and manifested unusual activity in his agricultural pursuits a few weeks previous to his death, but was suddenly stricken down with paralysis and survived only a few days from the stroke.

About ten days before he was stricken, one of his acquaintances died of paralysis, and he told his wife that he "would soon go the same way." This prediction could not be dispelled from his mind, and when the shock came he had no hopes of recovery. He was patient and quiet during his short illness, and passed away calmly and peacefully. Deceased was a man of sterling integrity and undoubted morality, and was social and genial in his disposition, firm and inflexible in his opinions. He had but few words in transacting business, and strictly adhered to the Biblical instruction, "Owe no man anything." As a member of the church, he was punctual in attendance, and desired to conform to its rules. Although not very demonstrative, he was meek and humble, and no doubt enjoyed "that peace which floweth like a river," more than he expressed. An exemplary citizen, a tender and affectionate husband, a kind and indulgent father has gone to his reward.

He leaves a wife, three sons and one daughter to mourn his absence from the home circle, and his sweet counsel and kind admonition for their welfare. He was buried by Rev. W. W. Hurst at Oak Ridge, there to rest until the resurrection morn.

TIBBS—Infant child of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Tibbs was born Nov. 14, 1884, and died April 11, 1885. He is at rest in our Father's house, surrounded by the beauties and glories of an endless life, for Christ said "of such is the kingdom of heaven." May these words of our Savior bind up the hearts of heretofore parents, brothers and sisters, and may they all be reunited in the home above.

W. W. CAMMACK.

CREBBIN—JOHN CREBBIN was a man whose piety was modeled after the old Wesleyan type. His social meetings of the church were his special delight, and yet the preacher never had a better listener, or one who could better appreciate the good points in a gospel sermon. He could never be made to go in the directions which some modern church progress is taking. He held on to the old landmarks to the last. He was a great sufferer, but he had great consolations. His earthly hopes were often obscured, but his hopes of heaven grew brighter with the passing time. The disease that prostrated his body ledged his spirit for light into the realm of everlasting light. The last sight of weeping friends was quickly succeeded by the sight of friends on the other shore welcoming with glad voices the weary pilgrim to "the rest that remaineth to the people of God."

Resolutions on the death of Bro. John Crebbin, passed by the First Quarterly Conference of the Felicita Station, New Orleans, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held February 15, 1885. Resolved, That in the death of Bro. John Crebbin, who departed this life on the morning of February 15, 1885, this Conference has lost an exemplary and attentive steward and trustee; the church, an experimental Christian, and the community an upright citizen.

Resolved, That we shall miss his Christian counsel and friendly communion at the weekly sessions of our Board of Stewards, as well as at the meetings of this Quarterly Conference.

Resolved, That his beloved brethren will forever miss his instructive and earnest testimony in the class-room.

Resolved, That we sorrow not, however, as those who have no hope; knowing as we do that he has entered into rest, and that if we continue faithfully to do our part, we shall after awhile rejoice with him in anthems of praise and ballads of joy around the great Redeemer's throne for evermore.

Resolved, That our sincere Christian sympathies be extended to his widow and bereaved family, praying that their experience may be sanctified to their eternal good, and that they may take up the cross where he laid it down, and so hear it until the Deliverer comes.

E. P. MACKIE, Secretary.

HE LEADETH ME.

In pastures green? Not always; sometimes he,
Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows lie.

Out of the sunshine, warm and soft and bright,
Out of the sunshine into darkest night,
Left would I faint with sorrow and afflict.

Only for this I know he holdeth my hand,
No matter in green or desert land,
I trust, although I may not understand.

And he still waiteth: No, not always;
Sometimes the heavy tempests round me blow,
And over my soul the waves and billows go.

But when the storm has passed, and I am free, Alone for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispereth to my soul, "Lo! I am here."

Above the tempest wild I heard him say,
Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day,
In every path of thine I lead the way."

So, whether on hill-top, high and fair, Lethal, or in the lonely valleys where
The shadows lie—what matter? He is there.

And more than this, where'er the pathway lead,
He giveth me no help, broken need,
But his own hand, sufficient for my need.

So where he leads me I can safely go;
And in the bliss hereafter I shall know
Why, in his wisdom, he hath led me so.

Retrospective.

NINETEENTH PAPER.
COLUMBIA CREEK CHURCH.

On December 8, 1879, the Mississippi Conference convened at Natchez, Bishop Capers presiding. At the close of the missionary anniversary, Saturday night, intelligence reached me that my wife, at Fayette, was sick with pneumonia. Early Sunday morning I was ordained elder in the Bishop's private room, and hastened to the bedside of my afflicted companion. My ordination (of which I received a certificate) was not reported to the secretary, and did not appear in the published minutes. I was reappointed to the Columbia Creek circuit, with Dr. Kennon as young preacher on trial for my colleague, who was afterward changed to Woodville. Bro. H. M. Booth supplied his place. The circuit was gained by the change, as Bro. Booth had the advantage of several years' experience in the itinerant work, was genial in disposition, a good preacher, well educated and a lovable companion. The year passed pleasantly and, I trust, profitably. The older members of the Mississippi Conference will remember Bro. Booth, while the younger have more recently read his brief, but graphic pen sketches of our beloved Winans, Drake and Owens in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. While associated as colleagues on the same circuit, in the prime of life, little did we think of being again associated twenty-three years afterward as presiding elder and preacher in charge on a distant and circuit in the "Lone Star" State, to warn sinners to "flee from the wrath to come," and encourage pilgrims of the cross to pursue their journey heavenward. So it has been in the providence of God. And now, while with us the autumn leaves are fading and falling, and we are threading our way through life's last decade, we are still enabled to say, "Behold the Lamb of God!" to perishing sinners. Commencing our itinerant labors in the Mississippi Conference, we may in the near future close the same in the East Texas.

I well remember a harmless episode which occurred at the close of a Quarterly Conference held at Fayette, 1879. Our presiding elder was not only a good preacher, good pastor, careful administrator of discipline, and good every way; he was also neat in dress and person. He was far from being what would now be called "an old fogey;" he moved on the line of progression. At that time we had but few whiskered preachers, and these were among the younger brethren. Our presiding elder had turned out and trailed a handsome (?) set. When through with the usual questions, and ready for a motion to adjourn, our venerable father in Israel, Rev. J. C. Johnson, rose and asked permission to speak, which was granted. Addressing our elder personally, he said (as near as memory serves at this date): "I can not reconcile it with my views of propriety to see whiskers on the face of our presiding elder. My brother, the time has come when it is difficult to distinguish some preachers from gamblers and men of the world. Rest assured it is very unbecoming and offensive to me. I am an old Methodist preacher, and you must bear with me. Will you, my dear brother, appear on the Sabbath clean shaven?" Our elder smiled pleasantly, but made no promise. That night he spent at the parsonage, and asked what I thought about his humoring the good old brother in his prejudice against whiskers. I remarked it might not be amiss to adhere to the apostle's utterance—"If it must make my brother to sin," etc. At eleven o'clock next day he entered the pulpit, minus whiskers, and preached, as he always did, an excellent sermon. None appreciated it more highly nor enjoyed it better than did Father Johnson. Had he lived to the present he might not have objected to our modern ministers following the example of the prophets and apostles of the long ago.

MAGNALL, TEXAS.

HAROLD MORSE.

We also, being called by the will of God in Christ Jesus, are not justified by ourselves, neither by our own wisdom, or the works which we have done, but by the faith of our hearts; but by the faith, by which God Almighty has justified all men from the beginning.—Clement Romanus.

Letter from China.

Mr. Editor: Living in the native city of Shanghai, we were constantly thrown in with the Chinese. Every day we discovered something new and strange, which reminded us of many of the customs of the Jews and of eastern countries spoken of in the Bible. We looked at the gaudy and streets with wonder, and then we gazed at the immense, busy crowds of people going hither and thither, rushing past each other in such haste until we were led to wonder whence they came and whither they were going.

No pen can describe the city and its belongings in such a way as to be fully understood and appreciated by one who has never seen it. There is such an infinite variety in a Chinese city, in describing it you scarcely know where to begin and where to end.

The city of Shanghai is built on a vast plain; no hills or mountains to be seen except the numerous grave mounds on every hand. There is no doubt but the whole plain for seventy or eighty miles in the interior was two thousand years since the bed of the sea. There are no beautiful forests or groves to be seen. Almost every family in the city has a well only a few feet below the surface, but the water is brackish. These wells almost invariably pass through the remains of the dead of past ages. Our first mission home was built on the graves of the dead, and as far as the eye could see nothing but the graves of the dead could be seen.

The city of Shanghai has seven gates called, north, south, east and west; also little north gate, little east gate and little south gate. Those gates are closed every night. They stand open all day, and crowds of people are constantly rushing in and out. During the day many people collect there to dispose of their wares, or wait for a friend to pass in or out. The Bible speaks of Lot, who sat at the gate to entertain strangers. I do not think we have any Lots here. At least, I have never seen anyone waiting for strangers at the gates to entertain them. Abraham sat at the gate of Kirjath-Arba when about to purchase the cave of Machpelah.

The gateways of eastern cities are arched, shady and very cool in summer, and this is one reason why the people like to collect at the gates during the warm weather. Very often in returning from our church in the city on a warm day in summer I have found it to be a very great relief to remain under the arches of the gates for a few minutes. It is at these gates friends often make appointments to meet each other, while others gather there for trade. The crowd is sometimes so great that it is almost impossible to get in or out of the city, especially when the tide is high and the water carriers are rushing in and out at the gates.

When at the city of Peking I noticed that as the sun went down there was a rush for the gates of the city—some going in and some coming out. When once closed, there is no more opening until the morning. It is often the case that some are injured on such occasions by striving to enter first. These gates are very narrow, and in going with the crowd we have to strive and press forward to make our way through. David says: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and he ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in." How forcible and impressive the words of the Psalmist seem after we have once visited the gates of a crowded Chinese city, and especially when any great and noted official is to pass in or out. Thousands collect at these gates and upon the city wall to witness the procession, with the noise of gongs and the voice of runners crying to the people to clear the way. Both small and great must enter in at these gates, for there is no other door. When the official has passed then comes the rush of the populace. Often when witnessing these scenes in the east I have thought of those solemn words of our Savior: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate."

The streets of the native city of Shanghai are exceedingly narrow and crooked, and sometimes it is very difficult to work our way through the crowd. Some are walking; some are in sedan chairs carried by two men, and some are carrying heavy burdens. It is only by dodging here and there that we escape the knocks and jars that we are constantly in danger of getting. Every man carrying heavy burdens is yelling all the time at the top of his voice: "Your body! your body!" "A chair! look out! give way!" This warning is very necessary in a crowded Chinese city. Men riding on horseback must have bells on their horses. There are no lights in the streets at night, so every man must carry his own lantern. Those without lanterns are looked upon as thieves or bad characters, and many are arrested. Often the saying of the wise man is brought to our mind, "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look right before thee." The crooked, narrow streets through which we have to pass, and the innumerable multitudes who pass to and fro, require anyone passing along to be careful to look straight forward, or he will have a reminder now and then that he is not alone in these streets.

Some of these streets have very singular names. One is Flower Garden street; another, Crooked Measure street; Many Colored Clothes street; Third Monument street, Fourth Monument street, Butcher's Lane, and so on.

When once the name of a street is fixed in the minds of the people there is no use trying to change it. The streets of the foreign settlements of Shanghai have names familiar to the Chinese—names taken from the provinces and cities of China, given to them by foreigners. Streets leading east and west are named after the cities of China, and streets leading north and south are named after the provinces of China. The Chinese do not recognize these names; but each street has a name given to it by themselves, and it is only this name they recognize and use when speaking among themselves. For instance: They say One Horse street, Two Horse street, and so on. They are averse to making any changes. They show it in all their actions. They cling with great tenacity to all their ancient customs and ways of doing and thinking. Nothing but the grace of God in their hearts can ever induce them to cast away their old forms of idolatrous worship and accept the religion of the Lord Jesus.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, March 23, 1885.

"Ne Plus Ultra."

God's creation was a perfect, complete and finished work. Rolling the world from his hand, he adorns it with every embellishment of fancy and gives it every decoration that the imagination could conceive of or the heart could desire. Then he makes man and woman, and crowns them king and queen of this earthly paradise. Happily they live; every wish is gratified, every want anticipated. Their most exalted day dreams become realities, and their ideal of air castles is no sooner framed than it stands before them a true building. God loves them; he calls them his children; he watches over them as an affectionate father, and acts the part of a devoted and indulgent parent. Their delight is his delight, and their joy is his joy. Peace reigned supreme. The universe seemed lighted with an eternal sun. Agreement and harmony is impressed on every living thing.

High above all—pre-eminent—stand man and woman. Made in the image of their Creator, they are pure. Through daily association with him their characters are made immaculate. Frequently in his presence, they become more like him. Their lives are as streams without ripples, and, with overflowing hearts, they turn to God and, in burning accents, tell of their gratitude and the abundance of their thanks.

A test is given, and their gratitude proves to be a farce and their words of thanks "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." God's law they violate, and severe is the penalty. Their Eden vanishes; their day dreams are like the mists of the morning; their air castles crumble into nothingness; their flowers are turned into thistles; their eternal sun sinks down, night ensues and the sentence of death thunders from an enraged God. What black despair! What hearts of lead! What searing consciences! Gladly they quit their once happy home. Its altar has been torn down; its sacredness has been desecrated; its snowy purity has been soiled, and, with just indignation, it refuses to harbor its profaners. The angels are grieved; the heavens mourn; the devils rejoice and God weeps.

Notwithstanding the disloyalty of his children, he loves them even more than in their obedience, and sends a ray of light into their night. Again the sun begins to shine, the flowers to bud and blossom, and creation is once more quickened with gladness. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Glorious gift! Unparalleled and without an equal! A donation which none but God would have bestowed—a possession which none but God would have relinquished. The Son had all the attributes of the Father. He was the heir of his holiness and the inheritor of his purity. We find him with the same magnitude and tenderness of heart. What a character to be offered for the blotting out of sin—untarnished and without spot! His blood could well make us "even whiter than snow." Such is the plan of salvation—such the redemption of the soul. Who will dare to say that with the body the soul dies when God has given his Son to pay for it? Do you deny the verity of sacred history? If so, you contradict prophecies that have been fulfilled, events that have transpired and customs that have become laws.

Let us examine the soul and see what it is. It is the real, the true man. Look at its great intellectual powers. Its arguments are philosophical; its reasonings are wonderful; its conclusions are miraculous. It is master of space, time and distance; it has made crowns and pulled down thrones; it has caused kingdoms to rot and empires to wither; it is king of kings and lord of lords. Then tell us that it is dissolved with this tenement of clay! Away with such an idea! It is revolting to every noble feeling and repugnant to every precept of his own teaching.

Again, see its moral capacity. It can be again, refined and elevated until it almost feels the fullness of a God. It sympathizes with the suffering and pities the distressed; it is charitable to the helpless and comforts the poor; it rejoices with the rejoicing and weeps with the weeping. It can be made cynical or philanthropic, selfish or benevolent; it can partake with the good or sup with the bad; it can reach heaven or sink to hell. Then say that it can die! Monstrous absurdity! Statement untenable! Nothing beyond—groundless belief! Supercilious theory!

There is something beyond. The structure of man says it; nature declares it, in unmistakable language; the inspired revelation emphasizes it with words of thunder, and despicable must be he who does not desire it. He is the most contemptible of sinners; he has the heart of the craven and coward. The thought that the soul is material shocks the whole being. It throws a pall of midnight around the heart and overshadows with agonizing sadness; but, on the other hand, the hope of an eternity is the brightest star of existence. It is the brilliant diamond in the circle of life. Without this hope life would be a hollow mockery, a perfect sham, a barren waste, a stupendous failure. If this hope is a delusion, it pays to cling to it, for it is drink to the thirsty, food to the hungry, raiment to the naked and supply to the needy. The delusive breast of Christ is far more preferable than the drunken and blasphemous pillow of Tom Paine.

Let us live up to the precepts of the "sermon on the mount," practice the teachings of God's book, and methinks eternity will make real this hope and prove that there is something beyond—that after the darkness of the grave there is an eternal day—that there is a bright land where a real God reigns, a real Savior lives and the immortal soul doth dwell. Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift and the hope of something beyond!

Woman's Work at Rodney.

On the evening of April 24 the anniversary of the Woman's Auxiliary Missionary Society, of Rodney, Miss., was celebrated by an address from the Rev. J. P. Drake, who organized said society one year and one month before in the Presbyterian Church, of the same place. The address was excellent—especially as it was delivered by one who has the entire confidence and esteem of his old members. Its influence will, we trust, be felt for many days by each member of the little band of workers who, though little, have done what they could for their unfortunate sisters in the far-away lands now darkened by the black clouds of ignorance, superstition and cruelty. May the day soon come when the bright sun of righteousness will clear them all away! Though there is much work to be done at home, yet we feel it is right to stretch forth a helping hand to those who are in a worse condition than ourselves. After the close of the address a few suitable and encouraging remarks were made by the Rev. A. F. Watkins, who, though his say among us has been short, is rapidly winning his way into the good opinion of the people of Rodney and vicinity.

A Pleasant Day at Cane Ridge.

Mr. Editor: Last Sunday, April 25, witnessed so pleasing and appropriate a scene at this goodly old church of Fayette circuit (dear to the hearts of many of your readers), that I thought a statement of it might be acceptable in your columns. Mrs. E. Watkins, of Natchez, widow of our Dr. Watkins, desired to present to the church her so much loved a memorial thereof in the form of a very handsome sacramental service, consisting of a nice baptismal bowl, an elegant pitcher, two large plates and two chased goblets—gold lined—all being of silver, an inscription engraved on the pitcher outlined the object, the donor and the donee.

After our opening hymn and prayer Bro. Thomas H. Watkins and his wife, Sister Julia, appeared in the altar to the surprise of part of the congregation, bearing the above gift to the next communion table lately purchased for the church. Here Sister Julia Watkins presented it to the pastor in the following words:

"Bro. Drake, I present this communion set to Cane Ridge Church, in the name of Mrs. W. H. Watkins, in memory of our beloved father, the late Dr. W. H. Watkins. It is but fit that I should say that, with the membership of old Cane Ridge, he gave his young heart to God, and from them went forth to preach 'peace on earth and good will to men.' May God grant that while we use it to meeting around his board here we may all be blessed, and when time has passed continue in a brighter world with the loved one gone before to that land where no death comes, no sorrow, no weary waiting, but all will be joy and peace forever!"

To these moving words the pastor replied, as best he could extempore, in substance as follows:

"Sister Watkins, I am honored, as pastor of this church, in receiving this fitting token to the memory of Rev. William Hamilton Watkins, D. D., late of the Mississippi Conference, but now of the general assembly in the new Jerusalem. It gives me peculiar pleasure, as my father's son, thus to take part in honoring the memory of his special friend and co-laborer—your father! His name outlives itself closely about the history of 'Cane Ridge.' Going forth hence to preach the gospel, he often returned and gave the mature fruit of his ripe scholarship and attainments to the church in which his soul first saw the true light of life. The honors showered on him by the church as pastor of his first pulpit, presiding elder, college president, delegate to General Conferences and president of Annual Conference more than once, never dimmed the memory of this first place 'where Jesus shed the oil of gladness on his head.' Here his sleeping dust awaits the resurrection morn. Here a brother, and other near connections, received the church's commission to declare glad tidings to the meek, and here the mantle fell on a worthy son, our own beloved Bro. Aleck—absent to-day, but not forgotten. How well chosen then is this memorial! Great civic and military heroes have their names enshrined in the memory of multitudes by lofty monuments of marble or brass which from afar beckon men to follow up to the giddy heights of fame. But he who was far greater than all earth-born heroes—ordained a sublimely simple, monumental rite—the holy communion, 'Do this in remembrance of me,' he said. That the vessels for this service should come to this church as a memorial of one who so often kept the feast here and with such beaming gravity and dignity, and as a gift from her who so long and faithfully shared his lot as a Methodist preacher's wife, is more eminently becoming than any words of mine can express. In the name of Cane Ridge Church I gratefully accept this handsome gift. Trusting that it shall be handled with reverent care; that it may convey the simple elements betokening union with Christ and each other to very, very many of this and succeeding generations, and that all who here partake may drink anew the 'fruit of the vine' in the Father's kingdom above with Jesus himself and with the sacramental host which our fathers have already joined, I receive your prayer."

The Church Conference requested that this be reduced to writing, spread on the minutes, etc., which leads me to adopt this as the easiest method of bringing the scene before your readers. Before the air ceased to vibrate with the sound of these words Bro. Tom and Sister Julia presented their youngest heir to the name for baptism, and Henry Vaughn Watkins suitably received, from the new baptismal bowl, the rite which made him an infant member of his grandfather's church. Was not this a very proper beginning of service for this offering on affection's altar?

While at "Cane Ridge" I will mention to its many friends that last year our people there raised more than $100 for ceiling and otherwise fitting up their building, which is somewhat weatherbeaten and unpainted. We expect more of this good work to proceed before the approaching District Conference. We look forward to the time with pleasing anticipation, and hereby extend an invitation to you as a "live connection" to be with us on that occasion, yet to be announced in the ADVOCATE.

Yours cordially,

J. P. DRAKE.

On to Washington.

BY REV. JAS. J. HILLINOSLEY.

The fact so startling to every thinking man in this land, who is interested in the complete success of the prohibition movement, is the fact that the general government of the United States is completely under the control of the whisky league; and the two great parties, the Democratic and Republican, which have so intensely confronted each other for the past thirty years, are influenced, swayed and moved at the beck or wink of the liquor power completely; so that if says to the one, "Do this," it doeth it; or to the other, "Do that," it doeth it. As a fleet and well-practiced boy controls the direction of his rolling hoop on a smooth surface, so likewise does the liquor league control the direction and movement of either the Democratic and Republican parties at will. The national policy of this great government is controlled by this league, and our politics could truly be represented and stigmatized as well by a reeling demijohn, pictorialized by photographs of members of Congress, with a man's head protruding from the neck representing the president or some other leading member of the liquor fraternity.

Take either of the great political parties of our land and ask when in the history of national legislation has either of them turned a wheel in favor of the prohibition sentiment, or gone contrary to the expressed wish of the liquor party? Time and again has Congress been earnestly petitioned for the intemperance movement in this direction; that is, simply to give us a commission to inquire into the facts concerning the liquor traffic and every time the movement has been throttled. Even in the last session of Congress a Democratic House strangled a bill sent down to it for consideration by the Senate, providing only for this simple commission of inquiry on the vile traffic. "Even Southern senators, who favor prohibitory measures at home, heard the crack of the liquor lash at Washington and responded to it with affluence." And the end is not yet.

Only a few weeks since this liquor league gave the Southern Democrats to understand that they must touch the question of prohibition with a light hand, or else the day of judgment will come (for them) in 1888, while the same or a similar hint was thrown out to the Republicans of the North in regard to the prohibitory movement which obtains there. Of course, if the liquor dealers can control the Democrats in the South, under whose influence the prohibition sentiment is fostered, what there is of it, and the Republicans in the North—they will control the politics concerning the matter, and this is all they want. If the liquor league should so order it, there is not a legislature south of Mason & Dixon's line, with maybe one or two rare exceptions, who would permit the people whom they profess to represent to vote on the question of a (State) constitutional amendment as regards the question of prohibition. As it is, in the absence of any such order from the masters, the liquor men, such efforts on the part of the people to get at the throat of this monster evil have usually proven abortive, and that by the direct action of Legislatures who are afraid of the saloon and of the saloon vote. Hence the failure in North Carolina and the three successive ones in the State of Texas. The National Democratic party control Democratic Legislatures; but the liquor men manage the course of and control the Democratic party with reference to prohibition. Hence on all this important issue the whisky brotherhood control our Legislatures. Hence the difficulty of the people of any State to get their respective Legislatures to submit the question to them as to whether or not there shall be a State amendment prohibiting the traffic in and manufacture of intoxicating liquors. It is not surprising, therefore, that no State in the South, though all are under Democratic rule, has passed a State prohibitory law on this greatest of all political issues. The Democratic party, as a party, are simply under the control of the whisky men. That is all I verily believe, if the National Liquor Dealers' Association should say of the Democratic party "See here, we're growing tired of this thing. We want no more local option laws in the South. See you to it that the Democratic party in the Southern States passes no more such laws, and as soon as practicable repeal those already on the statute books. If you don't, we'll smash the party in New York and Indiana and the rest of the close States and elect a Republican President." Why there would be no fathering of the prohibitory sentiment in hardly a Southern State, and what little has been done might be undone at any moment, it would be just as easy to get the Legislature of the State of Louisiana to pass a law making it compulsory on a child attending the public school to commit to memory and repeat a chapter in the Bible every day as it would be to get them to pass a law on hygiene, which would require teachers in the public schools to give and systematically teach the scientific physiological effects of alcohol on the human system. And, doubtless, every Southern Legislature would kill such a bill as quickly as did that of New Jersey the other day when the prohibitionists had the effrontery to introduce it. To pass such a bill and make it a law would give mortal offense to our masters, the liquor men, and that would prove unhealthy for us in 1888. No, we must knock down every time when this political lord of lords waxes his hand. We must obey or die.

The fact is, and it could be proved by an innumerable company of witnesses of facts that the whisky ring has faster friends in this country than men in high official position under the government, and men who in national convention shape and control its party attitude in favor of the liquor traffic. All our important political machinery is centered and has its foundation in the saloons, and the great engine which runs its ponderous and complex parts attended and fed by the liquor men. Here is the nigger in the wood pile; or, if you like it best, the power behind the throne. Both our great parties are bidding for the whisky vote, and to get it every other interest is and will be sacrificed. Our representatives do not represent us. If they did, they would favor and fight for prohibition. Hence our only recourse is to send men to our Legislatures and to Congress who are pledged to the prohibition cause. We do not want men in our general assemblies, either State or national, who are for prohibition at home and against it when they get to Washington. We must use our political liberty at the ballot box, and with power of the elective franchise put in office the right kind of men. In eradicating out the liquor traffic this must be our method and our motto—On to Washington.

"Aunt Parson's Story," on our third page this week, is good reading. We hope it may stimulate like activity in some other "case-in-Zion."

Country preaching that converts sinners is the need of the city. The human heart in silks and cushioned pews is nowise different from a soul in homespun, sitting on a hard bench. The "whole counsel of God" must be declared in city full and country vast.

A splay Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Baptist puts the case rather strongly; but truly, in these words. We would only amend by including such members of all evangelical churches. "With a pack of dancing, theatre-going, card-playing, Sabbath-breaking Baptists, you have no more chance of saving the world than with a legion of missionary devils."

The Russo-English complications have not as yet been satisfactorily adjusted; but the war cloud has passed away. The Gladstone ministry, however, is meeting with the most persistent and annoying opposition from the Tories. As we go to press the discussion of a second resolution of censure is in progress, with prospects of another triumph for Mr. Gladstone.

It is given out from Washington that Postmaster General Vilas will make vigorous war on the Louisiana Lottery inquiry. He proposes to have a series of prosecutions brought against the abominable before the federal courts in a number of States. This will raise a storm in certain quarters; but this country at large will approve and applaud. If there is any constitutional power lodged anywhere with which the Postmaster General can arrest the circulation of this poisonous outrage through our mail system, we hope he will bravely employ it. It is a curse and a crime, and is a constant menace and disgrace to our public morality.

A new Millerite craze has been raging up in the State of Maine. How strange the fancies and follies of some people! After figuring on the prophecy of Daniel, they concluded that the world would come to an end April 29, 1885. There was eager expectation for the glorious event. Farmers refused to plow and plant their fields, and women made elaborate ascension robes in which to appear before the King. This night before believers refused to sleep, and spent the time in fasting and contemplation at their homes. As the archangel's trumpet failed to sound, it is now in order for those farmers to pitch a crop. Some years ago an enthusiastic Millerite sister attempted a premature ascension. She leaped from an elevated hill top, thinking that wings would be furnished and she would sweep through the gates into the eternal city. But instead she had a dreadful fall and a broken limb. With a faith unshaken, however, she said, "I would a-flewed if I'd got the right flop." Everything depends upon the right flop.

The twenty-fifth annual convention of the United States Brewers' Association will be held in the City of New York, on the nineteenth instant. In the call for the meeting the officers of this association speak words of good cheer to their fellow-brewers. They dwell upon the hopeful outlook of the trade, and urge a strong and effective exercise of corporate capability in order to subvert certain interests. The Washington Sentinel, edited by the attorney of the association, is rather more pessimistic. Indeed, he looks gloomily upon the progress of prohibition, and admits that the future is full of grave apprehension. The Sentinel says: "At no time have matters looked more gloomy than at present. North, West and South the enemies of personal liberty are actively engaged in enslaving the people by high license laws, with prohibition features or by outright prohibition. Iowa and Kansas seem to be entirely subdued, and even here at Washington we have reason to look with apprehension into the future." Just so. And the organ of the brewers being witness, prohibition is not a failure. Friends of reform, close ranks and march forward. The enemy is ready to run.

Editorial Correspondence.

Our trip to Nashville was made in twenty-six hours, and by way of the Illinois Central. In speed, safety and comfort that road is unexcelled in the South, and its management is worthy of the generous public confidence it enjoys. Close connections at Milan prevented our calling upon Miss Lochie Rankin, our hero China missionary, who is in that town visiting her venerable parents. She is resting quietly at her old home after a long and tiresome journey, preparatory to attending the approaching annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions, at Knoxville. At the depot in Nashville our special friend, Bro. J. D. Hamilton, was in waiting with horse and buggy to take us to his hospitable home. He lives near the Vanderbilt University, and on looking up in the morning our first greeting is from the stately buildings and beautiful campus of that grand institution.

The Bishops are all present except Bishop McTear, who left on Monday night to attend the funeral of Mrs. Commodore Vanderbilt. They met on Friday last, and have arranged their plan of episcopal visitation for the coming year, which is enclosed for publication. Bishop Wilson looks much improved in health, and is assigned full work. The other Bishops are in good trim for the excess of labor laid upon them by the death of several of their colleagues.

The Board of Missions met on Wednesday morning, at nine o'clock, with Dr. Garland in the chair, and Drs. Young and Kelley in their places as secretary and treasurer. All members of the Board, including the Bishops, were present. The report of the treasurers shows that the receipts of the past year have been $184,200. Considering the stringency of the times, this is a hopeful exhibit, but far below the duty and ability of the church. Reports from the various mission fields were never so cheering. This is especially true of the Central Mexican and Mexican Border. Brazil is beginning to return a hopeful harvest, and the detailed reports from China assure us of yet grander achievements in that vast field.

There were earnest appeals from each mission field for increased appropriations to allow enlargement of work; but the present condition of the treasury compelled a negative response. The Board adopted a conservative course, and for the next year only provided for the laborers actually and actively employed. Doors are open to us and men are ready to go; but the means to send and sustain them are not at command. What a mighty call to the church to bring her tithes and offerings unto the Lord! If only fifty cents per capita could be collected during the ensuing year, we might double our forces in the foreign field and give ample aid to our brethren in the vast and inviting West. The presence of Rev. C. F. Reid, of our China mission, added much interest to the meeting. He seems to be quite fully posted as to the needs and opportunities of mission work in the "Celestial Empire," and is himself enthused with the spirit of missions. His suggestions and information on many points assisted the Board to an intelligent conclusion in several appropriations. Rev. R. W. McDougal, from Durango, Mexico, was present, and by invitation made an interesting statement of his labors in that priest-ridden country. He is a young man of fine presence, creditable attainments, and is thoroughly devoted to missions. The Central Mexican Mission has in a few years grown from a small seed to a stately tree. It seems but yesterday that Bishop Keener made his first visit to the capital of the Montezumas in search of a place to erect our Methodist standard. Now forty-eight preachers are appointed to the regular work and sixty-five Sunday-schools are under admirable organization. On the Mexican border so rapid has been the growth that the mission has been erected into a Conference, and is in Bishop McTear's circuit for the coming year.

The ride from McKenzie to Nashville with Rev. T. F. Brewer, president of Harrell Institute, at Muscogee, I. T., gave ample opportunity to learn much of our work among the brethren in red. Last year was exceptionally prosperous in the Indian Mission Conference, a thousand having been added to its membership. Our brethren in that field are much annoyed, though not really hindered, by proselyting Baptists. We really think our zealous brethren ought to remain that business to the home church. In mission fields the work of evangelization ought to be so absorbing as to afford no time for ecclesiastical marauding.

Altogether this has been the most satisfactory meeting of the Board we have ever attended. A new mission in Japan has been projected, which will be in charge of the veteran,

J. W. Lambuth. He now speaks Japanese with measurable fluency, and will carry into the work years of valuable experience. This will also be a haven of recuperation—a sanitarium for our missionaries in the malarial Kiangsu province of China.

The Board also settled some important principles of practical administration in the several fields, and the relations of our work to the Woman's Board. The assessments remain about the same as last year in the aggregate, though some slight changes in certain Conferences were made. The amount apportioned to Louisiana was reduced from seven thousand to six thousand dollars. Mississippi and North Mississippi are unchanged.

The annual meeting of the Book Committee was held on Wednesday and Thursday, with a full attendance. All the members were smiling faces, and evidently felt satisfied at the admirable management of the Publishing House. Some facts gleaned from Business Manager Palmer will interest our readers.

During the year the House has issued 37 new publications which go into the regular catalogue as permanent contributions to the literature of the church. Besides these a large number of books have been published by contract for outside parties.

The sales of books has amounted to considerably over $100,000, the income from the Advocate over $40,000, and from the Sunday-school papers over $65,000, besides a considerable sum from miscellaneous sources—an aggregate of over $240,000. Additions to the machinery amount to $15,000, and improvements and changes in buildings made at an expense of $10,000. The stock of material and merchandise has been largely increased to accommodate the demands of a growing trade. In addition to this, $20,725 of the bonds issued to relieve the indebtedness of 1878 have been brought in and cancelled. This debt of 1878 was originally $350,000, and has been reduced to $128,000, making a reduction of $222,000 in the space of seven years. All this has been done without creating any new debt. The House does not owe a dollar outside of the remnant of the old debt of 1878. The outlook is hopeful. For the season, and under the influences now prevailing in the country to depress business, trade is very good, amounting in all departments to an aggregate of nearly $1,000 a day.

The Book Committee authorized the management to make all needed improvements and additions—among them an electrotypes foundry, a new elevator, and other machines that may be thought necessary from time to time. Among recent purchases is a machine for book-sewing—the work similar to hand-work, but done in a much better and more permanent way, and as fast as six hands could do the same work. Many other items of business and improvement received attention—all looking to the long run of work which, as the central Publishing House of the church, must be done here.

All Nashville is astir at the anticipated coming of Rev. Sam Jones. It is talked of in the street cars, in every counting-room, in the family circle and all market-places. We examined the tent erected for the meeting. It will seat about four thousand persons, and will hardly be able to accommodate the eager multitudes. As evidence of the intense desire to hear the Georgia evangelist, the sale of tickets to his lecture, on Saturday night, on "Character and Characters," in the interest of a home mission, three days before had reached eight hundred. The revival meetings in several Methodist Churches have well prepared the way for his coming, and a mighty Pentecost is expected. May God grant it!

On Thursday evening, at the Publishing House, a meeting of the trustees and friends of Paine Institute was held. Dr. John, of Texas, presided, and this editor acted as secretary. Commissioner Dunlap gave an account of his labors and made a satisfactory statement of the organization and work of the institution. The faculty is first-class, and about eighty pupils are in attendance; but the institute is embarrassed for lack of proper buildings. Some action was taken at the meeting which, it is hoped, will awaken more general interest in its success throughout the church.

On Saturday morning, at eight o'clock, we started homeward. At Milan the Paris District Sunday-school Conference was in session, and opportunity was given to shake hands with many brethren. Dr. Winfield, of Arkansas, had been in attendance, and delighted a vast congregation with a lecture on his European travels. Dr. Malou, from Memphis, was present, and participated in the discussions with characteristic clearness and ability. He has a genius for exact and lucid statement. It was a real self-denial to refuse an earnest invitation to spend the Sabbath; but home duties compelled us to take the first south-bound train.

Pleuro-Pneumonia and Prohibition.

The Commissioner of Agriculture, Hon. Norman J. Coleman, has issued a circular concerning the bovine plague raging among the cattle in some parts of the West. So great was the alarm among the cattlemen, and so necessary that effectual means be employed to arrest the spread of the disease, that the authority and power of the United States were invoked to send speedy relief. A circular has, therefore, been issued from Washington forbidding anyone from driving or shipping cattle that have been exposed to the contagion of the disease from one State to another or from one locality to another. The heaviest penalties are threatened against any public carrier by land or water who may violate the statutes referred to in the circular. We applaud the vigilance that takes such timely precaution. The consequences of shipping and slaughtering for market diseased cattle can scarcely be computed. To neglect its arrest would be criminal.

But the principle underlying this action is not always recognized. At least the application of it is often stoutly resisted. Nobody objects when an owner of diseased cattle is restrained from imposing them upon the market, thereby endangering thousands of lives. However the cupidty of the ranchman may resist, all society applauds. No one suspects that his property rights are too sacred to be molested. The safety of society demands a prohibition of right to sell, and not a voice is heard in his defense. But when the same principle is applied to the liquor traffic—in comparison with the evils of which a cattle plague is a beetle—some simple souls complain that property rights are abridged and personal liberty is defrauded. Alas! for the blindness of minds when interest or appetite is involved. The principle is exactly the same, and more than once has been clearly announced by the supreme judicial tribunal of this nation. And what a merciless exposure of the inconsistency of applauding Commissioner Coleman and denouncing "fanatical prohibitionists!"

Jephthah.

St. Paul mentions this man as one of the heroes of faith. He made no extended mention of him for want of time; but the Holy Spirit saw fit to indite a sketch of his life sufficient to fix several prominent traits. Let us also here pause to remark that many unjust comments and criticisms are extant as to this man "of whom his age was not worthy," and, while it ought to be sufficient to all who believe in Paul's inspiration simply to mention the fact stated in the first sentence, we still will discuss the main facts of his life, and if they fall to measure up to the stature of a man of faith, we have nothing more to say.

1. Jephthah was hasehorn—the son of a harlot. For this he was not responsible, and yet for it he suffered scorn and abuse and exile. It is a law of God that children suffer for the sins of their parents. The intent of that law is doubtless to move men to care how they sin against their own offspring. Herod was not the only murderer of innocents. We have no controversy here with that rule of society which attains the hasehorn; yet the children of the bride-chamber ought to remember that a want of mercy in them does not degrade this honest man whose misfortune has been to inherit shame instead of honor. To stigmatize him before he has developed anything but virtue is to become partaker of his infamy if he fails and, at the same time, proves us unworthy of sharing his glory if he rises. We should never become purists. All sin should be abhorred; all sinners should be pitied. Let no man write a bond without naming mercy in it, and let all men's speech be their bond.

2. After his expulsion his strength of character was shown in the men that gathered around him. They are "vain men"—i. e., poor and, perhaps, worthless in character; but the primary idea is poverty. The poor must have their great men as well as the rich. There are always men to be leaders of them. Too often they are denagogues. Jephthah was a true poor man's friend. Though the son of a noble on one side, on the other he felt keenly what it was to be poor in purse or name. Hence while he knew how to command, he knew how to sympathize. This is a rare combination of both character and condition of life. Leaders must voice rather than echo the wants of the people, who lack the words or the nerve or the position to make themselves heard. Still more in leading men is this sympathy with the masses needed that he may know in his own heart the strength of conviction and purpose of the masses. Let me know the leader, and you need not introduce me to his followers. Ab uno omnes discuntur. But strength in the leader is often communicated downward, whence it reflects again to himself. So that Jephthah, with his band of poor outcasts, became a mighty man of valor. What fools the self-styled conservators of social purity often show themselves to be in ostracizing those whose only crime is their unfortunate birth or slender purse! Brawn or brain can not be monopolized by any coterie or clique.

3. Jephthah was manly without being revengeful. He was not like the haughty Coriolanus, of Rome. He neither waged war when driven from home, nor did he refuse to help the very people who sent him to exile. He merely reminds them in a dignified way of their ill treatment, and goes to lead them in a war in which, to say the least, there was chance of defeat. He was doing well where he was. Still the leader was in him. Moreover, he had no other people. He had suffered wrongs from his cradle, and yet had forgiven them. He had forgiven his parents the wrong of his inheritance of shame; he could and did forgive his countrymen for their wrongs of pride and spleen. If he was too manly to whine when the purists expelled him, he was too magnanimous to harbor the passion of weaklings—revenge.

4. Jephthah has been represented as a hasty and rash man in binding himself with a foolish and barbarous vow, by which he brought death to his only child and everlasting shame and was on himself. All this is most unjust. In the first place, it is quite likely that Jephthah, like all the eastern people, kept his flock at night and in times of war inside his house. Upon news of victory these would be naturally turned at large. He expected, perhaps, to meet his flock going afield, and a favorite sheep in the lead. But to his surprise and sorrow his daughter appears. In the next place, the vow showed a liberality almost unequalled in history. He proposed to make a personal sacrifice of his own property for the public good. As leader of the troops, he might have pledged a thousand of the enemy's flock when captured. As now the prince of Gilead, he might have levied a tax. But no. He pledges God that he will give something sheer of his own possessions. Few such men can be found to-day. I know many Methodists who would not stir one foot for the country or church that has cherished and flattered and fattened them all their lives unless there was a clear understanding that the public paid all the expenses and gave them the perquisites. Again, if Jephthah had really found himself involved in the sacrifice of his daughter, the law provided for her redemption as well as forbade the literal execution of the vow. And, lastly, the Bible nowhere says that he did kill her, and everywhere it says anything of human sacrifices it is with the utmost abhorrence. Under all these circumstances it seems certain that Paul would not have put him in the catalogue of the faithful if he had killed his daughter.

5. The sacrifices, however, was great. His daughter had to take vows of virginity. The great grief to both of them in this was that they surrendered their chances of being the line through which Messiah was to come. Every Jew longed to be a mother through the inspiration of this hope. Mary was considered blessed above all women for the reason that she was the mother of Jesus. Every Jew looked to this as one of the reasons of his existence and one of the distinctive glories of his birthright. It was the hope of Israel, dearer than life and stronger than death. No sacrifices could be greater. This construction is strengthened by her request to let her go and bewail her virginity. So it is further corroborated by the statement that the maidens went to lament for her, which is rendered on the margin, to talk with her.

6. There is the crowning feature in this man's history developed in the words, "I can not go back." Here the fidelity as well as the faith of the man is seen. Vows to God are not contingently good or bad except as the conditions express. A vow to God can not include that which God forbids. Ratified in heaven; it must stand with man. The Divine conditions, being fulfilled, the human pledges are forever binding. Seemingly difficulties arise when the consequences are apparently ruinous. Things take a turn we did not calculate. That is not now for us to look at. We have come square against our destiny. Who is unequal to it, and yet claims the crown of the hero or saint? Jephthah miscounted the issue of destiny, but he did not miscount upon himself. "I can not go back. I have vowed. I have conquered the enemy. Now I meet and struggle with earth's fondest hopes and earth's tenderest ties. The crown of Gilead is just on my head fairly for the first time and the pang of a bitter death than that of the sword have shot through my heart. But I can not go back."

7. Somewhere an old legend runs that among the pines of Gilead the spirit of Jephthah's daughter ever afterward roved and sighed until from the trees the drops of amber balsam oozed that became the famous healing balm. There is a pretty fancy in the tale; but a truer and better balm comes to us in the lessons of the grand life of the father crowned with the sweet devotion of a saintly daughter. He who inherited nothing but shame from his mother is the one who, in the person of his only child,

"Change the rare and stainless maiden Whom the angels call Lenore."

A Presiding Elder in "the Swamp."

I have just returned from another visit to that portion of my district which dwells in the hills usually call "the swamp." Never did I find that sometimes dreary region presenting so fair an aspect. Certainly not for many years has the Mississippi valley exhibited so flattering a prospect to a planter's eye as it does at this time. It is, indeed, a land beautiful to look upon. Plowing has scarcely been interrupted since January; the soil is in a fine condition; the stands of corn and of cotton are perfect; cultivation is well up with the growth of the plants, and, notwithstanding several quite cool nights, the promises for crops could scarcely be better. The river, it is true, is "bank-full" and rising; yet, as the tributaries above are falling, no damage is expected. The atmosphere, too, I found on this trip exceptionally pure and bracing. But what pleased me more than anything else was the evident indications of moral improvement in the country of Sharkey and Isaquena, where, spent ten days. At Rolling Fork denominations of Christians have been worshipping in the lower story of a masonic lodge, called a union church, until they have found out that what belongs to everybody really belongs to nobody. That room has been used as a court-room, a public school-room, a show-room, and I know not what else, till it has lost all sanctity in the eyes of the people, and they wish it would blow down that they might build a church on the lot it occupies. Our people have a mind to build anyhow, and hope to begin toward the close of the year.

At Skipwith's quite a town has grown up, and three fraternal lodges have completed a neat and commodious building on the same site as the one just mentioned, having a lodge above and a worshiping room below. I warned them against decorating their worshiping-room by allowing anything else than the worship of God to be conducted in it. God is unlimited as to time and place; man is limited to both and must, therefore, have both a time and a place when and where he may meet consciously with God. I urged the necessity of maintaining a vigorous church in this room below; else the lodges above would fall to the ground, intending my words to be taken in their literal sense. We have never had a church organization at Skipwith's, though our preachers have preached there ever since the origin of the town. After preaching a very attentive and appreciative congregations for five successive days I left the work in the hands of the pastor, with good prospects that some souls would give themselves to the Lord at an early day. Several seemed to be almost persuaded to acknowledge the debt which every man owes to his Maker and to sign the bond of allegiance.

At Vicksburg our people must build a new church or repair the old one recently damaged by fire. They are somewhat at a loss to decide which to undertake. To do the latter would require less money, but to do the former is more desirable. If the more able among them would contribute according to their ability and the less able do likewise, they could "rise up and build." Let there be no half-hearted liberality. Let our people be united and build a house which will honor God, themselves and the city in which they live. The most lasting and appreciative monuments men can erect to their memories are those which embody permanent evidences of charity.

I find on my table a very remarkable production, styled, "Peter, Not An Apostle, But A Chatter," from the pen of that ever diligent and thoughtful writer, Rev. R. Abney. It is an unique, timely and highly Interesting little book. Whoever begins to read it will be apt to read it through. African slavery in America is now a thing of the past. If any of the present generation have been so far misguided as to suppose that it was primarily or peculiarly Southern, they will think so no more after reading this pamphlet. This little book does more than any work of its size ever published to place the honor or shame of introducing African slavery in the United States where it properly belongs.

Revival at Kosciusko.

Rev. G. W. Bachman writes us of the wonderful work in progress at Kosciusko, Miss., under the pastorate of Rev. J. A. Bowen. He says: "We are having a glorious meeting here. The Lord is blessing the church and people abundantly. The whole town is astir and moving. A mass of 15 was received into the Methodist Church yesterday, and 50 came forward for prayers, including the most influential men of the town. Bro. Bowen is a man of extraordinary faith and great expectations; but he says that this is more than he was looking for now. "Revs. J. W. Price, of Water Valley, and T. W. Lewis, of Lexington, did most of the preaching last week. Rev. H. C. Parrott, of McCool, also rendered efficient service for several days. His noble wife is yet here doing excellent work for the Master in special meetings for the women and girls and the young men and boys, as well as in the public congregation and home circles. The people all say, God bless her! We expect Bro. Price to be with us again this week."

Revival at Edwards.

Mr. Editor: We have had a time of refreshing from the Lord in Edwards. Dr. J. W. Hoyt, evangelist of the Presbyterian Church, commenced preaching in the Presbyterian Church, of this place, on Sunday, April 26, and closed the meeting last night, having held two services daily for ten days. There have been sixty professions of faith. Thirty have joined the Presbyterian Church, twenty the Methodist Church, and several the Baptist Church.

The entire community has been impressed, and no doubt great and lasting good has been done. Everybody is delighted with Dr. Hoyt, who has labored so faithfully and successfully. We are very much encouraged in our work. It was a sight worthy to behold to see mothers, fathers, sons and daughters coming into the church. We have received some valuable young men into the church.

Revival at Winona.

Mr. Editor: The past three weeks will be ever memorable in the history of Winona. The revival of which you spoke in your last issue is still in progress, and we are gratefully singing the song of the reapers as we gather in the sheaves.

After having studied this town with an ever increasing interest for more than three years, and having watched the influences and tendencies that have been potent as controlling forces in society, I see a significance in this wonderful revival movement, that a mere statement of the visible results can not be adequately interpreted.

There has been a steady and hopeful improvement in our church here for several years; and the fruit of this gracious revival, as seen in the quickened life of the church and the large increase in our membership, will put Winona in the list of our most attractive stations.

We have received 45 additions to our membership—40 on profession of faith and five by letter. Others will join. A number have joined the Baptist Church by letter, and nine on profession of faith. Seven have joined the Presbyterian Church. Nearly all who have joined the church are grown people. We hope however, with such gracious home influences as are now being felt throughout our town, that the children will soon come in large numbers.

Our hearts are full of gratitude for the faithful work done by the brethren whom you mentioned in your last issue. Bro. Bowen had been with us before, and his very presence inspired hope. His unquenchable faith made us ashamed to even suggest a difficulty, and we had the victory from the start. I believe if we would turn him loose and let him go to the small towns as well as to the larger ones, and out among our circuits, we could take this North Mississippi territory for Christ. We all need some one to help us in these special revival meetings, and the pastor who secures the help of our dear Bro. Bowen is fortunate indeed.

Death of Rev. G. Hawkins.

I was unexpectedly called home from Pearl River last Monday morning by a telegram stating that Bro. Hawkins was very sick and wished to see me. The next evening I reached his home at Rose Hill, Jasper county, Miss. Bro. L. Carley met me at the gate and told me I was just in time to see him alive and to witness the triumph of his faith. As we walked into his room, I saw that the honored and tried soldier of the cross was grandly winning the last victory, and was about to scale the heights of glory in triumph. I knelt by his bedside and receiving his extended hand in mine, asked him if there was anything I could do for him. He said no, he only wanted some of his brethren with him during his last moments on earth. That he had long since made preparation for this hour, and was now only waiting the command of Christ to enter into rest. He spoke of heaven as a place very near where he was lying; and as he talked of the future in those strong words of assurance that sparkle like streams of fire, and that have made the Methodist pulpit such a power in the kingdom of Christ, we felt that only a thin veil separated the toll of earth from the rest of heaven. His faith in Christ was strong and beautiful as the light, and his resignation complete and sublime. After giving instructions to each member of his family and about his business affairs, he called one of his younger sons by name, and said he had given him to Christ for the itinerant ministry, and prayed earnestly that the Lord would accept this last offering. Then, as if assured his prayer was heard, he told his eldest son to send him to Greensboro, Ala., and educate him for the work. As I looked upon this true man of God filling his last earthly moments with thoughts and arrangements for carrying forward the work of the Master, I imagined I caught glimpses of the zeal of heaven for the salvation of earth. May the consecrated mantle of the sainted father fall on his young and noble child! Having completed his earthly affairs, on Wednesday morning, at 5:30 o'clock, our brother passed away as gently and as gloriously as falls the early sunbeams upon the face of earth.

Thursday we took his remains to the Methodist Church in Enterprise, where Bro. L. Carley, assisted by Bros. Turner and Hall, of the Baptist Church, and this writer, conducted the funeral service and preached an impressive sermon from these words: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Then we laid him away to rest 'till the trump of God shall awake his sleeping dust to appear in glory.

J. M. WEEMS.

Death of Rev. R. F. Flowers.

The following postal from Rev. W. B. Lewis, dated Crystal Springs, May 8, will be read with sorrow by many friends. Bro. Flowers was for some years a member of the Mississippi Conference, but his health was never sufficiently robust to endure the strain of itinerant life. He was a devout, consecrated young man, and his supreme desire was to be a useful, faithful itinerant minister of the gospel. Bro. Lewis writes:

Rev. R. F. Flowers died here yesterday morning after a short illness. He was with our Sabbath-school, of which he was superintendent, last Sunday, and at the morning and evening service; and this morning, Friday, we buried him in hope of the resurrection. A more extended notice soon.

Monteagle School of Bible Study.

This is one of the departments of the now well known Monteagle Summer Schools, located on Cumberland Mountain, Tenn. The Old Testament Study is in charge of R. V. Foster, D. D., of the Theological School at Lebanon, Tenn. The New Testament department is in charge of Dr. Harris, of Richmond College, Va. Classes, both primary and advanced, will be organized in Hebrew and New Testament Greek. There will also be daily lessons in Biblical Exegesis and Biblical Introduction. Six weeks on the mountain spent in unsectarian and brotherly study of God's word, will be wholesome to both body and soul. It will also be a good opportunity to make a beginning or further progress in the study of Hebrew and New Testament Greek. Take such Hebrew and Greek helps with you as you may have or can get.

The following from the Winona Times shows what an observant secular editor thinks of the fruits of prohibition. We copy it for the encouragement of all engaged in the grand work:

For the sake of such "fanatics" in the temperance cause as Rev. C. B. Galloway, of the Methodist, and Rev. John Hunter, of the Presbyterian Church, and Galloway, of the Baptist Church, we give utterance to an opinion expressed here by several good people with whom we have conversed, that the present religious interest exhibited is the result, to a marked extent, of the prohibition movement which preceded it, and has prepared the way for the sober reflection which has led to penitence and praise and pardon. We believe it sincerely. We believe that the efforts of Galloway and Hunter and Lagrone in driving the saloons from this country, was not only a great moral victory, but the moving-point and foundation of the religious victory which is now being enjoyed. We give this as an encouragement and an incentive to all preachers of all denominations to come out and help to clean the land of this awful sin, and then they can move on to a greater triumph still.

The Wesleyans have 6,000 communicants and 20,000 adherents in Ceylon.

There has been a gracious revival at Greensboro, Ala., and a number of the students of Southern University have been converted.

Rev. S. M. Homer, the efficient presiding elder of the Gadsden district, North Alabama Conference, was among our callers on Tuesday.

Rev. C. L. Torreyson, of the Baltimore Conference, and pastor at Fairfield, Rockbridge county, Va., died last week in great peace. He was a greatly loved pastor.

Rev. H. D. Moore, of Prattville, Ala., and one of the leading members of the old Alabama Conference, is in the city, and has been a welcomed caller at the ADVOCATE office.

Rev. Sam Jones' meeting at Chattanooga was one of the most remarkable of his history. Scores of letters were sent to Nashville urging the friends there to allow him to remain a few days longer with them.

Rev. J. M. Binkley, presiding elder of the Sherman district, North Texas Conference, has been taking in the Exposition. He is one of the veterans of Methodism in the Lone Star State, though yet in the prime of a vigorous manhood. We like his views on some phases of church enterprise.

Rev. J. M. Weems was summoned home by telegram from Pearl River to see Rev. G. Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference. His friends fear that the end is very near to the noble veteran. Since the above was written the fatal stroke has fallen and another one of our comrades has gone up to his reward.

James Anthony Froude, the distinguished English historian, is in the United States on a short visit. He is returning to England from an extended tour among the British colonies in Asia and Africa. In an interview in New York, he expressed himself as strongly opposed to the English government going to war with Russia.

Gen. Grant is at work on his book, and hopes to complete it in a few months. Though recovered from the acute symptoms of a few weeks ago, there is little probability of any permanent improvement. His attending physicians report fully his present condition, but decline to prophesy for the future. The general feels that his life has been prolonged in answer to prayer.

Rev. Beverly Carradine, pastor of St. Charles Avenue Church, is over at the Seashore Camp Ground with his family, but his address for the summer will be 112 Camp street, New Orleans. He sends us the following postal. We hope our brilliant young friend will soon regain his wonted elasticity: "I regret to say I do not feel better as yet. I am much prostrated, and my suffering from rheumatism is simply indescribable. The weather, woods and these are all lovely, but I am not. The mocking-birds awaken me every morning with their singing by my window, but I don't awaken much singing. To the birds it sounds like groaning—it is groaning."

Bro. Frank Parker, son of Bishop Linus Parker, was licensed to preach at the Felicity Street Quarterly Conference on Monday night. At the same time the Louisiana Avenue Church recommend Bro. Gerald Parker, another son of the sainted Bishop, to the Quarterly Conference for license to preach, which will be granted next week. Thus God is perpetuating the work of his servant. He is called away, but two sons rise up to catch his falling mantle.

The Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning was attended by all the city preachers except Rev. Beverly Carradine, who is across the lake, and several visitors. Bro. Whitehurst, of the North Alabama Conference, was present, and by request made report of our Methodism in that growing field. That section is developing rapidly and we are glad to know our brethren are alive to their opportunities. Dr. H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth College, was also in attendance and made a brief statement of the prosperity of the institution in his charge. Rev. J. M. Davies, of the Louisiana Conference, spoke of the outlook up in the Homer district. He says Presiding Elder Sawyer is making full proof of his sub-episcopacy, and is stirring the dry bones all along the line. Dr. Ahrens offered a resolution pledging each pastor to make an active canvass of his congregation to secure an increased circulation of this ADVOCATE. A very proper movement. City Christians sorely need religious literature. The Preachers' Meeting by formal resolution offered by Rev. B. F. White, cordially endorsed the proposed memorial volume of Bishop Linus Parker by the editor of the ADVOCATE, which he has undertaken at the solicitation of Mrs. Parker, Bishop McVine and other friends. It is expected to be ready for the press in the late fall or early winter.

DR. MEIGS' CASE'S SPINAL APPARATUS.

[See leading article in Medical Record, New York, Dec. 27, 1884.]
This apparatus applies to the treatment of Spinal Disease the principle of extension, already well established as a most efficient method for the cure of diseases of the joints. With this it combines these additional requirements in spinal cases: Relief from the weight of the head and shoulders (without causing the burden on some other part of the body); the straightening of the curves (by means of the traction exerted by the weight of the body itself); and opportunity for exercise without restraint under these favorable conditions.

The results of daily exercise in this apparatus quickly demonstrate its utility. The patient improves rapidly in strength and height, the muscles concerned in maintaining an erect posture are developed and invigorated, and a few weeks' well frequently show a greater gain than can possibly be reached by months of treatment with the restrictive appliances in general use. For price, directions for measurement and use, and other information in respect to this apparatus, apply to SEND $1 BILLS.—We wish our patrons to bear in mind that in payment for subscriptions we do not desire postage stamps, and that they should be sent only or fractional parts of a dollar. Enclose the bills, and, where letters containing money are sealed in presence of the postmaster, we will assume all the risk.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ark., having seen and read in the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 152 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having viewed the side for one of those lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $75, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is solid under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all who visit the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy.
